CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

FIRST SESSION, FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

seventy-nine men employed. Between November 1 and 15 there were twenty-four hundred and eighty-eight men employed, more than a thousand increase; and this was for political purposes. I do not say that those men were employed there and performed no labor; I believe they did perform labor; work was done; but the increase was made for the purpose, if possible, of helping the democratic party. So I have no doubt that has been done since; in some yards the force has been increased prior to elections; that is, certain work has been done in order to give strength possibly to some local candidate of the republican party. Look at Philadelphia, where this was more especially noticeable. In May, 1858, there were ten hundred and sixty-four men employed there, and between the 16th and the 31st of October, when the Pennsylvania State election was pending, there were seventeen hundred and twenty-two men employed; an increase of nearly seven hundred. In fact this report shows that in May, 1858, there were employed in all the yards sixty-six hundred and sixty-nine men, and in November of that identical year there were employed 10,038 men; an increase of nearly four thousand men from May to November. I refer to this simply as an offset to the remarks of the Senator from Delaware. I will read a few words from the report of the committee. Speaking of the Brooklyn yard they say:

> This system, added to the abuses previously existing, has reduced the navy-yard to a mere political machine, where idleness, theft, insubordination, fraud, and gross neglect of duty prevailed to an alarming degree. Members of Congress, officers of the yard, both naval and civil, master workmen, contractors, and laborers, have all testified to many abuses.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Taking it to be true that Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Buchanan did as the Senator has suggested, does he not regard it as a shameful and criminal prostitution of power and one that ought be condemned in the strongest terms by the American people?

Mr. CRAGIN. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether taking the allegation to be true that Mr. Van Buren as President and Mr. Buchanan as President did as it is suggested they did do, does he not regard such conduct as a criminal and outrageous prostitution of power and acts which the American people ought to condemn in the strongest possible manner?

Mr. CRAGIN. There were three vessels of the Navy to be repaired. They needed repair. Mr. Van Buren and the Secretary of the Navy concluded to order those vessels to the Brooklyn navy-yard to be repaired. I have no reason to believe that the labor that was performed on those vessels was not well and honestly performed. They were sent to Brooklyn because it was better to have men employed there at that particular time to influence the election than it was to have them employed down at Norfolk. I do not see anything very criminal in that, although it may have been very bad policy.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRAGIN. I would go further than that in my opinion.

Mr. THURMAN. If that is his explanation of it, how can he justify the severe censures of the committee from whose report he has read?

Mr. CRAGIN. In the case in 1858, Mr. Buchanan, or his Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Toucey, did just as every Secretary of the Navy has done since the organization of this Government. Work is to be done; it is done irregularly. I have always believed that it would be better to employ a given number of men through the year in all the navy-yards, the number necessary to do the work; but that has not been the practice. The work is irregular. A vessel comes home from a foreign cruise out of repair, needing repair immediately; she goes to some particular navy-yard; a force of men is employed to repair her; it may be in November, it may be in any other month of the year, so that the force in the yards cannot be maintained at a regular number and perform the work necessary to repair the vessels.

Mr. MERRIMON. The point I make is this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask permission to propound a question to the Senator. The question I propound to the Senator is, if the President or any person else bearing authority shall send workmen into a navy-yard or elsewhere for the purpose of inducing them to vote one way or another, is it not in itself criminal and to be condemned in the most unqualified manner by the American people?

Mr. CRAGIN. I do not suppose they were sent there for the purpose of voting in any particular way. Men were out of employment. They were liable to go away, to move off, to go somewhere else possibly.

Mr. MERRIMON. Then why does the honorable Senator bring this matter to the attention of the Senate?

Mr. CRAGIN. It has been brought to the attention of the Senate before, and I merely wish to bring forward an offset. The Senator from Delaware has read from a report recently made by a committee of the House showing that some abuses, as he claims, have been practiced at the navy-yards at Boston and other points, because men were employed just before elections. I have only referred to these facts to show that men were employed just before the elections in 1858; that the force was increased from six thousand to ten thousand in the navy-yards in this country during that year; not that I assume that every one of these men voted the democratic ticket. I suppose they were democrats before; but they needed employment and they might go away somewhere and their votes might not be available in Philadelphia.

Mr. MERRIMON. Take it to be true that democrats did it and that the republicans have done it; I submit whether it is not the duty of the Senate and of all good men to frown it down.

Mr. CRAGIN. Two wrongs do not make a right. If one is wrong the other was wrong.

Mr. MERRIMON. If it is wrong here or anywhere else, is it proper to apologize for it by argument or otherwise?

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I was not fortunate enough to hear the remarks of the Senator from Delaware which have drawn forth the reply of the Senator from New Hampshire; but I gather from the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire that the abuses referred to by the Senator from Delaware had their origin far back of republican rule in this country. That is the purport of the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire; in other words, his remarks imply that whatever political party has been in power in this country the public patronage and the public purse have been prostituted for party and election purposes. If that be the case, it is only the stronger reason for our putting a stop to such an abuse; it is only the stronger reason for our agreeing to the proposition of the House.

In the remarks that I submitted before I cast no imputation upon the republican party. I did not say that this abuse was sui generis with republicans. I did not know how the matter was. All I have to say is that, if unfortunately for my party this abuse existed when it was in power, my republican friend, the Senator from New Hampshire, who, I know, wants a pure administration of the Government, and every one else ought to join with us in the most effective mode that has been suggested to stop this thing now and forever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Ohio is perfectly correct in desiring to have this abuse and every other corrected, if this be an abuse and if it exists; but he ought to remember in candor and justice that it is a little odd that in the long career of the democratic party in managing this Government down to 1861, when it had possession of all the Departments of the Government, this abuse had its origin and nobody like my friend, if he had been here, none of his predecessors or anybody else seemed to be in the least desirous of correcting it.

Mr. THURMAN. I will say to the Senator that I do not know that that is the truth of history.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; my friend's knowledge, when knowledge is disagreeable, is very small; when knowledge can be applied to his side, it is very great. It is very charming to have one of those convenient minds that drink in the knowledge that will make for your side and cannot possibly take up any that makes against it. But if my friend will read, with the assiduity that he reads everything else, the history of the democratic administrations from the beginning of General Jackson, the great war-horse of the democracy I believe he was called, or something of that kind, down to 1861, when democratic administrations (with the accidental exception of from 1865 to 1869) disappeared, as I hope, forever from the face of this republican earth, he will find that precisely the things that this amazingly economical and pure bill that was brought to us from the House of Representatives attempts or professes to correct have been the rule and not the exception. And it so happened by some curious coincidence, or misfortune, or something, that none of the wise and great men in either House who have preceded us, and who as democrats ruled affairs, seems to have had his attention brought to it, or, like my good friend from Ohio, to know anything about it. But now inasmuch as there are still navy-yards—more than there used to be, probably, because we have had rather a troublesome difficulty, that my friend may not have forgotten entirely, that required a good many navy-yards and the employment of a good many people—there has come in, and with them this House bill says has come in, the legacy, or rather the hereditary descent, of an abuse by increasing the employments in these navy-yards about election-time.

If that is true, it ought to be corrected undoubtedly. No man will go further than I will (and I think I can speak for every republican in that) in correcting that and every other abuse, although it has descended to us as hereditary diseases descend among men, from its birthplace in the democratic party. I do not think, therefore, that this debate ought to be shunted off, as it seems to have been designed, not by any Senator, but by the course of events, into an assault upon the republican party. That is not what we ought to be about on a bill of this kind. We ought to be about, as I suppose we are endeavoring to do, the correction of every abuse and the diminution of every unnecessary expenditure, and seeking in the most rigidly economical manner to carry on the Government, but we ought not to destroy it under the pretense of economy. We ought not, for fear that some republican or democratic member of Congress living in a district where there is a navy-yard can manage to increase its force about election-time, to put the Navy in a condition that no ship can be repaired under all possible circumstances. There ought to be a means—I do not know but the bill provides it; if it does not, it ought to—there ought to be a means in a case of public exigency of preventing all work from being stopped in navy-yards about the time of an election. In 1864, when it was said that the war was wrong in itself and a failure in practice, and that we ought not to take any means, therefore, to carry it on, it would have been very inconvenient if the law had provided that all the work in the navy-yards of the United States should stop for two months, in October and November. That would have been rather an advantage to the public enemy, I take it. And yet it seems that this bill provides by an up-and-down provision, if I correctly understand it—if I am wrong somebody will correct me—that under all circumstances, for two months in every year, in peace or war, in rebellion or distress, whatever may be the state of the case, everything in respect of strengthening the executive arm of the Government in the Navy Department shall stop; for fifty men in a navy-yard that amounts to anything, if it is a navy-yard at all, can do nothing except protect the public property.

That is not, I assume, what the House of Representatives mean, because I am bound to treat them with respect. What they desire to do, I am bound to assume, is to correct what is asserted to be an abuse; and if what is said to have taken place has taken place, with the purposes named, it is an abuse unquestionably, and the sharp hand of the law should be laid to it, but in such a wise way as not in some time of extreme public peril and emergency to by law absolutely paralyze the arm of the Government in defending the liberty or the honor of the country. That is my proposition.

So, Mr. President, all I have risen to say is that I deprecate, to use a very mild phrase, any drift of this debate which is to assail one party or another party because it is said that, as in all parties in certain localities at certain times, contrivances are resorted to which are not right to increase votes. So far as we can see that they are not right, they must not be resorted to, and I am quite ready to assist in preventing them.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to strike out the word "fifty" in the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has two more minutes of his time.

Mr. THURMAN. Does not the amendment I have moved entitle me to five minutes?

The Senate will bear me witness that I made no remark that could by any possibility be tortured into a partisan remark in what I have said on this bill; and if this discussion is drifting off into a party discussion, it is not my fault. I say, as I have just said, that if this abuse has existed for many years, long before the republicans came into power, (which I do not admit, for I do not know what the facts are,) it is only so much the more reason for putting a stop to it now.

But the Senator from Vermont says that it is a little singular that no democrat found it convenient to condemn this abuse while it existed under democratic administrations. I might reply to him that it is a little singular that no republican or whig Senator or whig Representatives in Congress found it convenient to propose some remedy for it then. But what kind of an argument is that against reformation? What kind of an argument is that which makes abuse eternal by arguing that it has not been opposed and condemned in the past? My friend from Vermont is a civil-service reformer. What would he say if I should get up and assert "There was a necessity for civil-service reform under Jackson, under Adams before him; under every President there was a necessity for civil-service reform, and nobody proposed what you propose; nobody then thought it necessary to propose your mode of civil-service reform?" Would it be any answer to his proposition for civil-service reform? Would he not say at once, "It is so much the stronger reason why we should now address ourselves to the subject of civil-service reform that it has been neglected in the past?" So I say now, it matters not when this abuse originated; that it is an abuse, that it is an improper exercise of the power of the Government, that it is an improper use of the public money, every one admits. It is time, then, to put a stop to it; and if now when a democratic House of Representatives offers to do it you refuse to do it, I want to know where the responsibility will rest.

Mr. SARGENT. Will my friend allow me one moment?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask him if it is putting an end to it to make the provision in the bill apply only to the year 1876? That is all the House propose to do. They simply propose that the republicans shall not use this method of electioneering now, but if they succeed they shall enjoy the privilege themselves. That is the theory of the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very glad to answer that question. There are certain provisions in the British statutes that never last longer than from year to year and yet are repeated from year to year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are they?

Mr. THURMAN. A number of them. I have no time in five minutes to tell them all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can tell one easier than a number.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, there are a number.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then name one.

Mr. THURMAN. The mutiny clause is one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is so.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Vermont has said that this ought not to be in all the time; we may get to be in war; we may then need more than fifty men in a navy-yard. The House of Representatives has therefore wisely provided that this limitation shall apply but this year, and in the next appropriation bill next year they may apply it to another year, and so on from time to time according to the exigencies of the country. They ought not to make it a perpetual provision. They do wisely to provide that it shall apply to this year, and then they will do wisely, if the circumstances are the same, to make it apply to the next.

Mr. CRAGIN. There is one view of this question which the Senator from Ohio has not looked at. This bill provides that during the months of October and November there shall not be more than fifty men employed in any navy-yard. Suppose there are two thousand men employed during the month of September in the Brooklyn yard and in the Philadelphia yard. When you come to the 1st day of November you must turn out nineteen hundred and fifty of those men from Brooklyn and from Philadelphia. Do you suppose those men are likely to vote for the democratic party if they are turned out? That is what the House want to do.

Mr. THURMAN. There can be no use for two thousand men in either one of those yards.

Mr. CRAGIN. Suppose there are one thousand, or five hundred in each yard?

Mr. THURMAN. There can be no use for five hundred men the whole year in those yards, and the effect of saying that in October and November the service shall be limited to fifty men is simply to say that those who administer those yards shall use their force in the proper manner. That is all there is. There is no stinting of the service at all.

Mr. CRAGIN. Their average is more than five hundred men in the Brooklyn and Philadelphia yards, the year round, every month.

Mr. THURMAN. There ought not to be that many.

Mr. SARGENT. That question is not involved in this amendment. This is simply the question whether we shall have sufficient coal for steamers' use, and anchors, and things of that kind, and I hope we shall take the vote on it.

Mr. THURMAN. I withdraw the amendment which I offered to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When we come to page 13 I shall have something to say on the subject to which my friend from Ohio has referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in lines 183 and 189, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COOPER. (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.] If present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. WITHERS, (when Mr. JOHNSTON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr JOHNSTON] was obliged to retire in consequence of sickness, and he paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] Mr. JOHNSTON would vote "nay," and Mr. WINDOM would vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Booth, Christiancy, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Davis, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Dennis, Dorsey, Gordon, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Sharon, Spencer, and Windom—27.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the Bureau of Yards and Docks to increase the item "for general maintenance of yards and docks, namely: For freight and transportation of materials and stores; printing, stationery, and advertising, including the commandants' office; books, models, maps, and drawing; purchase and repair of fire-engines; machinery, and patent-rights to use the same; repairs on steam-engines, and attendance on the same; purchase and maintenance of oxen and horses, and driving teams, carts, and timber-wheels for use in the navy-yards, and tools and repairs of the same; postage and telegrams; furniture for Government houses and offices in the navy-yards; coal and other fuel; candles, oil, and gas; cleaning and clearing up yards and care of public buildings; attendance on fires; lights; fire-engines and apparatus; incidental labor at navy-yards; water tax, and for toll and ferriages; pay of the watchmen in the navy-yards; and for awnings and packing-boxes," from $440,000 to $760,000.

Mr. THURMAN. This is an increase of $320,000, in an appropriation that is not very large itself. It nearly doubles the appropriation. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have it explained.

Mr. SARGENT. The amount recommended by the Senate committee is the same as the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year, and is something like $100,000 less than the estimates.

There must be some symmetry in the bill. The amendment which has just been adopted proposes that we shall have enough coal and cordage and articles of that kind. Now, the Bureau of Yards and Docks has its own work to do, corresponding to the amount which is performed by the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting. The strength of a chain, of course, is the strength of its weakest part. If you give the amount that has just been given to the Bureau of Recruiting and Equipment, you want to give a corresponding amount, according to the scale of the bill, to the Bureau of Yards and Docks. If you propose to defeat either one of the amendments, perhaps it would be better to defeat the first, and so go clear through, or otherwise reconsider the action on the first amendment.

Now, to show that the amount asked for is not extravagant, is not disproportionate to the size of the Navy, I should like to call attention to the fact that the Bureau of Yards and Docks in 1858 had the amount of $3,157,500; and to show that that was not exceptional, in 1857 it had $2,352,000. Starting in 1848, ten years before, it had over a million dollars; the next year, $1,797,000; in 1850, $2,320,000; and so it ran on year after year, this very Bureau expending the last year named twice as much as is now proposed to be given. It cannot be held, certainly, that this is very extravagant.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from California inform me whether in 1858 by a special provision in a bill eight or ten or twelve vessels were not built for the Navy?

Mr. SARGENT. That is very true, but it is not included in this account. The amounts I have given, running from 1848 to 1858, were exclusive of special provisions for single vessels. They were the ordinary appropriations made for the benefit of the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In order to meet the requirements of that special demand for the building of those vessels, the expenditures for the other object became necessary. In 1858, or about that time, as I remember—I have not the facts before me—eight, or ten, or twelve excellent vessels were built for the Navy. There was an unusual expenditure of money at that time, so that in 1860 our Navy was in a most excellent condition in the number of new vessels.

Mr. SARGENT. I know there was a special appropriation, running over two years, for building the new vessels; in 1860 those new vessels were built; but why that should make the other ordinary expenses of the Bureau larger I do not see. If that applies to 1858, what applies to 1857, when the expenditures were $2,300,000, or to 1856, when they were $2,567,000, or to 1855, when over $2,000,000 was expended, and so running back, starting in 1848 with $1,053,000 and coming to $3,157,500 in 1858?

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him one moment? He must observe that the Navy appropriations have been the most singular things in the world. You would have items covering two, three, and four pages, and then a gross sum appropriated for all those items. I always thought that an evasion of the constitutional provision, and certainly very bad policy if it were not an evasion of that provision. It is pretty difficult to compare any appropriation made under the head of "Bureau of Yards and Docks" in the past with the appropriation in this bill, where for the first time almost, if not the very first time, an attempt has been made to confine appropriations to their proper objects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to lines 217 and 218, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KERNAN, (when Mr. CHRISTIANCY'S name was called.) The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] has gone out, and I agreed to pair with him. He, if here, would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. COOPER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.] He would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. INGALLS, (when the name of Mr. DORSEY was called.) On the preceding vote I omitted to mention that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY] sent me word that he was detained by bodily ailment that prevented his attendance in the Chamber. I state it now to explain his absence.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WHYTE. I am under the impression that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] is paired with my colleague, [Mr. DENNIS.] My colleague informed me before he left that he had paired with the Senator from Iowa on all questions of this character.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will state to the Senator from Maryland that his colleague did call upon me, and I asked him whether the pair would be regarded as applying to appropriation bills. My recollection is that the pair was not to apply to appropriation bills. The Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. COOPER,] however, can state as to that, as he was present at the time the pair was made. I had an impression that it did not apply to appropriation bills, but if my friend thinks it does, I shall withdraw my vote.

Mr. COOPER. I understood that it did not apply to appropriation bills.

Mr. WHYTE. Very well. My colleague did not mention this fact when he spoke to me in regard to the matter.

Mr. WRIGHT. That was the understanding, for I said jocularly if there was any question between us at any time my good friend from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] would determine it. Therefore I voted understanding that the pair did not apply to this subject.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Caperton, Cockrell, Davis, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Ingalls, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Cooper, Dennis, Dorsey, Gordon, Harvey, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Sharon, Spencer, and Windom—29.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the previous amendments increasing the appropriations in this bill, if the Senate will not go with me. Of course, if my republican friends think that the action of the Committee on Appropriations was indiscreet and unwise in increasing the appropriations, it is no use for me to attempt to struggle for the amendments of the committee. I can only act with the support of my fellow-republicans on the floor. If they think the committee I represent and myself are unwise in asking an increase of these appropriations and would rather take the bill as it comes from the House, I do not want to make a vain struggle. Then we shall at least have one appropriation bill, although the service will go on crutches through the coming fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California move to reconsider the vote on the several amendments?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That he cannot do. He must move to reconsider a specific amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator from Vermont will allow me, I hope the Senator from California will not make that motion. Some Senators were absent when the last vote was taken who will be in soon.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well; I will try the matter once more in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion was made and I have the floor upon it. While it is up I wish to say a word. I have voted against the committee on two amendments. If I fall within the description—and I hope I do—of my friend from California, of being a republican, I may say that the first one in respect of which I voted against the committee was the general provision, entirely discretionary, not carrying out any requirement of law, but purely a matter of congressional discretion from year to year, found on pages 8 and 9, for equipment of vessels, for coal for steamers, transportation, storage, labor, hemp, wire, hides, cordage, canvas, leather, anchors, galleys, detaching apparatus, cables, furniture, hose—and I suppose that means trowsers for the sailors, but I cannot say about that—bake-ovens, cooking-stoves, life-rafts, heating apparatus, labor in equipping vessels, manufacture of articles in the several navy-yards, &c. The committee proposed to increase the appropriation from $970,000 to $1,250,000. After the statements which have been made respecting the current income of the Government and the current expenses on the basis of the appropriation bills, likely to come short or very near it, it appeared to me that it would be wiser on these mere matters of discretion, where there is no other obligation than the mere wisdom of Congress, to take the lowest sum possible, and if we should find in December either that the revenues had increased or that the exigency of the service made it apparent then that some further sum would be absolutely indispensable we could provide for it. That was my motive.

And so in respect to the next amendment, which I will not take up the time of the Senate in recapitulating; it is of the same general character. I do not think that my friend from California ought to do what seems to me to be a rebuke to his political friends in suggesting that we are not as much disposed as he can be to stand by the law and to stand by the necessities of the Government in supporting him in carrying through this bill. We must be left, on mere matters of discretion, where if we underestimate or underappropriate now the mistake can be rectified in December, not to get into a dispute with our excellent co-ordinate or omnipotent branch, whatever it may turn out to be, on a question of this kind.

That is my reason for voting against these two amendments. I hope my friend from California will understand that it is not from any disposition to cripple this bill, but to see if it were not possible, tentatively at least, on these mere matters of discretionary detail, to meet the House on their own proposition for the time being.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from California will withdraw his motion to reconsider. At the same time I desire to say that, while I voted with the Committee on Appropriations on these amendments, I did it with some doubt on two or three of them, simply because, whether we wish to do it or no, we are bound to reduce the expenses of the Government below the appropriations estimated and asked for by the Departments about $26,000,000. There is no help for it. There is no use talking about it. The estimates submitted to us by the Departments called for an expenditure of $314,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury, however, reduced them, as recommended by him in his annual report, down to $303,000,000. The estimated receipts of the Government at the beginning of the year were $304,000,000. If these estimates hold good we shall be able to appropriate and pay what is estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, $303,000,000; but since that estimate was made, during the current year, the receipts have fallen short, according to the statements I read the other day, which were official, $11,284,331. If the revenues for the next fiscal year fall off at the same rate, there will be a falling off of revenue of $14,945,000 from the estimated receipts. The Senator from California says a part of that was caused by the tax bill. No doubt the tax bill operated very differently from what was expected by those who voted for it. I do not want to go into that question; but it is manifest that if the present depression of trade continues during the next fiscal year the Committee on Appropriations must either reduce their appropriations about $15,000,000 from the revised estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, or we shall not be able to keep the sinking fund good, or must make it up in taxes, which is out of the question.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] has assured me over and over again—and I believe what he says is always reliable—that the committee on the part of the Senate have already contemplated a reduction to the full amount proposed. I believe that is so, so far as I have kept an eye upon the appropriation bills. At the same time I would rather be on the safe side than otherwise.

Therefore my friend from California, while I voted with him here, must not feel sensitive when members of his own party, seeing these figures before them, go wherever they can to reduce the expenses of the Government. I certainly will do so. We must do it. My friend from California has the natural feeling of a person in charge of an appropriation bill, and I sympathize with him from the bottom of my heart; but he must not be discontented when any of his political friends, feeling the force of the facts presented, which cannot be gainsaid, seeing that there is an item before them which can be reduced without breaking up the service, fall into the habit of voting to reduce it.

These two items are of that character. They are contingent. When you come to the pay of the Navy, there is a difference. There the amount is fixed by law; it is salary. Therefore the Senate, without a division I think, voted for the first amendment of the committee to appropriate the full amount required for the pay of the Navy. But there are other items here contingent in their character. I intend to vote with the Committee on Appropriations, on the ground that they have already reduced their bills now, as I am assured, to the amount required to bring us within the reduced estimates of our receipts. I will follow them in voting on these amendments, because I am not prepared to say whether $700,000 or $550,000 is necessary for a particular service. I know they rest under the same obligation that I rest under to reduce these estimates, and I will follow them until I become satisfied that they have not cut deep enough to come within our receipts. Then I certainly shall vote for any reduction whatever, by whoever proposed, that will keep the expenses of the Government within the receipts of the Government.

Entertaining these views, I shall continue to vote with the Senator from California on the ground that I have confidence in the Committee on Appropriations, keeping the facts in view and knowing them as well as I and all the rest of us do, that they have made a reduction in these bills that will be sufficient to keep our expenditures within the receipts. It is their responsibility. I am not prepared from any information I have to gainsay their proposition that a certain amount rather than a smaller one is indispensably necessary to carry on the service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California has withdrawn his motion to reconsider, and the next amendment will be reported.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, I desire to say a single word. How is it possible for one like myself to know what is necessary to be appropriated for the efficiency of the Navy? I have no means of knowing, and I presume that my means of ascertaining are equal to those of at least one-half the Senators now upon this floor. These are round numbers to use, $500,000, $600,000, a million dollars. How do I arrive at a conclusion as to what it is proper for me to vote for? The recommendation of the committee; because of the fact that the officers in charge of these Departments, the Secretary of the Navy and those who by law are intrusted with the discharge of these duties have presented for the consideration of the committee the figures upon each and every item that is here given. That committee, whose duty it is to watch the interests of the Government, whose duty it is to reduce by every possible means the expenditure upon every item that is presented to them, take, analyze, scrutinize, and digest, if you please, each and every proposition that is brought before them, and they here come and report that these are the sums that are necessary to go forward with the Navy and the duties and work appertaining to that Department of the public service.

These men are responsible. I hold the chairman of the committee and the officers of the Government who have made these estimates responsible to me, declaring in my place that I stand here opposed to voting either for the democratic party or the republican party one single dollar of the public money that is not necessary to the public service. No party considerations could induce me to vote one dollar of money for any other purpose than that of an absolute necessity. But how am I to arrive at the line of duty that is marked out for me to observe? How am I to reach it? Upon what estimate? It would be just as well, as far as I am concerned, for the chairman of the committee to have said "fifteen hundred thousand dollars" as "a million dollars," and if he had made the same statement that he makes now upon that basis, I should have voted for the larger sum just as cheerfully. This is guess-work to me, cutting down 40 per cent., or dividing the thing in half. I do not understand the rule by which any sum is arrived at. The Secretary of the Navy and his subordinates gave us the figures. They appeared before the committee. They placed the figures, the necessities, and the estimates for those necessities before the committee. The committee scrutinized them. The members of it were appointed upon that committee by reason of their efficiency. They become the experts of the Senate for the purpose of ascertaining the economy of these appropriations. They declare that they have gone down to the minimum appropriation, and that these are the proper figures. I vote for them, believing that it is the only criterion, the only rule by which I can vote understandingly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, in line 256, after the word "the" to strike out "same" and insert "former;" so as to make the paragraph read:

For necessary repairs of naval laboratory, hospitals, and appendages, including roads, wharves, outhouses, steam-heating apparatus, sidewalks, fences, gardens and farms, cemeteries, furniture, head-marks for graves, $10,000. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to report to the next session of this Congress the best method of making sale of the naval hospitals at Annapolis and Washington, and the former shall be closed during the coming year.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I know the patient labor of the Committee on Appropriations in going through these regular appropriation bills. Gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber spare no time or labor in investigating the facts upon which all these appropriations are made, and there is no gentleman who has more of my confidence than the honorable Senator from California in reporting these bills. I know with what assiduity he always investigated all the "bottom facts" in relation to any appropriation. At the same time, in looking over the bill, I found two places where I thought I should exercise my own judgment in voting for a lower amount than was recommended by the committee, and those two points were where construction and repairs were embraced. I thought at the present time it would be enough if we kept our Navy in good repair and spent nothing for the purpose of further construction of vessels for the navy. I have voted for the lowest sum in one case, and propose to do it in another unless I shall be convinced by something the Senator from California may say in regard to the other amendment that may come up. Those are the only two places where I found any disposition to disagree with the conclusions of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WHYTE. The proposition which I am about to make is really in the interest of economy. I propose to strike out of the amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations in line 256 the word "former" and insert "latter." This clause of the bill submits to the Secretary of the Navy the inquiry as to the best method of making sale of the naval hospitals at Annapolis and Washington. In the original bill as it came from the House it was proposed that both of these naval hospitals at Annapolis and Washington should be closed during the coming year. For some reasons—not knowing them I cannot say whether wise or unwise—it is proposed by the Senate committee to close only the hospital at Annapolis, and leave the naval hospital at Washington still open for the coming year. In the absence of the reasons which actuated the committee it strikes me that the very reverse of that proposition would be the correct one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Probably it was done on account of the presidential election, inasmuch as nobody can vote in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHYTE. On the contrary, the diseased republicans should be taken somewhere else than in Maryland upon that occasion. We do not desire to have them there. They will probably be scattered all over the country for the November election.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend misunderstood me. I said the amendment proposed by the committee was probably for these wicked republicans, by reason of getting everybody in the District of Columbia where no one can vote.

Mr. WHYTE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not appreciate the witticism of his remark.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not very strange.

Mr. WHYTE. I thought the Senator had some reference to my own State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. O, no.

Mr. WHYTE. Where we have, I admit, diseased republicans; but the hospital can do their party no good. We have fewer diseased democrats, however.

Abandoning all witticisms or joking upon the subject and coming to the serious question, while the amount involved is very small apparently, the Government may lose a considerable amount of money by this procedure. If the committee consider that it is important to the Government to close the hospital at Washington, not being sufficiently familiar with the surroundings of that institution I shall express no views upon that subject; but in regard to the naval hospital at Annapolis, nothing could be more unwise than to close that building for a year. It can be conducted as a hospital at an expense of some three or four thousand dollars, one-half of which is contributed by the naval-hospital fund. I venture to affirm that to close it for one year would cost the Government not less than $10,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many people are in it now?

Mr. WHYTE. I think there are thirty or forty in it at this time. It is outside of the grounds of the Naval Academy. It is therefore exposed to the tramps and to the pillagers who are to be found in every country. The shutters would be carried off, the spouting would be taken, and the lead pipes in the building, as I think my friend from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, will bear me witness, is the fate of all the public buildings that are abandoned and closed and left without people to take care of them. They are pillaged and plundered, and the property is rendered not only useless for the purposes of the Government afterward if it be retained, but if offered for sale it is actually given away. That is the case with this hospital at Annapolis. It was a building constructed at a cost probably of $70,000, in addition to which—I do not now remember the amount—a large sum was appropriated to purchase the grounds. They have been put in nice order. Everything about the building is in good condition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How long has it been established?

Mr. WHYTE. Only a few years, not over ten years in all, I suppose. It is almost a new building, a beautiful building, utterly worthless for any other purpose than as a hospital or connected in some manner with the public buildings at Annapolis. I am satisfied none of the officers of the Naval Academy would recommend the closing of this building.

Mr. MERRIMON. Is it a wooden building?

Mr. WHYTE. It is a wooden building. It could not be sold at this time for one-tenth of its cost; probably it would not bring $6,000 to-day in the market if put up at sale, owing to the depressed condition of things in the State of Maryland at this time. I submit this proposition in the hope of saving the building.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the Senator from Maryland is quite right when he says that to close this hospital for a year and then open it would cost the Government $10,000; but I submit if that is not the principle upon which the bill as it comes to us has gone. All the reductions that have been made as the bill comes to us, from the ordinary service of the Navy, will have to be paid for next year at a greatly enhanced cost. If we reject the additions to the appropriations which the committee have reported, we shall have to put them on next year, in this case and all the others. I think this is in no sense an exception to the general tenor of the reductions which are proposed in the bill as it came from the House. If we are to have a Navy we ought to keep it up to a certain extent, within certain limits, all the time. We should keep it in good repair. We should have a sufficiency of the imperishable materials, and we should keep such a force afloat as will give our young officers an opportunity to learn their profession and keep the old officers from getting rusty.

Mr. SARGENT. The Washington hospital is important as long as the Washington navy-yard is kept open and the marine barracks are near it. It is a very important hospital as long as we have these stations. If we abolish the navy-yard and the marine barracks at Washington or locate them elsewhere, then we shall not want the Washington hospital.

The original bill which was reported from the House committee provided that both of these hospitals should be stricken out and at the same time abolished the Washington navy-yard. There was a consistency in the bill in that shape. When finally the House refused to abolish the Washington navy-yard the necessity was at once created for keeping up the Washington hospital. Therefore we have proposed that it shall be retained. It will be found to be a very important hospital. For the purposes of comparison I have a table here for the last fiscal year. I will compare it with Annapolis, Maryland. For instance, there remained in the hospital, December 31, 1874, at Annapolis, Maryland, 5 patients; there were 21 remaining in the Washington hospital. The total number treated in 1874 at Annapolis was 35; at the other, 127. One died in the Annapolis hospital and 2 in the other. There were discharged in 1874 29 from Annapolis and 104 from the Washington hospital. There were admitted in 1874 32 in Annapolis and 111 in the Washington hospital.

These figures give the proportion of about 5 to 1, and show the importance of the Washington hospital over the Annapolis hospital; so that if either be closed it should not be the one of the greatest importance and the most busy work. I think I am prepared, however, from personal investigation into the matter and from the investigations of the Senate Naval Committee, which gave special attention to the subject, to say that the Annapolis hospital is an entirely useless institution to us. It would be better to give it away at once if the State of Maryland would accept it, or give it to anybody else, or let it be carried off by piecemeal. It makes no difference how we dispose of it, provided the expense of keeping it up be saved. It is at no naval station. They have a hospital there for the Naval Academy which takes care of the students and the sick connected with the academy.

Mr. COCKRELL. How far is this hospital from the Naval Academy?

Mr. SARGENT. It is outside of the walls, I should judge about half a mile. It is really of no use at all. Naval vessels never stop there, unless for the purpose of discharging the sick, and very rarely indeed for that purpose. It is much more convenient to send them to Norfolk, which itself is a naval rendezvous, or to send them up to Washington, where there is every acommodation, and where vessels come for new armament and frequently to be repaired, or to send them to New York, where there is a very fine hospital; or if they come from tropical countries send them to the Chelsea naval hospital.

In other words, here is a building without any legitimate use. The Government has been maintaining it at an expense of $6,000 or $7,000 a year, simply because we cannot give it away and cannot sell it. I think the House did a very wise thing in providing that it should be closed. If, however, Senators fear there may be a dilapidation of the property or danger to the material that may be of some use to the Government or to somebody, a single watchman could take care of the building, just as gentlemen who go away from their country houses leave a single servant, or two servants if necessary, at an expense of $300 apiece, to watch their property; but for any practical purpose as a hospital it is of no use whatever, and ought never to have been put there. It ought to be abolished now.

I speak very plainly and clearly and positively upon this subject, because it is a matter which the Naval Committee, under instructions of the Senate, two years ago inquired into particularly as to which of all our hospitals could be abandoned; and we came to the conclusion that this hospital should be disposed of, and made a written report on the subject, which was printed.

Mr. WHYTE. I am not making any objection to the sale of this hospital at the proper time, but the bill does not provide for the sale of the hospital. It provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall report at the next session of Congress what would be the best method of making a sale, and in the mean while closes up the building. My proposition is only for a temporary sustentation of the hospital until the next session of Congress; that is all. The officers are all there, the attendants are all there, and the hospital can be kept up at a cost to the Government of $2,000 out of the public Treasury. That is all, and it would cost that much to put watchmen in the building.

Mr. SARGENT. It costs nearly $7,000 to run the hospital.

Mr. WHYTE. Four thousand dollars at the outside it would cost to run it for a year.

Mr. SARGENT. Then there must be some special fund out of which to run it.

Mr. WHYTE. It cost $6,000 before, but the expenses have been reduced. According to the showing of the medical inspector it can be run for about $4,000 a year, and it would be worth that much more next year if it is not closed.

Mr. SARGENT. That is not $2,000; it is nearer $7,000.

Mr. WHYTE. Two thousand dollars of this sum are contributed out of the hospital fund, and the other two thousand paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. SARGENT. That is true of all hospitals. It has no special privilege in the hospital fund.

Mr. WHYTE. But it is made up out of a fund not raised by general taxation.

Mr. SARGENT. It is made up from the resources of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee to strike out the word "former," in line 256, and insert "latter."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland to move to strike out all after the word "Washington" if he wants to accomplish his purpose.

Mr. WHYTE. I will withdraw my amendment and move to strike out all after the word "Washington," in line 256.

And the same shall be closed during the coming year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, as modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Booth, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Hamilton, Howe, Key, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, and Wright—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, and Windom—34.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that at five o'clock the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Let us sit the bill out.

Mr. SARGENT. I am willing to accede to the wishes of the Senate. If Senators prefer remaining here another hour in order to pass the bill, very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will remain until we do pass it.

Mr. SARGENT. Then I withdraw the motion.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 287, in the appropriations for the Bureau of Construction and Repair, to increase the appropriation "for preservation of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; preservation of materials; purchase of tools; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat, and for general care and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses, namely, advertising and foreign postages," from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000.

Mr. SARGENT. This amendment has been discussed by a number of Senators and alluded to by myself. I wish to say only a single word, not to detain the Senate, in order to explain why the committee made this apparently large increase. As it looks in the bill, the amendment is a large increase; but, on looking to the appropriations for the present fiscal year, it is a very large decrease. It is a decrease of $800,000 in this single Bureau, which is the very heart, the very life of the Navy; because if you do not repair your ships you cannot keep them afloat. Is not that a large decrease for a single object in the Navy for a year? The House put it down to $1,500,000, and we added another million, which in itself, as I say, looks like a very large increase. Suppose the House had put it down to $250,000, and we had come in and moved to make it a million, or a million and a quarter, or a million and a half; Senators would have said, "What an enormous increase over the House!" The trouble is that the proposition of the House is entirely inadequate. It does not come near the necessities of the service. The service during the present fiscal year required $3,300,000, and that was after a very close, careful paring down. The appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year is only $17,000,000, and for the year before it was $20,000,000. We had cut it down three millions arbitrarily, forced it down, and if we still cut it down to the extent the House proposes, the result would be simply to leave our ships unrepaired. My friend from Vermont said he was opposed to further construction. There can be no construction under this item as the committee fixed it. Not a single ship can be built.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I ask the Senator from California if under the same appropriation for years past there have not been built several vessels which are now in the service of the Navy?

Mr. SARGENT. There have been most extensive repairs unquestionably, and it is to the credit of the Navy Department that it has utilized all the funds which we gave, and created out of rotten hulks a valuable Navy, which we have at the present time. The Navy is in a better condition now than it has been at any time since the war. When the war closed we had vessels of the most ridiculous description for war-vessels. We had side-wheelers; we had ferry-boats; we had scows, with tea-kettles upon them; we had vessels that would not float, vessels that had been knocked to pieces by cannon-shot, a ragged, bob-tailed mass of stuff called a navy. Out of that terrible confusion, very much through the persistent economy and the genius of the present Secretary of the Navy, an orderly and efficient, but small, navy has been created, and except a few new vessels which have been built, small cruisers, where express appropriations have been made for them, it has not been by means of large appropriations, but the ordinary annual appropriations have been economized. Wherever a dollar could be saved it has been put into repairs. We have got nearly through with that. There are a few of the double-turreted and single-turreted monitors that need to be finished, and when finished they will be worth hundreds of thousands more than they were when they were first launched from the stocks. They will have iron hulls, imperishable, instead of wooden hulls liable to be destroyed by the teredo or to decay, as the best live oak will do. That work is nearly finished, and ought to be finished, but it cannot be finished under the appropriations proposed by the Senate committee. All we can do will be to keep in repair the vessels which are occasionally arriving from the Asiatic squadron, the West India squadron, and elsewhere throughout the globe where our vessels are scattered, and send them off again on their necessary mission.

Senators may say that this is a large increase; but let me remind them that last year we appropriated nearly a million more, and the Senate has continued in a reduction of about a third of the appropriations for the annual expenditures. In that view it seems not unreasonable to agree to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. CRAGIN. I think every year for twelve years the appropriation for this Bureau has been over $3,000,000 continually, without an exception.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it be in order to move to make $2,000,000 the sum appropriated, which by the House bill is a million and a half and by the committee's proposed amendment two millions and a half?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator can move to strike out "500,000" in line 290.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment of the committee is to strike out one word and insert another, and I cannot by perfecting the text move to strike out one word and insert another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator might move to strike out the whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was afraid that would be liable to the queer idea we have here, although it is the law of the Senate, that the present amendment is to perfect the text. I am only desiring to strike out part of the text. Then I move to strike out all the words after "postages" in that paragraph, "$1,500,000," and the amendment of the committee which makes it $2,500,000, and insert "$2,000,000," so as to make the appropriation $2,000,000. Last year the appropriation was $3,300,000.

I agree entirely with what the Senator from California has said, that the Secretary of the Navy has with great tact and ability, in my opinion, devoted his energies, out of the small appropriations that were given him, to improving the condition of the Navy in strict pursuance of law, in repairing those old ships and putting them into condition. If we are to have a navy at all, it is worth while out of the money appropriated to have as good a one as can be got. I suppose everybody will agree to that; but I think it possible to get on this coming year, considering the fact that so much has been done, with perhaps a little less than the committee has reported. Therefore, I move to strike out all after the word "postages" in that clause, and insert words which will make it read "$2,000,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. THURMAN. It is simply to strike out "500,000" in line 290.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the effect of it, although I have to make the motion in the way I have made it to get within the rule. It makes the appropriation instead of a million and a half, as proposed by the House, and instead of two millions and a half, as proposed by the committee, $2,000,000 as against $3,300,000 last year.

Mr. THURMAN. It splits the difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That strikes out the amendment of the committee to lines 289 and 290. The next amendment will be reported.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from line 290 to line 300 the following words:

And that the sum of $200,000 of the above sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in employment of labor to put the live-oak timber in the different yards in wet docks, and labor for that purpose shall be employed during the months of July, August, or September, and shall be discharged before the 1st of October, 1876; and during the months of October and November of the year 1876 there shall not be exceeding fifty persons borne on the lists as laborers at any navy-yard at the expense of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to perfect the text, before these words are stricken out, I move to amend the clause by striking out all after the first word "and" and inserting:

No increase of the force at any navy-yard shall be made at any time within sixty days next before any election to take place for President of the United States or member of Congress, except when the Secretary of the Navy shall certify that the needs of the public service make such increase necessary at that time.

Mr. SARGENT. Is that a substitute?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is to perfect the text.

Mr. SARGENT. Instead of what there is in the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Instead of what there is in the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. To whom shall he certify? How is the Secretary of the Navy to certify? I do not understand it exactly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will take the opinion of the Senator, if he has any trouble on the subject. I perceive that my friend is not anxious to come to a vote on the direct question of preventing this so-called, and if correctly described real, abuse for this one year which the House bill provides, and which is certainly the most extraordinary proposition that I ever saw in a bill that had passed one branch of any legislative body, which no mutiny act (and my friend has referred to that as existing from year to year in Great Britain for the protection of liberty and private rights) can justify or furnish an apology for. For the first time that I remember in any legislative contrivance that has got through a deliberative body the idea that in order to correct what is called an abuse, and truly so called if the things alleged are facts, you are to say that for this one year, when one particular party happens to have control of the executive branch of the Government, you will not allow navy-yards to be filled up, but leave it for the next political party, if any prejudice designed by Providence to this nation should let it come in, to then fill them up for all time afterward, would be the most extraordinary philosophy in legislation that ever I heard of, I confess. If we are in earnest about this business—and for one I humbly submit that I am—and we wish to guard against this abuse all the time, then let us say that never shall the force in these navy-yards be increased about the time of the elections with which we have anything to do, (that of the Chief Magistrate of the nation, which of course includes that of the Vice-President, for they must take place together, and that of members of Congress,) unless the responsible head of that Department shall certify that the necessities of the public service require that this work should go on more rapidly at that time.

My friend from Ohio asks, "What does certify mean? It is vague." I thought the meaning of the word was very clear. "To whom shall he certify?" he asks. I never was aware that a certificate absolutely required that it should be addressed to anybody. I have seen a good many, and so has my friend, that certified "to whom it may concern." We cannot have any very great trouble on the subject of the meaning and the application of the word "certify." Its plain import is, I submit to my friend from Ohio, that the Secretary of the Navy shall declare in writing, by his public certificate, or proclamation, or order, or whatever you call it, in a responsible way, that he cannot get away from, that the public necessity requires that this work should be stimulated and increased at the particular time named, so that in time of imminent public peril or warfare there shall be a power, a responsible power in the head of this Department to have the work go on notwithstanding; and, if he violates his duty and debases the operations of his Department to political ends, he is amenable to the law, which can reach him if he does not get out of office too soon, as the saying is; and, if he does, you have got rid of him and can apply the proper redress.

That is the object of this amendment, and I had supposed it would meet with the concurrence of everybody.

Mr. THURMAN. The navy-yards are under the command of officers of the Navy, and not in charge of civilians. I do not believe that a single commandant of a navy-yard ever willingly, much less voluntarily and anxiously, employed the patronage of his navy-yard for party purposes. I believe that wherever men have been "taken on," as it is called, who were not needed, for political purposes, it has been against the wishes of the commandant of the navy-yard. I believe that if the Secretary of the Navy discharges his duty no such thing can ever take place.

This provision in the House bill is aimed at that very abuse of discretion that rests in the head of the Navy Department, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont does not remove in any degree either the temptation to permit the abuse or the probability of its occurrence. There can be no such "taking on" of men not needed now without the sanction, if not the direct order, of the Secretary of the Navy. If the men are actually needed, then it is proper for him to order their employment; but this abuse, if it exists, is an abuse consisting in the employment of men who are not needed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If, as the Senator says with entire correctness, the men are needed, the Secretary ought to have the power to employ them. How can he do it if you take this provision as it came from the House? He can do it if you take the proposition which I have offered; but he must do it, let me say as a part of the suggestive question, in a public and responsible way, so that there is no dodging, or doubt, or difficulty about it. He is obliged to take the open and public responsibility. Is not that a safeguard?

Mr. THURMAN. I grant that that is something. I grant that that is much better than a private order or intimation, or whatever you may call it. If I knew what "certify" meant, whether it meant putting a paper on the files of the Department that so many men were needed at the Kittery yard, or so many men at the Brooklyn yard, or so many men at Mare Island; if I knew precisely what this certificate meant, I might be willing to agree more than I now am that there would be some restraint in the provision offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend has really any difficulty about the word "certify," if my friend is really in earnest about that, if it is not a mere jocose criticism, and it will help him, I will change it to say "shall by proclamation declare," so that the head of the Department shall make a public declaration that the public service requires it. If he will go for it in that way I will change it.

Mr. THURMAN. That is better, although it would be a singular thing for an executive officer, except the President, to be issuing proclamations. Yet that would still be something better, I grant that; and I hope, as my friend is progressing, he will finally come up to the House bill.

My answer to him is that there is no reasonable probability that any more men will be needed at the navy-yards in the months that are named than the number named in the bill. Perhaps it is too broad a statement to say the number named, because I have not investigated the subject. I do not know how many men are employed during those times or before those times. I only take it for granted that the committee who have examined this subject have found that fifty men would be all that would be needed in a navy-yard at that time. If that is not enough, double it and make it a hundred men.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But my friend seems to think the House committee is "the be-all and the end-all." We have a committee of our own which declares exactly the reverse.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not do any such thing as that; but I say if fifty men are not enough, then double the number; or if you do not like that, if you think there is any great public exigency likely to arise that would require a larger force, and if that is the opinion of the majority of the Senate, then frame the section in a different way, different from that proposed by the Senator from Vermont, which leaves it all in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy just as it is now, different from that proposed by the House, and provide that after such a day, the 1st of September, if you please, or the 1st of October, if you please, there shall be no increase of the laborers in the navy-yards up to the 15th day of November.

Mr. CRAGIN. I would agree to that. By this provision there will be a large reduction necessary in every navy-yard. Besides, this would not apply to the Kittery yard at all, especially so far as New Hampshire is concerned. Our election takes place in March and we should have the right to increase under the bill, if we wished to do so. I want it to apply everywhere.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is very strange that my friend from Ohio fails to see the point of public exigency which he himself has stated, for he said in the beginning of his remarks that if the public necessity required it, it ought to be done. Everybody must agree to that. The bill as it stands absolutely prohibits its being done, necessity or no necessity. My friend says that it is not at all probable that next October and November there will be any public exigency. Are you to make absolutely prohibitive laws on the ground that you cannot now see that a public function may necessarily be brought into exercise at some future period? Can you stand on such a proposition as that? I think not. How long ago is it that suddenly, owing to our relations with a foreign power, all the activities of the navy-yards were brought into exercise and a large number of ships were fitted out at the various navy-yards in order to defend the interests and protect the honor of the United States? Not long ago. Suppose that event had occurred in October or November, and the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States, in order to defend our interests and our honor, wished to increase the force and the whole nation wished that we should increase the force at all these yards in order to put in proper condition a naval force at once; where should we have been? Absolutely with our hands tied.

If this Government has got so low, or is hereafter to get so low, that you cannot trust the responsible exercise of executive power with that part of the Government to which the Constitution has remitted it, then we had better give up. To declare that the vessels of war of the United States for two particular months in one year, or in any year, shall not be put in fighting condition, is to declare what no other government has ever declared, and what no wise government, in my opinion, ever would declare.

You must have the capacity for the exercise of your force always in existence. You cannot calculate in advance that the months of October and November are to be the months when the gates of the temple of war are to be shut, and that you can fold up your arms and run the risk of having the courtesy or the magnanimity or the contempt of other powers protect you from injury and from danger. That never will do. You must have power somewhere that can be exercised all the time within the amount of money that Congress chooses to appropriate, and sometimes altogether beyond it, the executive arm taking the risk of having his action approved by the representatives of the States and of the people. And yet here comes this bill which declares that for two months in this year the navy-yards shall lie absolutely idle for fear that, whatever may be the public peril, somebody may get there who may vote in the wrong place or vote the wrong way.

Now, what I have proposed is to meet what is said to be the abuse and what in old times, if not in present ones, plainly has been an abuse, by providing that the responsible head of this Department in a public and responsible way shall be authorized at his peril, without leaving it open to any doubt as to what he has done, to carry on the necessary operations of the Government even in the months of October and November.

Mr. HOWE. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question? It is whether he supposes that a democrat or a republican either can hurt the country any worse by voting from a navy-yard than anywhere else?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I intimated that when I said that it was supposed somebody who got into the navy-yard would either vote in the wrong place or in the wrong way; that is all.

Mr. HOWE. But if he votes from the navy-yard he will not vote anywhere else?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true; but at the same time it has been said that there was born in the good old democratic times this wicked local contrivance of stimulating the election of some member of Congress in a particular district where there was a navy yard, and whichever party the member happens to belong to generally takes, they say, a deep interest in the navy-yard and its employés so as to get men into place in order to help them. As far as that evil has extended I am perfectly willing to correct it; and you do correct it, if you are wholly in earnest, by providing that the head of the Navy Department shall take the responsibility in a public way and by a formal official act of saying that the public necessities require the increase of force at this particular time. That is all there is about it and there is no danger in it. But as I said before, I am absolutely astonished at the provision that this House bill contains.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask to have the amendment of the Senator from Vermont reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "and," in line 290, it is proposed to strike out all the words to line 300, and insert:

> No increase of the force at any navy-yard shall be made at any time within sixty days next before any election to take place for President of the United States or member of Congress, except when the Secretary of the Navy shall certify that the needs of the public service make such increase necessary at that time.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I am very much disposed to support the amendment of the Senator from Vermont for this reason: I had drawn one embracing nearly the same language and entirely the same idea, that unless a public emergency arose which in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy demands an increase of the force at any or all of the yards——

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the same thing.

Mr. EATON. It is about the same thing, and therefore I find no fault with the amendment of the Senator from Vermont except in this particular which I wish to suggest to the Senator: As his amendment is applied to this section, and possibly he intended it should have that effect, it does away with the application of a certain amount to the purchase of certain timber, which I suppose to be exceedingly proper.

Mr. SARGENT. That is not for the purchase of timber. It is simply to take timber that is in the various navy-yards and put it in wet docks; and at a number of navy-yards there are no wet docks, as, for instance, at Mare Island. There are hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of this lumber stored there under shelter, such shelter as they have; not adequate, I admit.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have such a large amount of live-oak timber,

I understand, already accumulated that, in the present exigencies of the Government, we probably can get on without an accumulation of any more for the present year.

Mr. EATON. I had supposed differently.

Mr. SARGENT. This does not accumulate any.

Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. What is to be done with the certificate the Secretary of the Navy is to make? Where is it to be lodged?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know what is to be done with it. I know that in a great many statutes and other things public officers are required to certify a certain state of facts as the ground of action or as the testimony of what has taken place. I take it, inasmuch as this certificate is a public official document, like any other public act of the Secretary of the Navy, if there is an application or a suggestion, or if in his opinion, without any application or suggestion, the work at the Kittery navy-yard, for instance, or the Washington navy-yard next October, owing to the state of our public affairs, ought to be put on a war footing, so to speak, he makes his certificate, his public official certificate, and follows that, according to the law, with the order that the force at that yard may be increased. It becomes an official archive like any other of the public acts in writing that the Secretary of the Navy or any other head of Department or the President of the United States is to do.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to add to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont:

Which certificate shall be immediately published when made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the least objection. I accept the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be so modified. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WHYTE. Before the vote is taken on that, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact, as stated by members of the committee who visited these yards, that a great deal of live-oak timber there now is rotting, going to pieces, drying up because of the want of that care which is necessary to preserve it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is not intended to assail that; but it is all in one clause, and if the whole is struck out and what I propose inserted, it will be perfectly in order then to re-insert such part of it as the Committees on Naval Affairs and Appropriations or my friend from Maryland shall suggest. It is not intended to express any opinion upon that topic at the present time.

Mr. WHYTE. I propose to vote for the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, but there ought to be some provision to require that this timber should be taken care of; for, according to the report of these gentlemen, it is really being destroyed by reason of the allegation of the officers in charge that appropriations are exhausted and they are not able to do it.

Mr. CRAGIN. There is no doubt whatever that the Secretary of the Navy or the Department will see that this timber is taken care of in the way suggested by this provision just so far as there are facilities for doing it. They have been very anxious to do it heretofore, and as soon as there is money appropriated it will be attended to.

Mr. EATON. Therefore the necessity of making some portion of this appropriation applicable to that identical work.

Mr. SARGENT. Then strike out all after the word "docks" in line 294.

Mr. WHYTE. I understand there are some places where there are no wet-docks. The timber ought to be under cover if not in water.

Mr. MERRIMON. The reason I propounded a question to the Senator from Vermont a while ago was that, while I saw the general purpose, I did not see the special effect that this certificate was to have. I take it the purpose is that the Secretary of the Navy shall give notice to the public at that particular time that an increase of the service in the navy-yards or a particular navy-yard is necessary, and in order to place a check upon his power to employ men with a view to prostitute suffrage, he is required to give this certificate. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio obviates the difficulty that occurred to my mind to some extent; but it seems to me, with all respect and deference, that the provision might be rendered more forcible by requiring on such occasions the Secretary of the Navy to certify to the President that an increase of service was necessary, and let that certificate be approved by the President, so that the responsibility for an increase of service at a time like that would be shared both by the President and the Secretary. It would increase the public confidence in a requisition for an increase of service just preceding an election.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true; and it would be still further increased if it should be provided that it should be submitted to Congress and they should assent. Of course it is a question of degree. You can add to the number of the people who are to certify; but I submit to my friend from North Carolina that in a matter of this kind, which is really a matter of detail in executing public work according to public exigencies, it would be rather a strong implication against the fitness and honor of high public officials, the heads of Departments, to require that in any case the Secretary of the Navy, exercising his responsibility publicly and under a definite certificate of a definite public exigency, about how many men he should employ in a particular yard, must always have the approval of the President of the United States. It implies that, as a rule, or at least as an exception, you may expect to have the head of the Navy Department so debased by political prejudice that he would make, on his own responsibility, liable to impeachment and to punishment, a public certificate which was a lie.

I think we have gone far enough when we make the head of the Navy Department responsible in the exercise of this power in the first place to examine the particular occasion at the time, and to be personally and officially responsible by his own declaration made public that the exigencies of the public service demand that then, "at that time," as the amendment says, more laborers shall be employed. It appears to me that that goes far enough.

Mr. MERRIMON. My idea was that if we are going to check this evil we ought to do it in the most effectual manner; and while there ought not be any reason why there should be distrust of high functionaries—cabinet officers—long experience in this country shows that this power has been prostituted to the shame of all parties and to the shame of the American people. I believe that if the Secretary of the Navy is required to certify this necessity to the President, and the President approve of the employment of an increased number of hands, it would go much further toward bringing about the reformation which all seem to desire.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You might provide that they should not do anything without the approval of the President.

Mr. SARGENT. Let us have the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee, to strike out the clause as amended.

Mr. EATON. It seems to me that some portion of the money appropriated by this clause should be applied to the care of this timber.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not dispute that; I do not know anything about it.

Mr. EATON. I prefer that the Senator from California, who has the bill in his hand and in his mind, should perfect it in that respect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The moment this matter is disposed of an amendment can be moved to provide for that. Anything can be added after this is adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out from the word "and," in line 290.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me understand the question. It is to strike out "and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is all that is now left of the committee's amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the word "and" will not be stricken out as matter of grammar, for it should precede the clause I have had inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move to prefix the word "and" prior to the words agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to prefix it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to add the following words:

And that the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in the employment of labor to put the live-oak timber in the different yards in wet docks.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the Senator from California that that had better come in before the last amendment adopted; it would be just as well.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well; put it in before that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As a distinct paragraph, right after the word "dollars," in line 290.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so inserted if agreed to. The question is on inserting the amendment at that point.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. The only remaining amendment which increases the appropriations is line 307. Let it be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is in the appropriation for the Bureau of Steam-Engineering, to increase the item for repairs and preservation of boilers and machinery on naval vessels; for fitting, repairs, and preservation of machinery and tools in the several navy-yards; for labor in navy-yards and stations not included above, and incidental expenses; and for purchase and preservation of oils, coals, metals, and all materials and stores, from $885,000 to $1,500,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. SARGENT. This is the last amendment increasing appropriations which I am instructed by the committee to urge. I can give the reasons in general terms as I have heretofore.

The amount appropriated for the present fiscal year is $1,800,000. Senators will observe that the House does not only strike off one-half but more; it strikes off a million at once, leaving an entirely insufficient amount for the service. We propose, not the amount appropriated this year, but $1,500,000, which is $300,000 less than the present service. Out of this appropriation all boilers and machinery on vessels have to be repaired and preserved; and it is for fitting, repairs, and preservation of machinery and tools in the navy-yards. The life of a boiler is three years. All experts testify to that and long expe rience shows it. Our vessels come home and must renew their boilers. The boilers are expensive. The boiler of a war vessel is a very large and expensive article, and it requires a great deal of money to replace it or make large repairs. The committee therefore propose to allow $1,500,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is one of the class of items to which reference has been made before, that are in an entire degree discretionary and where economy can be practiced down to a very narrow compass. Of course what the Senator from California says in respect to the life of a boiler and the necessity of having boilers in good repair is true, because it not only involves questions of the capacity of the vessels but the safety of human life that they should be in order. What he says is very forcible; but at the same time I should be glad to appeal to him, for the reasons that have generally already been stated, to let us try for this year the experiment of getting on with $1,000,000 instead of $885,000, which the House propose, and instead of $1,500,000, that the committee propose; and, in the same spirit that I have suggested one or two amendments before, I venture to move to amend the amendment of the committee so as to make it read "$1,000,000" instead of "$1,500,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to amend the amendment by striking out "five hundred thousand;" so as to read "one million dollars."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like now to ask the Senate if it will be so kind as to indulge me by going back to page 10 before proceeding to the remaining amendments, which are formal. The amendment of the committee for $760,000, in lines 217 and 218, was utterly rejected. I should like to ask the Senate, in the spirit that has actuated the Senator from Vermont in making his suggestions, that the $440,000 as it stands in the bill as it came from the House, in that item for the Bureau of Yards and Docks, be changed to $500,000. That is a very slight increase.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good. That is round numbers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is made. Five hundred thousand dollars is inserted instead of $440,000, in lines 217 and 218.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be reported.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for the Marine Corps, line 422, after the word "appointments" to insert "except by promotion:" and after line 425 to insert "and hereafter all appointments of second lieutenants in the Marine Corps shall be made from the graduates at the Naval School;" so as make the paragraph read:

For pay of officers of the Marine Corps, and for pay of non-commissioned officers, musicians, privates, and others of the corps, and for transportation of officers traveling without troops, and for payments to discharged soldiers for clothing undrawn, $624,000. And from and after the passage of this act there shall be no appointments, except by promotion, to fill vacancies occurring in the list of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps until the number of such officers shall have been reduced, by casualties or otherwise, to seventy-five. And hereafter all appointments of second lieutenants in the Marine Corps shall be made from graduates at the Naval School.

Mr. SARGENT. The words "except by promotion" are put in there in order to complete the sense of the passage, and, as I understand, do not vary the intention of the provision of the House bill. The last amendment proposed, "and hereafter all appointments to second lieutenants in the Marine Corps shall be made from graduates at the Naval School," is for the purpose of absorbing some of the graduates of the Naval School, instead of making the appointments from civil life. The complaint of the Navy is that we have too many officers, and the Senator from Ohio recently called attention to the fact that both at the Naval and Military Schools we are making too many graduates to become officers. We propose to take some of them and put them in the Marine Corps instead of creating the officers out of civilians. That is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy in his annual report, and I have no doubt will work well.

Mr. CRAGIN. I suggest to the Senator whether it would not be better to change the word "hereafter" to "thereafter." It means, of course, after the number of officers is reduced to seventy-five.

Mr. SARGENT. I think it would be better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The change of "hereafter" to "thereafter" will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then you want to strike out the period and make it a semi-colon before "and."

Mr. SARGENT. Very well.

Mr. EATON. I had supposed that the peculiar qualifications necessary for officers of the Marine Corps were different from those necessary for officers of the Navy. I had not supposed that a person who had gone through a series of years' instruction in acquiring a knowledge to become a naval officer would be a desirable or proper person to be made a marine officer. The qualifications of the two arms of the service I think are entirely different. One is more military than naval. I supposed it would require a different line of studies to qualify a man to be an officer of marines than had been pursued by a youth who has spent two, three, or four years in the acquisition of naval information.

Mr. SARGENT. The learning which would be acquired at either the Naval or Military school would be very valuable to officers of the Marine Corps. My impression is that as the Marine officer is a quasi naval officer, it would be better to educate him at the Naval school rather than the Military school; but a graduate of either would probably be better fitted to make an accomplished officer than a person taken up from civil life who may not have had that careful training.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the plain truth about it is that the whole Marine Corps might be abolished without any great injury to the public service, and perhaps with some good to the public service. The Marine Corps was a very good thing when they used to fight in the old wooden ships and had no bigger gun than a twenty-four-pounder, when they used the marines by putting them all around in the yards and everywhere else with muskets in their hands to shoot at the enemy, and also used them as a police to keep the sailors in order. That is about the whole use they were put to. Now, when the number of sailors and seamen on board of a man-of-war has so materially diminished, and when the mode of naval warfare has almost entirely changed, the truth is that the Marine Corps is an obsolete institution, or pretty nearly so, for all practical purposes. But if we need any marines at all, there is no education that ever was given that can better qualify a man to be an officer of marines than that which is given at Annapolis. The truth about it is that anybody who will witness the maneuvers of the cadets at Annapolis and those at West Point will be a good deal troubled to know which of them would be the better land force. So far as you use marines on land in any land service, or so far as it is necessary to drill men or drill sailors, or make a sailors' brigade like that which Commodore Stockton operated in Mexico, you could not have better officers in the world than those who graduate at Annapolis.

Mr. CRAGIN. I want to add my hearty commendation to this last clause of the amendment:

And hereafter all appointments of second lieutenants in the Marine Corps shall be made from graduates of the naval school.

I think that is one of the best amendments in the bill. The great fault of the Marine Corps, especially with the appointment of second lieutenants, has been that poor men have been appointed; young men who have become unruly, whose parents or guardians could not take care of them properly, have been by some contrivance put into the Marine Corps, and the result is that corps, although having very many gallant and worthy officers, has lost by this system of appointments. I hope that with this amendment it may be brought up to its ancient standard and be made measurably, if not quite, equal to the Navy.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that in my long acquaintance with the officers of the Navy, and it is very extensive, I have never found a more intelligent, honorable, or gallant class of men. I believe today that the personnel of the American Navy can be equaled by that of no other navy on the face of the earth. Our Navy is small; it always will be small; but, with a large number of officers always ready in every emergency to command any number of men which can be called for, we shall always be safe and secure.

Mr. SARGENT. Now I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not take one-half minute of time. I entirely agree to this amendment; it is a very good one; but I wish to say that differing from the former amendments, which merely regulated the employment of people who are only employed because money is appropriated, we have here an amendment which changes the general regulations of law, and on principle I am opposed to it in an appropriation bill; but as it meets the general concurrence of the Senate it is not of any consequence, and I shall not ask any division upon it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF ENFORCEMENT ACTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, before I make the motion to adjourn, which I am about to do, I wish to say that to-morrow morning, if I am correctly advised, I shall move to take up the bill I have tried to call up once or twice about the enforcement act; and, so giving notice, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 22, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WILLIAM M'INDOE.

Mr. COCHRANE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 422) for the relief of William McIndoe, postmaster at Lonaconing, Alleghany County, Maryland, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN I. THOMAS.

Mr. COCHRANE also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 420) for the relief of John I. Thomas, postmaster of Hancock, in Washington County, Maryland, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

C. H. WALKER.

Mr. COCHRANE also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 421) for the relief of C. H. Walker, postmaster at Frostburgh, in Alleghany County, Maryland; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WALSH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 718, a bill (H. R. No. 3765) providing for the erection of an industrial school for girls in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MARCUS RADICH.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 130) referring the claim of Marcus Radich to the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That resolution must go to the Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING IN DOVER, DELAWARE.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 558) making a further appropriation for the erection of Government buildings in Dover, Delaware.

The bill was read. It appropriates the sum of $15,000, in addition to the appropriation heretofore made for the erection of a post-office in Dover, Delaware, for the purpose of adding an additional story to said post-office building now in course of erection, to be used as a United States court-room and other offices of the Government.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I will state that in 1873 Congress passed a bill appropriating $40,000 for the purpose of buying a site and erecting a building for a post-office at Dover, Delaware; but the site cost at the time of the purchase $10,030, leaving less than $30,000 for the erection of the building. The Federal courts sit in that city and have to use this building, and this bill is merely designed for the purpose of putting up a second story to accommodate the United States courts.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I rise to a personal explanation, a question of personal privilege. I send to the Clerk's desk an article from some newspaper which was sent to me yesterday reflecting upon myself and upon the Committee of Accounts, and I ask that the Clerk read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Is Fitzhugh crazy or is he too honest for the democrats in the House? Some time ago he refused to turn over certain books relating to the document-room until an invoice of the contents of that department had been taken. He urged several of the democratic members to investigate the matter. He called their attention to the fact that many thousand volumes of valuable public documents are missing from that department. The missing documents consist of such works as The Medical History of the War, which is valued at $50 a set in open market. He besought them to look into the matter, and bring the guilty parties to justice. Who are the guilty parties? There is a man named Fletcher in the folding-room who, perhaps, can answer this question. He was Mr. SAMUEL RANDALL's man to succeed Fitzhugh, but the majority of the democrats acquainted with his character refused to support him, and he was defeated. The charge has been made that he has spirited these books away. Is this the reason that Blue Jean WILLIAMS refuses to take an invoice of this room? Does he want to shield this man? Will he and the rest of the ex-confederate House of Representatives stand indifferently by while the document-room of the national Capitol is being ruthlessly robbed of its best treasures? Something should be done immediately to ferret out the rascality of this clandestine transaction, and bring the miserable culprit to the bar of rigid justice. It was intimated to Mr. WILLIAMS and others of his party weeks ago that robbery and pilfering were going on in the document-room, and yet they have not raised a hand to stay the crime. These are the men who are howling "reform! reform!" while they see thieves of their own making with both hands plundering the property of the people and lift not the first finger in opposition to the crime.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. In order to show what the duties of the Doorkeeper are, and what the duties of the Committee of Accounts are, I ask the Clerk to read the twenty-seventh rule.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

27. The Doorkeeper shall execute strictly the one hundred and thirty-fourth and one hundred and thirty-fifth rules, relative to the privilege of the Hall.—March 1, 1838. And he shall be required at the commencement and close of each session of Congress to take an inventory of all the furniture, books, and other public property in the several committee and other rooms under his charge, and shall report the same to the House; which report shall be referred to the Committee of Accounts, who shall determine the amount for which he shall be held liable for missing articles.—March 2, 1865. It is the duty of the Doorkeeper ten minutes before the hour for the meeting of the House each day, to see that the floor is cleared of all persons except those privileged to remain during the session of the House.—March 31, 1869.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, there was no report made by the Doorkeeper who preceded Mr. Fitzhugh that was ever laid before the Committee of Accounts, as should have been done. I presume that Mr. Fitzhugh took an invoice of the property of the House, but it was never reported to the Committee of Accounts. When Mr. Fitzhugh went out there was no report, and there has been no report from the present occupant of the office showing what he had on hand. Now, if the Doorkeeper will comply with the law and the rule of the House there is no fear that the Committee of Accounts will not do their duty. I cannot tell whether there is anything wrong or not, but if the officer of the House will do his duty you may then place no censure on the Committee of Accounts for a failure to perform, and until this officer does his duty the Committee of Accounts must be exonerated from all blame.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the Committee of Accounts will make diligent inquiry on this subject; that is all I have to say.

Mr. FOSTER. What steps have the Committee of Accounts taken to obtain information in regard to this matter?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the Committee of Accounts will take immediate steps to inquire into the allegations contained in that article. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be, and are hereby, instructed to make a full inquiry into the accounts of the present and previous Doorkeepers of this House touching the public property heretofore in their charge.

Mr. HENDEE. Give them power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. RANDALL. They have every power necessary.

Mr. FORT. As there is some reflection upon the Committee of Accounts, I suggest that this matter be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have entire confidence in your committee, all of us.

Mr. FORT. I hope it will not be made my duty to enter into any of these investigations. I think the Committee on Printing would be a better committee to investigate this matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. In answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] as to what steps have been taken by the Committee of Accounts in regard to this matter——

Mr. FOSTER. To ascertain whether there has been any dereliction of duty on the part of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. The rule which I have had read shows what is the duty of the Doorkeeper and the duty of the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all?

Mr. RANDALL. I move the previous question on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Pending that motion, I move that all debate upon the pending paragraph close in five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no; make it twenty minutes.

Mr. FORT. Will the gentleman allow me to submit a report from the Committee of Accounts?

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot yield now.

Mr. HOLMAN. This subject is well understood, and I hope that ten minutes will be deemed sufficient time to debate it.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by making the time twenty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this bill is to be passed to-day, very little time must be consumed in debate.

Mr. RANDALL. My object in making the motion to amend is this: Three gentlemen have already spoken to me to be allowed time to debate this paragraph, which will be fifteen minutes, and I would like at least the opportunity of making a reply.

Mr. REAGAN. If the House could have heard the remarks made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN,] I would have been content; but it is evident those remarks were not generally heard.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. This is a very important measure, and I hope the time for debate will not be limited.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will be first taken on the longest time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw my motion for ten minutes, and allow the question to be taken on the proposition for twenty minutes.

The motion to limit debate on the pending paragraph to twenty minutes was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL to go into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The pending paragraph of the bill was the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall reserve of the revenues of the District of Columbia a sum sufficient to meet the interest accruing on the 3.65 bonds of the District during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1876, and apply the same to that purpose.

The pending amendment, offered by Mr. RANDALL, was to add to the paragraph the following:

And in case there shall not be a sufficient sum of said revenues in the Treasury of the United States at such time as said interest may be due, then the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to pay said interest, and the same shall be re-imbursed to the Treasury of the United States from time to time as said revenues may be paid into said Treasury, until the whole amount shall have been refunded.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I have never supposed that under any possible conjunction of circumstances I should venture to teach the veteran member from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] anything. But I understood him to say distinctly that the Government of the United States, the people of the United States are not bound for the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia. I want to read him from the bond.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bond is not the law.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. The bond copies the law. I read from the face of the bond, [holding up a 3.65 bond of the District of Columbia:]

The District of Columbia funding bond; guaranteed by the United States of America; the faith of the United States pledged for the interest and principal.

And on the back of the bond is copied from the law, of which I will read only a brief extract:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will by proper proportional appropriation, as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds, as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

Now I do not understand why that bond is treated by Congress and by the Committee on Appropriations as a bastard. It is either the bond of the United States or it is not. As I said here when the interest was to be paid in February last, while the money to pay it, be it remembered, was then in the Treasury, and the payment of the interest was delayed only because the House refused to take the necessary steps to use the money—I said then, let us acknowledge the bond or let us repudiate it; and I say that now.

I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia when and as the same shall hereafter mature, at the Treasury of the United States and at the office of the assistant treasurer in New York.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. A single word more. An eminent London banking-house, having issued a large number of railroad bonds several years ago with their recommendation, gave notice last spring that the coupons of those bonds due in March and September of this year would be paid. The fair and reasonable inference was that after that time they might not be paid. Now the Congress of the United States has acted precisely in that way in respect to these 3.65 bonds, except that they delayed action for five or six weeks in regard to paying the interest due on the 1st day of February last, to the great prejudice of the bonds.

I do not own one of these bonds, and I have no relative who owns one of them, so far as I know. I borrowed this one, [referring to the one in his hand,] and I am sorry to say that on loaning it to an eminent lawyer and member yesterday for a minute or two, he returned it to me immediately, intimating that it had already ruined his reputation. I say that the holders of these bonds are entitled to know whether the Government of the United States, in any sense or measure, repudiates its responsibility for them.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It seems to me that the real duty of Congress is to comply with the law. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has stated that these bonds are not the obligations of the United States, and he has stated the law correctly. They are not the obligation of the people of the United States; but the faith of the people of the United States is pledged for certain legislation. That pledge is as follows:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will by proper proportional appropriation, as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds, as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

Now, if the Congress of the United States has failed to assess upon the District the necessary taxes and to provide the proportional appropriations contemplated in the act, then it is right that we here should make a temporary provision, and that is exactly what has been done by the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. As the bill stands, without that amendment, it is quite certain that the interest on these bonds would not be paid, and the plighted faith of the United States would be violated.

Therefore let us agree to the amendment of the Committee on Appriations; let us pay the interest and then adopt the necessary legislation to have it refunded by taxes upon the District of Columbia. But for one I will not consent, and I hope this House will never consent, that the Government shall take upon its shoulders the payment of the principal and the interest of these bonds except in the way required by the bond itself. Let us keep the bond; let us maintain good faith with the holders of the bonds. Let the interest always be paid either out of the assessments upon the District, or, if those assessments are not made in time, then by a provision such as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations now proposes.

These are not the bonds of the United States; they are the bonds of the District; but for their interest and for the ultimate payment of the principal the faith of the United States is pledged in a specific way. That pledge we have not fulfilled. Therefore let us take the money temporarily from the Treasury and fulfill the pledge as soon as we can.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the prodigality and recklessness with which an enormous debt has been created by this District have attracted the attention of this whole country. The District has been authorized to create a debt; but is this Congress to assume the payment of that debt and its interest? If so, by what authority shall we make the assumption, and impose a portion of this debt of the plundered city of Washington upon the plundered city of New Orleans, or any other city of this Union which has a large debt? It is said this must be done because it is so "nominated in the bond." I desire to call attention in the first place to the nature of that bond, the import of which, it seems to me, has not been correctly stated to this committee. What is it that the faith of the Government is pledged to do? The law itself answers that question:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will by proper proportional appropriations, as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property of said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds, as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal at maturity.

Now, the obligation of the Government (and that is all to which its faith is pledged) is that it will make appropriations for its proportional part of this debt, as provided by law; that it will levy taxes to enable the District to pay its proportion of this debt. What is the amendment? In the first place let us look at the provision reported by the committee:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall reserve of the revenues of the District of Columbia a sum sufficient to meet the interest accruing on the 3.65 bonds of the District during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1876, and apply the same to that purpose.

That is the provision reported by the committee, which seems to be sufficient to meet the requirements of the case. But it is proposed to amend that by appropriating out of the Federal Treasury the money to pay this interest. [Here the hammer fell.] I would have liked to make one further remark.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Texas to proceed?

Mr. HOLMAN. If so, it must come out of the twenty minutes allowed for this debate.

Mr. HARTRIDGE. Then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HARTRIDGE.]

Mr. HARTRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, in the view which I take of this case it makes no difference whether, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] says, this District has been injured and robbed by the issue of these bonds or not. The Government of the United States put it in the power of the parties who issued these bonds to make that issue. Now, according to a well-established principle of law and of equity, if one of two innocent parties is to suffer by reason of the fraudulent acts of a third party, that innocent party must suffer who has put it in the power of the third party to commit the injury. The United States Government, then, is bound to the extent of its pledge—the pledge contained in the law which has been read—to provide not only for the payment of the interest upon these bonds, but for a sinking fund which shall eventually pay the principal of these bonds.

Mark the language of the law. It does not say that the Government gives its pledge to raise revenues alone by taxes upon the property of the District to pay this interest; it says that it shall by proportional appropriations and by taxation make such provision. The two go together; both are contemplated; the act contemplates the fact that the Government of the United States shall appropriate from the Treasury money to pay the interest upon these bonds.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania contemplates what? That in the event there shall not be means in the local treasury of this District to pay this interest for the coming fiscal year then the deficiency shall be made up by appropriations from the Treasury of the United States, in strict accordance with the act which gentlemen have heard read, in strict accordance with the faith of the Government pledged to the people of the country, pledged to the people of the District, pledged to the purchasers and holders of the bonds, that this Government will in one way or the other see that this interest is paid. If the interest is not paid by revenues derived from local taxation, then the amendment provides that it shall be paid from money appropriated out of the United States Treasury. This is a means in strict accordance with the act itself, in strict accordance with the faith of the Government pledged to this payment; and, sir, it is demanded by every principle of justice and of right, by every principle of honor, that this money should be so appropriated and paid.

It makes no difference, as I have said, by what means these bonds were issued. I am free to confess that I believe some of these bonds have been issued illegally, issued for purposes not contemplated by this act. But the Government has placed in the hands of these parties the power to issue these bonds; and for that reason it concerns the honor of this Government that the innocent holders of the bonds shall not suffer by the act of the Government's agents.

I maintain that irrespective of every consideration of party or anything of that kind we are bound as representatives, not only of the people of this country, but of their pledged honor and faith, to adopt at least the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and see that this interest is properly paid according to the language and spirit and honest obligation of the bond which the Government has issued through its agents.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia has so clearly and so fully stated this proposition that he has left nothing for me to say in advocacy of my amendment. The motive I had in view was a single one, and that was not to allow during our absence from this Capitol those bonds to go to default, or rather that the payment of the interest upon those bonds should not fail. I was unwilling that further criticism should be made against Congress in this respect. In order to make sure I went to the utmost limit of our power as a committee; that is, I covered the fiscal year. I do not extend it to all time, because I thought that part of the duty belonged to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. REAGAN. This discussion, with the exception of five minutes, has been on that side of the question. Why should we not in good faith do precisely that which is contemplated by the law, and that is, provide for levying taxes and the payment of this interest as the law requires, instead of coming here and putting the whole burden for the payment of the interest of those 3.65 bonds upon the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not put the whole of it upon the Treasury of the United States. This does not put any of it upon the Treasury of the United States. Whatever money shall be advanced under my amendment it is provided shall be refunded to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues accruing to this District. If this House taxes at the rate of $2 a hundred or even $1.75 a hundred upon the taxable property of this District, I do not think the Government need pay a single dollar of this $501,000 during the fiscal year. But I do say we should not leave to doubt and uncertainty the payment of the interest on those 3.65 bonds.

Mr. BUCKNER. One word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time to which the debate has been limited has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments are pending already, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the amendment to that amendment by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.] Further amendment, therefore, is not in order under the rule.

Mr. CHITTENDEN's amendment to the amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment, I think, is open to the point of order that it is entirely new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will recognize the fact without being reminded by the Chair that the amendment to the amendment has been discussed and it is too late to raise the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear it read until this moment at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. REAGAN. And not one single member alluded to it in discussion.

Mr. RANDALL. It was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was read as part of the gentleman's speech.

Mr. REAGAN. But never from the Clerk's desk as the pending proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. My belief is that it was read at the Clerk's desk. It certainly was proposed by the gentleman, and has been pending and under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the amendment was read at the Clerk's desk by direction of the Chair.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I withdraw the amendment if you will allow me to say that the object of the proposition was merely to make permanent the payment of this interest, whereas the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] provides only for the payment of the interest during the next fiscal year.

Mr. REAGAN. And both make it a debt upon the people.

Mr. BUCKNER. One is in accordance with the law, while the other is not.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend so as to strike out the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and in lieu thereof to insert "$501,000." I want to make the amendment specific, and to fix the exact sum which we are told by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will be required to pay this interest.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. RANDALL's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were ayes 110, noes not counted.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are entitled to vote on this in the House, and therefore I do not demand any further count.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I now ask that we go back to the reserved paragraph in reference to the publishing of advertisements and executive proclamations and treaties in two daily papers published in this District. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and myself have agreed upon a substitute for that paragraph, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all executive proclamations and treaties and all notices, advertisements, and proposals for contracts which by law are required to be published by newspapers in the District of Columbia shall be hereafter published in only two newspapers in said District, to be of opposite politics, and designated by the head of the Department from which said advertisements are issued.

Mr. RANDALL. I have agreed to that as a substitute for the paragraph which was passed over a little while ago.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. We had unanimous consent to go back to that paragraph. Why does the gentleman object?

Mr. HOAR. I did not propose to speak on this, but as the gentleman asks why I object I will say that although I agree in the gross abuse of the public printing for almost generations, yet, recognizing in the public law of a difference of political parties as entitled to office, the approval by law that a man should have such politics before he shall have an office seems to me a violation of all just principles of legislation.

Mr. KASSON. I have only to say this: It follows the policy in my own and other States in the Union designing to get general circulation of the object of the advertisement, irrespective of the policy. This is a substitute for a clause of the bill and is, in my judgment, a great improvement upon it.

Mr. HOAR. I thought this related to the choice of the Public Printer.

Mr. KASSON. O, no; it is in reference to the publishing of advertisements in newspapers in this city.

Mr. HOAR. Then the remarks I made have no application, and I withdraw them.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide a full record of births, marriages, and deaths in the District of Columbia, and for a general sanitary inspection, which shall include the prevention of the exposure for sale of unwholesome food and the daily inspection of streets, alleys, yards, and all places where nuisances may exist injurious to health, and for the removal thereof, and of all nuisances, including night-soil, beyond the limits of the District of Columbia, and to prevent domestic animals from running at large, and for the protection of the public parks and grounds, $15,920: Provided, That an equal sum shall be paid out of the treasury of the District of Columbia, the combined sum to be expended as follows: For salaries of three members of the board of health, at $500 each; treasurer, (ex officio member,) $500; secretary and attorney of board, $1,000; medical sanitary inspector, (ex officio member,) $1,000; registrar of vital statistics, $1,000; health officer, $2,500; four clerks, $4,800; five sanitary inspectors, $6,000; one pound-master, $1,000, and one messenger, $720; and for rent, $1,320; printing, advertising, stationery, and blanks, $1,000; transportation, $7,500; laborers and pound-men, $600; disinfectants, $500; postage, fuel, and lights, $400; and contingent expenses, $500: Provided further, That the treasurer shall be ex officio a member of said board, as well as the secretary, registrar of vital statistics, and the medical sanitary inspector; and the secretary shall perform the duties of attorney of said board without additional compensation: And provided further, That in case of the prevalence of an epidemic within the District of Columbia the commissioners of the District may expend, through the board of health, such sum as they may think proper, not exceeding the sum of $10,000. And so much of section 72 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia as provides for the number of persons constituting the board of health or conflicts with the provisions of the foregoing organization is hereby repealed.

Mr. WILLARD. I am instructed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from the words "expended as follows," in line 206, down to and including the words "health officer, $2,500," in line 212, and insert:

For salaries of five members of the board of health $500 each—treasurer, secretary, attorney, registrar of vital statistics, who shall each be selected from the board, $500 each, in addition to salary as members of the board: Provided, That any two of the above-named offices may be filled by the same person at the discretion of the board; medical sanitary inspector, $1,000; health officer, $2,000.

Strike out all after the words "and contingent expenses, $500," in line 221, down to and including the word "compensation," in line 226.

Strike out all in the paragraph after the words "not exceeding the sum of $10,000," in line 231.

Mr. WILLARD. I am instructed by the Committee for the District of Columbia——

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go.

Mr. RANDALL. I have examined that amendment, and it is all right. I do not desire that time shall be taken unnecessarily in debate.

Mr. WILLARD. Very well.

The amendment of Mr. WILLARD was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to what seems to be an omission in line 218. There is an item there "transportation, $7,500." It ought to be "transportation of offal."

Mr. RANDALL. That is what it means.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend by inserting the words "of offal" after the word "transportation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

Revenue-cutter service:

For the pay of captains, lieutenants, engineers, and pilots, and for rations for the same, and for pay of petty officers, seamen, cooks, stewards, boys, coal-passers, and firemen, and for rations for the same, and for fuel for vessels, repairs and outfits for same, ship-chandlery and engineers' stores for same, traveling expenses of officers traveling on duty under orders from the Treasury Department, commutation of quarters, and contingent expenses, including wharfage, towage, dockage, freight, advertising, surveys, and miscellaneous expenses which cannot be included under special heads, $747,647.19, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the same purpose for the service for the fiscal year 1874, which is hereby continued and rendered available for the year ending June, 30, 1877.

Mr. HARTZELL. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 301 as follows:

Provided, That hereafter, upon the occurring of a vacancy in the grade of third lieutenant in the revenue-marine service, the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint a cadet, not less than eighteen nor more than twenty-five years of age, with rank next below that of third lieutenant, whose pay shall be three-fourths that of a third lieutenant, and who shall not be appointed to a higher grade until he shall have served a satisfactory probationary term of two years and passed the examination required by the regulations of said service; and upon the promotion of such cadet another may be appointed in his stead; but the whole number of third lieutenants and cadets shall at no time exceed the number of third lieutenants now authorized by law.

Mr. HARTZELL. I addressed a letter to the Chief of the Revenue Marine Bureau, asking his opinion upon this question, and his reply I presume it will be proper to have read, together with my letter to him.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington D. C., June 13, 1876.

SIR: Please indorse on the inclosed proposed proviso your opinion and any recommendation in relation thereto, suggested by your experience as Chief of Bureau.

Should the proviso become a law, would the service be greatly improved by such an apprentice system and would actual economy be the ultimate result?

Respectfully,

WM. HARTZELL.

CHIEF OF REVENUE-MARINE BUREAU,
Treasury Department.

Provided, That hereafter upon the occurring of a vacancy in the grade of third lieutenant in the revenue-marine service, the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint a cadet, not less than eighteen nor more than twenty-five years of age, with rank next below that of third lieutenant, whose pay shall be three-fourths that of a third lieutenant, and who shall not be appointed to a higher grade until he shall have served a satisfactory probationary term of two years and passed the examination required by the regulation of said service; and upon the promotion of such cadet another may be appointed in his stead; but the whole number of third lieutenants and cadets shall at no time exceed the number of third lieutenants now authorized by law.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 16, 1876.

The enactment of the within proviso would certainly be productive of economy, as a saving of $300 per annum would be effected in each case of the substitution of a cadet for a third lieutenant.

It would also establish an apprentice system, in my judgment long needed, which would greatly improve the discipline and efficiency of the service and afford a superior class of officers.

S. I. KIMBALL,
Chief of the Revenue-Marine Division.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that no additional expenditure is involved in this amendment and it is a change of law which the Department desires. Is that so?

Mr. HARTZELL. It is. It involves a reduction of $300 a year in each case.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the amendment is adopted I desire to say that it is proposed to change existing law. It appears to me that, before we enter on a new system like this, creating a new class of officers, this proposition should be considered by some committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas make the point of order on the amendment?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not too late to make the point of order after the letter has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can hardly believe it is too late to make the point of order when the gentleman offering the amendment has not himself discussed it.

Mr. FOSTER. He asked to have the letter read and it was read.

The CHAIRMAN. He asked to have the letter read as explanatory of the amendment he had offered. The Chair does not see how the point of order could be made until the purpose of the amendment was understood.

Mr. FOSTER. The reading of a letter has always been held to be debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot reasonably hold that it is too late for a point of order to be made on an amendment when the gentleman offering the amendment is called upon to yield the floor to allow the point of order to be made before he himself engages in discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. He engages in discussion when the letter is read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is well aware of the fact that the reading of letters constitutes a part of the discussion of measures. But he cannot believe, when a gentleman offered an amendment, and desired to have read a letter from a responsible officer of the Government in explanation of it, that the point of order should be cut off, which the gentleman from Texas has risen to make.

Mr. HARTZELL. In reference to the point of order, I will state that there are now in the service thirty-four third lieutenants. Their pay is $1,200 per year each. This proviso is that hereafter each vacancy is to be filled by the appointment of a cadet not less than eighteen nor more than twenty-five years of age, and that for two years he is to receive three-fourths pay, which will be $900, a reduction of $300 per year for each cadet that is appointed for this service. At the expiration of the two years he would have to be examined, and if he came up to the requirements of that examination he would then be promoted to third lieutenant, and then the vacancy caused by his promotion would be filled by another cadet. But under no circumstances, as required in this proviso, can the number exceed thirty-four. And if the whole number could be now substituted, that is, if thirty-four cadets could be substituted for the thirty-four third lieutenants, there would be a reduction of $10,200 per annum in expenditures. This is certainly in the line of retrenchment, and Mr. Kimball's letter shows that it would be productive of much good to the service. It is known to many persons that many of these third lieutenants in the revenue service are old men, worn out in the merchant-marine service, but through the influence of members of Congress and Senators they obtained these appointments; and the object of my amendment is to secure a more efficient service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is disposed to believe that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARTZELL] does look to retrenchment.

Mr. REAGAN. I have only one word to say upon the point of order. I regret very much to make it upon my friend from Illinois; but this is a proposition to retrench by adding to the number of Federal officers who are to be paid out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. HARTZELL. This proposes no addition to the force.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that in addition to these officers who are to be promoted there are to be appointed a number of cadets. Is not that an addition to the number of officers? Is it not an increase of expenditures? The reason given for this increase of officers and new expenses is because of the appointment of old and broken-down men. Surely it is not in the line of reform to increase the expenses of the Government and leave inefficient supernumeraries in the service.

Mr. HURLBUT. I would like to hear the proviso read in regard to increasing the number of officers.

The Clerk again read the proviso.

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire to say that the number of officers is not increased, and that the pay of a cadet is three-fourths of that of a third lieutenant; and the amendment therefore is evidently not subject to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is sufficiently advised to rule upon the point of order. The Chair is disposed to regard the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois as not looking to an increase of expenditures, and therefore that the point of order does not apply. The Chair proposes to leave it to the committee to decide the question as they may deem best.

The question was taken on Mr. HARTZELL'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

JUDICIARY.

For defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; and also for jurors and witnesses and expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States; for the safe-keeping of prisoners; and for defraying the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of the act of February 28, 1871, relative to the right of citizens to vote, or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, $2,500,000: Provided, That the maximum compensation allowed to marshals and regulated by section 841 of the Revised Statutes, from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, shall not exceed $6,000 a year, or that rate for any time less than a year; and marshals are forbid issuing any certificates or due-bills to witnesses, jurors, guards, deputies, or others for fees or services, and the payment of any such certificates or due-bills is forbidden by any Department of the Government; and no advance of money shall be made to any marshal whose accounts have not been adjusted at the Treasury for a period of more than six months; and hereafter no charge for mileage shall be allowed to any marshal, and, in lieu of mileage, marshals shall only be paid for their actual traveling expenses incurred in the performance of their official duties, to be rendered upon oath. The allowance to any deputy shall not exceed $5 per day while actually employed, or exceeding $1,200 per year for services rendered by such deputy, and said sums may be reduced below the said rates by the Attorney-General whenever, in his opinion, said reductions should be made: Provided, That all of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections, and deputy and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections, are hereby repealed.

Mr. CANDLER. I offer the following amendment. I move in line 308 to strike out the following words:

And for defraying the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of the act of February 28, 1871, relative to the right of citizens to vote, or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

I move also to amend that clause in line 308 by inserting between the word "States" and "for" the word "and."

These words should be stricken out from this proviso at the end of the paragraph, because the words are meaningless if intended only to cover the expenses which may be legitimately incurred under the act of 1871.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make a point of order upon the proviso at the end of this paragraph; and I do not think that debate should go on until the point of order is decided.

Mr. RANDALL. It is too late.

Mr. CONGER. No, it is not too late. I make the point of order on the proviso that it is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. It is too late; points of order were not reserved upon this bill.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order upon the proviso, and I wish to make it before the discussion proceeds. It is not too late to make it; and this is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that it is too late to raise any question about this now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan, and may as well do it now, so as to cover all cases of the same kind which may arise hereafter. The point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan is too late, because this bill was committed to the Committee by the House, no points of order being reserved upon it; and therefore under the rules the Chair cannot sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. According to that ruling no point of order can be made upon the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule expressly states that unless points of order are reserved before the bill is committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union they cannot be made in committee.

Mr. CONGER. I was not in the House. I was absent on other duty by order of the House when this bill was reported; but if points of order were not reserved on the bill, I am free to say that gentlemen were negligent of their duty.

Mr. RANDALL. It may be that the points of order should have been reserved, but they were not.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know whether points of order were reserved or not on the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. My recollection is that they were not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no recollection of points of order being reserved on this bill.

Mr. CONGER. I think, then, it is the first appropriation bill ever introduced into this House upon which points of order were not reserved.

Mr. RANDALL. It is an exception.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that no points of order were reserved on this bill, and such is the recollection of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. That is in accordance with my own recollection.

Mr. FOSTER. I recollect when the bill was introduced; it was brought in in a great hurry, and I think the gentlemen on this side of the House overlooked the necessity of reserving points of order; but I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought to take advantage of that neglect.

Mr. CONGER. I submit to gentlemen that it would be better for them to allow this point of order to be raised and ruled upon. By the yielding of this House to the reporting of this bill and its reference to the Committee of the Whole without points of order being reserved upon it and its consideration without having been read, it is in this position either by carelessness or inadvertence or by some trick, one or the other. No man presumes that this bill could have been introduced and referred or read through without points of order being reserved on several of these paragraphs.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill was reported just as any other appropriation bill is reported. I have discovered upon an examination of the Journal this morning that no points of order were reserved upon it, and I mean to take advantage of that.

Mr. CONGER. You do mean to take advantage of that?

Mr. RANDALL. So far as concerns what was reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman mean to take advantage of what passed by his urgency in bringing forward this bill?

Mr. RANDALL. No assent was given, for I had the right to report the bill at any time.

Mr. CONGER. But there must have been unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RANDALL. It was reported just as all other appropriation bills are.

Mr. CONGER. I know; but the reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. RANDALL. Just as in the case of other appropriation bills.

Mr. CONGER. This bill has never been read in full.

Mr. RANDALL. It has been read the same as other appropriation bills have been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon information furnished by the Clerk and upon an examination of the Journal, it appears that no points of order were reserved upon this bill. Under the peremptory rule of the House and in accordance with the unbroken practice of the House, the Chair is bound to overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] by reason of the omission to reserve points of order upon this bill.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to the ruling of the Chair; I have no doubt it is correct. But in view of the fact that members of this House interested in this proposition were absent by order of the House, as I was——

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the point of order may be entertained and ruled upon.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. In view of the present ruling of the Chair it is important that the Clerk should know, and all of us would like to know, whether the clause in relation to Mr. Green, contestee, is in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph referred to by the gentleman is out of the bill by a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. KASSON. The Chair sustained the point of order made against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made upon that clause of the bill by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] which point of order was sustained by the Chair and the clause was excluded from the bill.

Mr. KASSON. But the gentleman from Massachusetts withdrew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked leave to withdraw it, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] objected to the withdrawal, and the point of order was not withdrawn.

Mr. KASSON. But now that through an examination of the RECORD it is ascertained that the point of order was not well taken, the paragraph should be restored to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to going back.

Mr. SPRINGER. The decision of the Chair was not correct, the point of order not having been reserved upon the bill; and it appears to me that the Chair had no more right to strike out that paragraph than any other member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph is not in the bill. It was stricken out under a ruling of the Chair made at the time, which ruling the Chair has since modified upon another paragraph in accordance with the precedents of the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. I think the Chair is mistaken in his recollection of that case. I believe the point of order was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] is mistaken. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asked leave to withdraw it, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] objected to the withdrawal. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CANDLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANDLER. There are no expenses under the act of 1871 which are legitimate if the proviso of this paragraph remains in the bill; for the provisions in the Revised Statutes under the title referred to, in relation to the registration of voters, the appointment of supervisors, and the appointment of deputy marshals, cover all the expenses authorized by the act of 1871.

There is nothing in the act of 1871 except provisions for the appointment of supervisors, for the appointment of the chief supervisor, for the appointment of deputy marshals, and the prescribing of the duties of those several officers, and then a section which provides for the payment of the expenses thereby incurred. Therefore, to leave in the bill the words that I propose to strike out of this paragraph is but an excuse for lawlessness and an invitation to plunder.

There is nothing in the act of 1871 which is necessary to secure to any voter the right to vote. That act was passed for a purpose, that purpose being not to secure the right to vote to anybody, but to prevent men from voting. The act of 1871 is amendatory of an act which does provide security to the citizen in his right to vote; but it re-enacts, with some change only, a single section of the act of 1870. It contains a number of sections providing a system by which voters are to be intimidated, by which fraudulent registration is to be effected, by which men are to be driven from the polls, and others who attempt wrongfully to vote are permitted to vote whether they vote according to law or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HURLBUT. The question which is raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CANDLER] is to be considered in connection with this proviso at the end of the section:

Provided, That all of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections and deputy and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections, are hereby repealed.

As I understand, the effect of the legislation proposed by the Committee on Appropriations in this bill is to remove all the safeguards of elections which have existed since 1865 and 1871; all supervision on the part of the United States of any elections, whether for President, Vice-President, Representative in Congress, or any other election affecting directly the interests of the United States. This sweeping provision is designed to strike out nearly the whole of title 26 of the Revised Statutes. By the proviso at the end of this paragraph twenty sections of the existing law are struck out. Within my memory or reading, there has been no attempt at such a sweeping reversal of the whole policy and conduct of the Government as is attempted in this measure; and it comes in such a form that under the rules, as expounded by the Chair, we are precluded from any free and full discussion upon it.

The provisions of law proposed to be repealed are, in the opinion of the great majority of the people of this country, the only safeguards for fair elections, not only at the South but in the great cities of the North. Every man who knows anything of the history of the country knows that the only pretense at fair elections in the great city of New York has been under this system of registration and supervision. And this attempted reversal of the whole policy of the Government since 1871, to say the least, is brought here in a form which does not admit of any fair consideration. It is not brought here, as it ought to have been, manfully and above-board, in a bill plainly showing its purpose, a bill referred to one of the legal committees of this House and determined upon by them with full opportunity for debate and for the free expression of opinion. But in the last hours of this session and by a bill pretending to be one of "retrenchment, economy, and reform"—the only watch-cries of the other side, with no reality in them—these great safeguards approved by the American people, by which the Government of the United States is able to exercise some supervision for the repression of fraud and violence in elections directly affecting the seats of members on this floor and the tenure of office of the President and Vice-President, are to be abrogated. I hope the pending amendment will not be agreed to and that an amendment which I propose to offer shortly, to strike out the proviso at the end of this paragraph, will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Both the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CANDLER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] give an undue importance to this paragraph. It has been inserted simply because we desire to save $160,000 which has heretofore been expended for "registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections and deputy and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections."

I disagree entirely with the gentleman from Georgia in reference to the propriety of adopting his amendment. There are other features of the law referred to in the proviso—title 26 of the Revised Statutes—which will still continue in force and will require money for their execution. But we deemed $160,000, the probable amount heretofore expended in the appointment of supervisors mainly in the northern cities, an unnecessary expenditure; and this proviso was proposed simply in the direction of economy. It should not receive, I think, any political significance whatever.

Generally, and I believe in every case where these supervisors have been appointed, the State laws are adequate, as we think, to protect voters and secure the proper polling and counting of the votes. I can see nothing in this proviso which interferes with quiet and honest elections throughout the United States, especially in the South.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that any legislation proposed in this House has struck me with so much surprise as the insertion of this proviso in this bill. The people of this country have been gratified for the last few years to know that there was a law which attempted to preserve the purity of elections; that it was being enforced, and that its tendency was good, and only good from year to year.

And now on the eve of an exciting election, involving all public offices from President down, we find in this bill—a bill printed hastily, reported but a day or two since, laid upon the desks of members when the first reading was commenced, without an opportunity for examination in any respect whatever—a provision by which this committee publish to the people of the United States that they are willing at the very commencement of the political strife of this year to take away all the safeguards of a pure election.

Sir, I challenge the examination of the American people for the kind of legislation proposed by the majority of this House. I challenge the democrats of this House to repeal in this underhanded way the safeguards which the people have demanded should be thrown around the ballot-box. I call upon the democracy of this House, who pretend to be in favor of purity of elections, to pause ere by one stroke, in a proviso of this sort, they throw aside the safeguards which have been sanctioned by all parties and by all honest men in the United States for the last five or six years.

The anomaly is here presented of a committee stretching its power beyond all limits heretofore known, and undertaking to sweep from the statute-books whole volumes of legislation by one simple proviso. I tell gentlemen they must beware how they tamper with the probable purity of elections this year. Returning to my place from the performance of a duty assigned to me by this House, and having now the first opportunity to see this bill, I find in it this proviso sweeping away the whole system of registration, supervision, and purity of elections. I warn gentlemen that they cannot in this underhanded way destroy a law which has met with the universal favor of all honest men in the country, and to that I defy contradiction here or anywhere throughout the land.

Mr. COOK. Will the gentleman permit me one question?

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish to be interrupted in the word or two more I have to say. I have asked the democracy in this House to permit the point of order to be raised against this provision, that we may have a ruling upon it, and I have been refused.

I have asked the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—if he is as honest as he pretends to be and this amendment is as harmless as he says it is—I have asked him to let it go through the usual form of being ruled upon by the Chair as to the propriety of coming in this bill, and he has refused.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Chairman, I should not have risen in my place at this time but for the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] who is upon the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice with myself. In that committee we have taken considerable testimony in reference to the purity of elections talked of by the gentleman from Michigan, and in reference to the beneficial results which are said to flow from the appointment of these deputy marshals, supervisors, and chief supervisors; and it seems to me it does not come at this time with proper grace from that gentleman, in view of the sworn testimony which has been taken before that committee, to say the section of the law proposed to be repealed meets with the approbation of all honest men to whatever political party they may belong. I wish to say, sir, that instead of meeting with the commendation of all honest people in the city of New York and elsewhere, that provision of law has been used by those men for the purpose of intimidating voters at the polls and keeping them away from the exercise of the elective franchise. The committee of which I speak, sir, I trust, will soon have an opportunity of reporting to this House the testimony which they have taken in regard to the manner in which these supervisors have conducted themselves.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has very properly stated here that it is not the intent by the introduction of this provision to the appropriation bill to repeal the whole of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, but simply to repeal it so far as it relates to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of election and deputy and special deputy marshals.

Mr. RANDALL. That is to repeal the expensive and useless features.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes; the expensive feature of the law from which no benefits are derived.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the manner in which this thing has been conducted is substantially this: A lot of deputy marshals are appointed, a lot of election supervisors are appointed, they are paid large sums of money for their services, and carriages are furnished to them.

A MEMBER. At what price?

Mr. COCHRANE. They are paid $5 a day, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has correctly stated. They are paid by the Government. In addition to that carriages are furnished to them, and some of these deputy marshals themselves under oath ridiculed the idea of a carriage being necessary for the purpose of properly conducting the business. Enormous bills are presented, extraordinary accounts against the Government of the United States. Enormous sums of money outside of the provisions of law are demanded.

Now for my part, Mr. Chairman, I see nothing "underhanded" or "sneaking" in a committee of this House endeavoring to save the money of the people of this country. This House has determined in every possible way to prevent lavish expenditure of the public money. They propose to have pure elections. They will do no act, and I am sure I can speak for myself when I say I will consent to no act, which will in any way interfere with the purity of elections throughout this country; but I stand here to declare myself in favor of a reduction of useless expenditures which have been going on in this country.

Mr. JOYCE rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that debate be closed.

Mr. CONGER. I do not wonder the gentleman asks that debate be closed.

Mr. RANDALL. I am used to that.

Mr. JOYCE. I have the floor.

Now, a word in regard to this matter. This proviso which the Committee on Appropriations have incorporated into this bill proposes, as has been said here in this debate, to strike down and strike out from our statutes and from our law every national safeguard which has been cast by Congress around our elections. There may have been abuses under this law; it may be necessary even that amendments should be made to it; but is that any reason why this whole legislation should be stricken out?

What is the history of this matter in this country? What is the history of this matter in the great city of New York? Do you not know, Mr. Chairman, and is it not known to every member of the House, that such a state of things existed only a few years ago in the city of New York as mantled the cheek of every citizen of this country with shame? Elections in that city became a perfect farce. It was carried to such a degree of iniquity and corruption that the people rose in their majesty and might. What was the result? I appeal to gentlemen from New York who know in regard to it; I appeal to gentlemen who have attended in New York in the taking of testimony as committee-men, to know whether I am not correct? What was the result? The result was, as I have stated, that the people rose in their majesty and in their might and took this matter into their own hands. What did they do? They got together and appointed a committee, the memorable committee of seventy, and that committee sent its members here to procure legislation in order that they should be protected in their rights. Men were smitten down at noon-day in attempting to go to the polls. No respectable, no decent man could go the polls and vote in the city of New York without being intimidated, without being in danger of life or limb. The result was this very legislation we are now talking about, and which the party in power in this House are now attempting to strike from the statute-book; these very acts were passed by Congress for the very purpose of protecting the rights of voters not only in that city, but throughout the South and in other cities of this great country.

And, sir, I want to say one word further.

Mr. KASSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. KASSON. I offer an amendment to the amendment. The pending amendment is to strike out. I move to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And for defraying the expenses of protecting the purity of the elective franchise as provided in title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The first and evident reason for this amendment is that the committee refer in the text of the bill to an extinct act. All that remains of that act is in the Revised Statutes, and my amendment is designed to perfect the text of the bill as proposed by the committee. I am, therefore, in this amendment with the Committee on Appropriations.

But, sir, I rose for an additional purpose, and that is to call the attention of gentlemen on both sides of the House to the character of the issue which is to be made and is made by the propositions submitted to the House. On the one hand, the Revised Statutes expressly provide for the purity of the elective franchise in its relation to the national elections. The proposition of the committee is, immediately before the great national election which is to secure a President of the United States for four years and a House of Representatives for two years, so to modify the law that these rules established to secure the right of exercising the franchise to every authorized voter shall be demolished and swept from the statute-book.

What is the conclusion to be drawn from such a proposition when made immediately preceding an election? The committee tell us, and let us treat them fairly, that they made this proposition for the purpose of saving $160,000. If it be just to attack and abolish the guards of purity that surround our elections to save $160,000, why not save $2,500,000 by a proposition to abolish your courts and your trials in the courts for the next year? If our franchise as freemen and electors is not worth $160,000 to protect it, abolish your courts which convict the criminals whom the present law is designed to arrest and bring before them.

Sir, I submit that this cannot be the real object which this committee has; the object of saving $160,000 in the proposed repeal of the law of elections.

For what does a member record himself in this House when he casts a vote to repeal, or to refuse an appropriation to carry out, this law to protect the elective franchise? He says practically that he wants no guards for the purity of election. And when he says that, what class of men is he relying upon, what class of votes is he seeking to carry the next election? Not those who are registered honestly. Not the men who make an honest oath to justify their casting of a ballot when they are challenged. But it is that class of men who present themselves unlawfully, who are criminals in the face of the franchise law, who demand a right to vote which does not belong to them, and who rob honest men of their lawful election.

I put it squarely. I believe it is the issue, as we vote one way or the other, between an honest election and a dishonest election. And, as the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] has said, it is not a question that concerns the South alone, or the North alone, the East alone, or the West alone. It concerns you and me and our constituents in all parts of the country that the men who govern us should be the men who are elected honestly by the people of the United States.

Mr. DURHAM. I rise to oppose the amendment. I apprehend that most of the gentlemen who discuss this question misapprehend the real point at issue. Gentlemen are discussing this question on the floor of the House as if this affected every single individual in the United States. Now, the portion of this statute proposed to be repealed by the Committee on Appropriations only affects cities having more than 20,000 inhabitants.

Mr. KASSON. That is where the fraud is. It is usually found in those cities.

Mr. DURHAM. Ah! my dear sir, I will respond to that in a moment. Why is it the gentleman speaks so eloquently about the large cities? I will controvert the position assumed by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] and say there are as many or more frauds committed throughout the length and breadth of the rural districts than there are in very many of the cities.

Mr. KASSON. No, no.

Mr. DURHAM. Why is it that your whole registration law has been concentrated on the city of New York? I am sorry to be compelled to make this statement that you have concentrated the whole of the force of this registration law and the illegal appropriation of moneys on the city of New York and other democratic cities throughout the United States. Why is that the case?

Mr. JOYCE. Because New York is the most corrupt city.

Mr. KASSON. Because there are the most frauds there.

Mr. DURHAM. Why is it you have not sent your registrars to the city of Philadelphia, where there is twice as much corruption and fraud as ever were perpetrated in the city of New York? I undertake to say that so far as this proviso is concerned, without committing myself to tacking that species of legislation on appropriation bills, of all the measures that have been proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, I most heartily approve of this. And if we cannot get it through in the usual way, I say let it be attached to this appropriation bill; because there is no more fruitful source of intimidation and fraud, as is proved by the investigation before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, than this registration system.

So far from protecting the elective franchise, you have sent these emissaries into these States who have absolutely issued warrants for the purpose of intimidating men who were as legal and lawful voters as much so as the gentleman from Iowa or myself. Men hired by the political leagues that exist in the great city of New York actually issued five hundred warrants in one instance to keep them from voting.

Mr. JOYCE. They ought to have issued five thousand.

Mr. DURHAM. Of these five hundred men against whom warrants were issued only twenty-odd dared to approach the polls, because they were afraid of being arrested and tried by that commissioner. And so far as I have investigated the matter, I undertake to say that instead of protecting the elective franchise the law has been the best protection of fraud and corruption ever conceived or perpetrated upon an intelligent people.

Mr. CANDLER obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw his amendment?

Mr. KASSON. I cannot withdraw my amendment; I wish the vote of the committee upon it.

Mr. CANDLER. If the gentleman withdraws his amendment I will renew it.

Mr. KASSON. I will withdraw it in order to enable the gentleman from Georgia to be heard, on condition that he will renew it, for I wish to keep it before the committee.

Mr. CANDLER. This discussion has been directed to the proviso which has been proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. The question is upon striking out all the words in reference to the act of 1871. Objection is made to that, because it is said that this is striking down all the legislation from 1865 to the present time in reference to guarding the purity of elections. This is a mistake. The act of 1871 does not provide for the protection and guarding either of the registration or the voting. It is an act in order to protect the citizen in his right to vote, and there is no provision made here in this bill in reference to the act of 1871.

This is an effort to strike down expenditures for the employment of deputy marshals and supervisors of election. The act of 1871 involves no expense except the expenses that pertain to the registration of voters and the employment of supervisors and deputy marshals. If I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations he seems to think that there is some expense of this sort. There is no effort, as has been stated by the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Illinois, to strike down the safeguards to the purity and fairness of elections, but there is an effort to prevent men who are not connected with the courts of the United States from interfering with the registration and interfering with voting. The proviso repeals only those provisions of the Revised Statutes which have relation to the appointment of supervisors and deputy marshals to be used in the management of registration and elections.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that debate now close upon this paragraph.

Mr. JOYCE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I move, then, that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 97, noes 57.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SCALES having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill; and, pending that motion, I move that all debate be closed in half a minute.

Mr. HOAR. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to close debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought you wanted this bill disposed of.

Mr. HOAR. This is to be a political issue and we want the record made, and let the other side take the responsibility.

Mr. RANDALL. I guess we can take the responsibility.

Mr. HOAR. You have to take it whether you want to or not.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. We propose that you shall take it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RAINEY. Before the question is put upon this matter, I desire to make a proposition to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate; I believe the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 75, not voting 93; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1846) authorizing the retirement of Colonel W. H. Emory with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general;

A bill (H. R. No. 1989) granting a pension to Robert Cavanaugh;

A bill (H. R. No. 2849) for the relief of William Rule, postmaster at Knoxville, Tennessee.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 823) for the relief of John G. Taylor, of Annapolis, Maryland.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The pending paragraph of the bill was the following:

JUDICIARY.

For defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; and also for jurors and witnesses and expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, for prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States; for the safe-keeping of prisoners; and for defraying the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of the act of February 28, 1871, relative to the right of citizens to vote, or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, $2,500,000: Provided, That the maximum compensation allowed to marshals and regulated by section 841 of the Revised Statutes, from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, shall not exceed $5,000 a year, or that rate for any time less than a year; and marshals are forbid issuing any certificates or due-bills to witnesses, jurors, guards, deputies, or others for fees or services, and the payment of any such certificates or due-bills is forbidden by any Department of the Government; and no advance of money shall be made to any marshal whose accounts have not been adjusted at the Treasury for a period of more than six months; and hereafter no charge for mileage shall be allowed to any marshal, and in lieu of mileage marshals shall only be paid for their actual traveling expenses incurred in the performance of their official duties, to be rendered upon oath. The allowance to any deputy shall not exceed $5 per day while actually employed, or exceeding $1,200 per year for services rendered by such deputy, and said sums may be reduced below the said rates by the Attorney-General whenever, in his opinion, said reductions should be made: Provided, That all of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections and deputy and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections, are hereby repealed.

The amendment moved by Mr. CANDLER was to strike out these words:

And for defraying the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of the act of February 28, 1871, relative to the right of citizens to vote, or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

The amendment of Mr. KASSON was to insert in place of that proposed to be stricken out these words:

And for defraying the expenses of protecting the purity of the elective franchise, as provided in title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. KASSON to the amendment of Mr. CANDLER, and it was not agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. CANDLER was then agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the proviso at the close of the paragraph. I desire to say that this side of the House will resist to the last extremity the striking down of this protection of the elective franchise. We want an honest vote.

Mr. RANDALL. Debate is not in order.

The proviso proposed by Mr. FOSTER to be stricken out was as follows:

Provided, That all of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections, and deputy and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections, are hereby repealed.

The question was then taken on the motion to strike out; and on a division there were—ayes 55, noes 91.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. FOSTER and Mr. PAGE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FOSTER and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] to consent that we may have a vote in the House on this question; if he will do that, we will not object to proceeding with the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. The committee is now dividing.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 4, noes 108; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. Is any further count demanded?

Mr. KASSON. I would suggest once more to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow us to submit a motion in the House to strike out this proviso and allow us to have a vote upon it, so that we can make a record on our side of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. You have already made a record.

Mr. KASSON. No; we have not.

Mr. RANDALL. I myself have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON?]

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there a further count demanded on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER?]

No further count being demanded, the amendment of Mr. FOSTER was declared to be rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the support and maintenance of convicts transferred from the District of Columbia, $8,000.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

For defraying the contingent expenses of the courts, and the fees per diem and traveling expenses of the United States marshal in the Territory of Utah, arising under the act of June 23, 1874, in relation to courts and judicial officers in the Territories of Utah; also, the expenses under said act of summoning jurors and subpœnaing witnesses, of arresting, guarding, and punishing prisoners, hiring and feeding guards, and supplying and caring for the penitentiary, to be paid under the direction and order of the Department of Justice, upon accounts duly verified and certified, $20,000; this amount to be in full for all matters covered herein as against the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses to be incurred in the prosecution and collection of claims due the United States, $2,500.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the chairman of the committee whether the amount here appropriated will be sufficient for the collection of these various dues? The object is one which we all have in common; but it struck me that $2,500 was a very small sum for this purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount asked for was small.

Mr. KASSON. How much?

Mr. RANDALL. Five thousand dollars. We deemed that $2,500 would be sufficient; and we have not heard any serious objection to the report.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman thinks it sufficient, I defer of course to his opinion.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will find this item on page 53 of the estimates, at the bottom of the page.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to say that the Attorney-General is of opinion that the appropriation of $2,500,000, as well as these other appropriations, will not be sufficient. I wish to say that in justice to him.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, $25,000.

Mr. CANDLER. I move to amend by striking out the clause just read. In the first clause of the appropriations under the head of "judiciary," provision is made for the prosecution of "offenses committed against the United States." In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, provision was made for the prosecution of all offenses growing out of interference with the internal-revenue laws, the amount being I believe $60,000. There is another appropriation for the prosecution of offenses in reference to the currency. So that outside this paragraph there appears to be provision for the prosecution of every offense against the United States. The first general provision under the appropriation of $2,500,000 in this bill covers generally offenses against the United States. In the legislative appropriation bill $60,000 is appropriated for the prosecution of offenses against the internal revenue. In this bill $100,000 is appropriated for the prosecution of offenses in reference to the currency. There are other provisions in reference to the offenses in the Indian services and under the intercourse act. There is then generally provision made everywhere for the prosecution of every crime against the United States; and I am at a loss to know why this provision is made to appropriate $25,000 more.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to its being struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the appropriation ought to be struck out. This appropriation is for the Department of Justice. One of the appropriations to which the gentleman refers was for the Internal-Revenue Department and the other for the Treasury Department. This appropriation was, I believe, investigated by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice and was, I believe, recommended by them to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAULFIELD. No, sir; the gentleman is mistaken on that point. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice recommended that the appropriation be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. Then our subcommittee recommended it to the main committee.

Mr. JOYCE. I do not think the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice made any such recommendation as has been stated. At any rate, the minority of the committee never agreed to any such proposition and never heard of it.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The minority of the committee never do agree to anything.

Mr. JOYCE. They never ought to agree to any such propositions as this.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say that this appropriation is in the interest of the collection of the revenue in the Southern States.

Mr. CAULFIELD. O, no.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see why the southern people should be fearful of appropriations for the detection and punishment of crime. What is there in the condition of the South which should make them so fearful in this regard? Little distilleries all over the South are violating the law; yet gentlemen come here to make arguments against appropriating money for prosecuting and punishing such offenses.

Mr. RANDALL. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. REAGAN. This appropriation to be expended by the Attorney-General can have nothing to do with the enforcement of the internal-revenue laws.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee of the Whole to what appears to be a just distinction between the appropriations mentioned in the first clause, relating to the judiciary, and this particular clause. The first is for the prosecution of offenses; the clause under consideration is "for the detection and prosecution of crimes." Now, I have in my mind a case occurring in the postal service, where a post-office had been robbed and a reward offered for the detection of the offenders. Such a case as that, it seems to me, would not come strictly under the language "prosecution of offenses."

It has been, I think, the practice to charge up these expenditures to this particular appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. There was an appropriation in the post-office bill in reference to the detection and punishment of crimes in the Post-Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I refer to that only as an illustration. I suppose for the detection of the class of offenses to which I allude there is in the post-office appropriation bill an appropriation. This appropriation relating to the detection and prosecution of crime is to be under the Judiciary Department. It has been usual to charge up such rewards for the detection of crimes to this appropriation. I hope, Mr. Chairman, this House will not cripple the administration of justice by refusing to make the necessary appropriation.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, there has been a fatal blow struck at the administration of justice in the prevention of fraud in the elections by the adoption of the clause in this bill by vote of the committee a few moments ago doing away with supervisors and registration of voters. The law as it now stands, which the provision in this bill attempts to repeal, secures the appointment of supervisors, one from each party, appointed by the court. In a public speech made by a member of Congress from the city of New York, and a democrat too, he stated that they never had a fair election in that city until that law was passed. I hope the committee will not proceed further in the same line of legislation, and refuse to appropriate $25,000 for the detection and prosecution of offenses against the United States.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the clause referred to by the gentleman from Illinois is that very provision of law under which money has been used for election purposes as the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice has demonstrated. It is the very clause under which $34,000 was paid out in New York to Mr. Davenport for so-called election expenses. We have taken the testimony of those who had charge of the fund for several years. Detective Whitely testified in the early part of this session, before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, that he used this fund, drawing it from the Attorney-General's Office, and that he never accounted for one single dollar of it. For one I am not willing to vote $25,000 to the Attorney-General's Office unless at the end of the year the Attorney-General can show how that money has been spent. I defy any gentleman of this House to show how during the last four years one single dollar of the $50,000 which has been voted at every session of Congress has been spent by those who had charge of the fund. If this fund is to be administered in the same way hereafter that it has been heretofore, then you will not be able to show in the Attorney-General's Office or any other Department of the Government how one single dollar has been expended. I want to know if we are called upon here to spend the people's money without knowing in advance how it is to be spent or how it has been spent when the money is gone. It seems to me this clause should be stricken out and no appropriation of money should be made to be used and not accounted for.

Mr. REAGAN. The first part of the provision relating to the judiciary was for defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; and also for jurors and witnesses and expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States; for the safe-keeping of prisoners; and for defraying the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of the act of February 28, 1871, relative to the right of citizens to vote, or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, $2,500,000. Under this and in various other bills, without reference to the clause under consideration, provision has been made for every special subject connected with crime for which appropriations can be made. Then this clause for the detection and prosecution of offenses against the United States, $25,000, is thrown in in a general way. Under such appropriations extraordinary expenditures have been made by the head of the Department nominally to secure the purity of elections, but actually to control, coerce, and improperly influence elections in the various States.

The gentleman from Illinois in this discussion stated it was likely a fatal blow would be struck at the elective franchise by the action of this House in the adoption of the clause a few moments ago. I desired to say then when that was up, and I desire to say now, that at the date of the Declaration of Independence, and at the date of the formation of the Constitution of the United States, and all along through the political history of the American people up to very recently, they have been supposed to be capable of self-government. It was the underlying principle of our American system, that the people are capable of self-government. The legislation which it is now sought to support and uphold, and which began in 1871, after nearly one hundred years of practice had demonstrated to the world that our people were capable of self-government, originated in a purpose to establish a great central machine here for the repression of the opinions of the people, and to control elections against their will.

I have not the time in five minutes to show the instances in which the power of the Government under this legislation has been used to control, coerce, and repress the people, and to defeat the expression of their will. It is so marked in our political history that it is not necessary to repeat it to members of this House, nor is it necessary to repeat it to the American people. It is one of those things showing the remarkable drift in the political course of this country toward centralization and the embodiment of ideas which look to the capital and to the Federal Government for repression and control of the popular will, instead of doing as we were taught to believe we ought to do for nearly the first century of the Government, trusting to the intelligence and virtue of the people for their own government in their own localities.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word.

I am not surprised to-day or any other day to see the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] prove, earnestly and eloquently to this House, from time to time whenever he speaks, that the Government of this country is straying so far from its original intent that revolution is the only remedy. The gentleman has tried another remedy. But he comes here now and attempts to prove in every speech he makes that we wander so far from the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the principles of the founders of the Government and its course through a hundred long years, a revolution is not only permissible but demandable.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman will not make such a statement as that. I never made any such statement.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot yield. The whole tenor of the gentleman's arguments on many occasions—and I have taken pains to pick them out and put them together—is that we wander so far from the true intent of the Government that at last revolution is permissible and is demanded.

I do not wonder, then, at the gentleman's objection to these laws that preserve the purity of elections. I do not wonder at his raising his voice against a law for the detection of crime. We have here an appropriation for the punishment of crime. But this is to detect crime.

But I pass from the gentleman from Texas. I regret that he makes the issue that the American people every day so far forget and misuse their power of self-government that he has to arraign the whole American people for wandering from his sublime line of duty.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CONGER. I have not finished.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to be permitted to say one word, as the gentleman from Michigan has done me injustice.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to close debate.

Mr. CONGER. I have not yielded the floor.

However offensive it may be to gentlemen to have us discuss this question of preserving the purity of elections and providing means for detecting crime, they must hear of it and will hear of it from the press and from the people. For we have called the attention of the people to this subject to-day, and the people will understand that the democratic majority of this House refused even twenty minutes' discussion on the repeal of a law which all the people look upon with favor, democrats and republicans alike, who are in favor of the purity of elections.

This is but another step in that direction, to detect crime. No appropriation is to be made, as has always been made in previous bills, for the detection of crimes against the United States. I submit to the gentlemen of the majority here that as regards the record they make this day they will have to file affidavits with their constituents to show them that they were mistaken in their record or that they were put down by mistake on the roll. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CAULFIELD,] the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, has brought in here his individual ideas of what the report of his committee on this subject will be.

Mr. MILLS rose.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to say a word, because I think wrong has been done me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] on the right of the Chair, who has not been heard on the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. REAGAN. I must confess my astonishment at the remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan. For myself, I think after considerable length of public service that I am able to say with truthfulness and candor this day that I never did attempt to pervert or misstate the position of any one, whether friendly to me or adverse to me in politics. The gentleman from Michigan has made the statement that on all occasions, or at least whenever I have spoken of it, I have advocated revolution. Does he not know that he makes that statement directly against the truth, and that it was done for political effect, in violation of truth and honor?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman allow me to state——

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir. The gentleman would not yield to me.

The gentleman from Michigan alludes to my position during the recent contest. That is in history, and that I have no need to refer to now. From the close of that contest to this day there has been no man in this Government, North or South, who has more sincerely sought the peace, the prosperity, and the welfare of the whole American people, or who has been willing to make greater sacrifices of feeling and of interest to secure that mutual good-will and charity which are so necessary to the well-being of this country. The gentleman makes this attack upon me because I say that legislation introduced over five years ago, in 1871, is hostile to popular liberty, favoring only the retention of power by a political party, for the benefit of a political party, an innovation upon and an overthrowing of the foundations of American liberty and the traditional policy of the Government. And because I appeal to the principles of the Declaration of Independence, to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, to the principles imbedded in the constitutions of the various States for the protection of their people, their liberty, and their rights, and for the protection of their prosperity and welfare, the gentleman from Michigan has the boldness to rise in his place, in the face of this House which has noticed my course and knows that his statement is not correct, and to assume that this means revolution. No, sir; it means a security for the peace of the country through the peaceful means of the ballot-box and the law. We seek to repeal those laws that trench upon popular liberty, pervert the character of our Government, and establish a great central machine intended to overawe, repress, and control the American people, either with or without their consent. This is all I have to say on that point. [Applause.]

Mr. CONGER. I desire to make one remark.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] yield to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER?]

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. CONGER. Sir, I stated that the legitimate result of such remarks as were made by the gentleman from Texas meant only that there were evils sprung up in this country that could only be remedied by revolution. I stand to that proposition, and I say that in the charges he has made against the administration of this Government, comparing it with former times, if his assertions in regard to this Government and its policy be true, he has laid the foundation for that last resort of all citizens and of all citizenship: a revolution of the Government. That is what I say. The gentleman says my remarks are untrue. It is the logical conclusion to which I come, from remarks made by the gentleman to-day and on former occasions, to the effect that in his judgment this Government has wandered so far from its original position as a republican government, that it is no longer a republic, and that therefore revolution is proper. The gentleman cannot escape the logic of these conclusions. He cannot cut down the logic of them by asserting that what I have said is untrue.

Mr. MILLS. Gentlemen talk about the purity of elections. That is no new subject to the American people; it is no new subject here; it is a subject which has been talked about by the republican leaders all over the country for the last eight or nine years. They have been the most longing people that I know of for purity of elections; and let me give you an illustration of some of the results of their ideas of the purity in elections. In the State in which I live, and a part of which I have the honor to represent on this floor, but a few months ago a majority of 100,000 was given for the democratic candidate for governor, but under the republican idea of purity in elections the chosen official of the Administration returned a few years ago a republican candidate as governor. That is what purity in election did in Texas, and they extended this purity in election so far that the county in which I live was not deemed high enough in the scale of purity to have its vote counted, and this was done by an accredited agent of the Government of the United States. At another election a gentleman bearing upon his bosom the badge of a deputy marshal, appointed to officiate at the ballot-box in my county, when he had purified the ballot-box was subsequently arraigned and brought before the grand jury for violating the law, having aided in committing the highest crime that was possible to commit against a free people by stealing the sovereignty of the people. He admitted that he and his republican purifiers had stolen from the ballot-box three hundred democrat ballots and injected three hundred republican ballots in their place, and that testimony was brought to this House in the contested-election case between Giddings and Clark. Gentlemen on the other side of the House will certainly not fail to remember that case. Be it said to the honor of human nature and the honor of the republican party that, deeply stained as we are by political wrongs arising from partisan prejudice, the republican party could not stand before the record brought before the House, and voted unanimously to eject Clark from the House and place in his seat the man for whom the citizens of my district had voted and whom they had sent to represent them in this House. They ejected a man that came here with a false certificate of a purified republican governor, a gentleman who boasted a few days ago before one of the committees of this House that he was so popular in Texas that he was elected United States Senator, aided in so purifying elections as to have returned to a Legislature that would return him as a Senator from Texas.

This is what you call purity of elections, and it is for the purpose of carrying out such elections that you want this appropriation. A few years ago you said the Constitution of the United States was a "covenant with death and a league with hell," and you would hold it to be so to-day if you could not make it subserve your partisan purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask unanimous consent that debate be closed upon this paragraph.

Mr. WAIT. I ask the gentleman to allow me a few moments.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WAIT. I differ entirely from what has been stated here by the gentleman just on the floor, that the evidence before any committee of the House, so far as I had any personal knowledge of the same, is that the moneys which have heretofore been appropriated for the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States have been perverted from the legitimate purposes for which they were set apart and applied in aid of any particular party in the State elections. The evidence before the committee of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAULFIELD] is chairman, and of which I have the honor to be a member, was clear and positive that the money has been appropriated and used in all instances for lawful purposes. Never in one single instance was it used to elect the candidates of any particular party to office, but for the purpose of suppressing the worst and most glaring frauds, which were proved to have been perpetrated in New York, that have ever been perpetrated in any city in this Union. It was established by the clearest and most positive evidence that many votes were cast on fraudulent naturalization papers by men not entitled to exercise the elective franchise. It was also in evidence before the committee that many others, known as repeaters, went from ward to ward and from district to district casting votes in each. The evidence before the committee is that this repeating and this voting on these fraudulent naturalization papers and on the naturalization papers of men who were dead was for the benefit of one party almost exclusively in the city of New York. The testimony taken by the committee shows that the money which was disbursed by the Department of Justice under the provisions of existing laws was used in the city of New York to prevent fraudulent voting and that the fraudulent voting was almost entirely upon one side. It goes to show that in some voting districts in the city of New York the votes which were polled exceeded in number the men, women, and children who lived within their limits. It was to suppress this state of things, this invasion of the rights of the people, that this money was appropriated and expended by the officers of the Government, so far as I have any knowledge acquired as a member of the committee.

Let me say that there was no evidence before the committee coming from any man that to his own personal knowledge any legal voter in the city of New York was denied the right of suffrage or prevented from casting his vote for the candidates of his choice. Men were arrested by warrants, it is true; but for what? For attempting to vote upon fraudulent naturalization papers, upon the papers of dead men, and for repeating. They were arrested because they had never been made electors in the State of New York, and upon various other charges that fastened upon them kindred crimes. But I claim here, and the gentlemen connected with me on that committee I believe will bear me out in the statement which I make, that there was no witness who came before the committee who was willing to swear of his own personal knowledge that he knew of any man who had the right to exercise the elective franchise in New York who was impeded in or stopped from exercising that right.

The pitiful sum of $25,000 which it is proposed by the bill under consideration to appropriate "for the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States" is not merely for the suppression of fraudulent voting, but to guard against counterfeiting and the circulation of counterfeit coin and bills, the violation of the excise laws, the robbery of the mails, and every criminal act of like kind in contravention of the laws of the United States. This money is to be appropriated to enable the officers of the law to detect the offender and to bring the guilty to punishment.

Now let me ask this House if it is proper legislation—legislation that the people will sanction—to weaken the arm of justice by striking out this small sum of $25,000, which is to be spread over the entire Union for the legitimate and laudable purposes which I have already stated? Sir, there is not a house burned in your village, not a barn burned on your farm by an incendiary, but what the public authorities of any town or village of any size in this country would appropriate from one thousand to five thousand dollars to detect and punish the persons who set fire to the property with the felonious intent to destroy the same.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I would not have risen to participate in this debate but for the very frequent reference to the city of New York, which I have the honor in part to represent. I think there is either a very great misapprehension or a very great intention to misrepresent with reference to the character of the people of the State of New York. There is not a State in this Union, not one, where the laws of the State are better framed for the security of the elective franchise than the State of New York. In my judgment the State of New York has provided by every possible provision of law for a fair election in the city of New York as well as in every other part of the State.

If there have been frauds in elections in the city of New York, then the officials of the State and city must have been responsible for those frauds. For seven out of the last ten years the administration and the whole State and city governments have been in the hands of our political opponents. The laws have been framed by a republican Legislature and approved by a republican governor.

The police authorities in the city of New York execute all our election laws, and those police authorities during the same period for a very large portion of the time in the city of New York have been under republican control. If, therefore, notwithstanding the law, and notwithstanding the character of the people who vote at our elections, there have been frauds, I hold the party in power responsible for those frauds. They had the power to secure a pure election, and if we have not had that pure election they are responsible for the result.

What is the fact? I admit that there have been frauds in New York. There is no State of like population in the world, where the elective franchise is as free as it is with us, in which frauds have not existed. But we have to the extent of our power remedied those frauds. The only obstructions that we have had in the city of New York to an entirely pure election have been through the administration of the General Government by its supervisors and marshals. They have protected frauds instead of detecting them; they have encouraged frauds instead of preventing them; they have exercised the power of the Federal Government to overawe and intimidate voters, upon occasions arresting them without cause and keeping them in jail, not discharging them until the morning after the election, so as to deprive them of the right to vote.

It is all very well for gentlemen when they design to accomplish a purpose to endeavor to continue a system antagonistic to the genius of our institutions to select the city of New York as an example in support of their arguments. I tell these gentlemen that they are not to hoodwink the people of this country any longer by these professions of reform and honest elections. They have themselves given the people too many examples of the grossest frauds, not only in the city of New York, but everywhere throughout the Union, wherever they have had the means to attempt to overawe and intimidate voters and to encourage fraudulent voting.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for a vote.

Mr. HOSKINS. I desire to be heard a few minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. This debate is not germane to the pending paragraph any way; it is altogether irrelevant.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is well taken.

Mr. HOSKINS. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor, and calls for a vote on the pending paragraph without further debate.

Mr. HOSKINS. Have I not the right to move an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Not while the gentleman from Pennsylvania is on the floor with a request to be submitted to the committee that all debate on the pending paragraph be now closed. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PAGE and others objected.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to close debate upon the pending paragraph.

The question was taken upon the motion that the committee rise; and upon a division there were—ayes 94, noes 52.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HOSKINS called for tellers on the motion that the committee rise.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were 31 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOSKINS and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 108, no 1.

Mr. HOSKINS. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not necessary on a motion that the committee rise.

So the motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the Chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and pending that motion I move that all debate in committee on the pending paragraph terminate as soon as the committee shall resume its session.

Mr. CONGER. On the motion to close debate I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. All right.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time do gentlemen on the other side desire?

Mr. RANDALL. I object to discussion. I have made my motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope I shall have an answer. How much time do gentlemen desire?

Mr. CONGER. Gentlemen on this side have asked for five minutes to speak on this subject, and it has been refused.

Mr. HOSKINS. I ask only a few minutes to discuss this question.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for a vote on my proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the interest of economy of time——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate, and call for the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The public interests are too important to be interfered with by any trivial considerations.

Mr. HOSKINS. I only wanted a brief time. If gentlemen on the other side prefer to take up the time in calling the yeas and nays, let them go ahead.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to ask the gentleman on the other side whether he will be satisfied with five minutes? [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot answer that question.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 130, nays 76, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. So the motion of Mr. RANDALL that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the pending paragraph be closed was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. On all political questions I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "no." He if present would vote "ay."

Mr. HOSKINS. I desire to say that I am paired on all political questions with the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. WALKER.] Were he present he would probably vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

Mr. DOUGLAS. On all political questions (and this seems to assume that character) I am paired with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MACDOUGALL.]

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

REPORT OF THE DOORKEEPER.

Mr. FORT. By the record made to-day it might seem that Mr. Patterson, the present Doorkeeper, had neglected to make his report to the House. In point of fact his first official act was to make his report according to Rule 27, which requires him to make a full inventory of all public property under the charge of the Doorkeeper's department. That report was laid upon the Speaker's table; and it was not his fault that it was not referred to the Committee of Accounts; the fault, if any, belonged to the House. I now hold the report in my hand; and I move that it be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole upon the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The pending question was on the amendment of Mr. CANDLER, to strike out the following clause:

For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 101, noes 61.

Mr. CONGER. I give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on this amendment in the House and shall there call the yeas and nays upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the right of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of the necessary expenses incurred in defending suits against the Secretary of the Treasury or his agents for the seizure of captured or abandoned property, and for the examination of witnesses in claims against the United States pending in any Department, and for the defense of the United States in the Court of Claims, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, $25,000.

Mr. ATKINS. I think the amount of $25,000 is too much, and I therefore move to strike it out and in lieu thereof insert $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Vote!

Mr. ATKINS. If the chairman wishes a vote I will not detain the House by saying anything on the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I propose to vote for it, and therefore do not think it necessary to take up time in debate. It is all right.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 52.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on that amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the right of the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Government Hospital for the Insane:

For the support, clothing, and medical and moral treatment of the insane of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and revenue-cutter service, and of all persons who may have become insane since their entry into the military or naval service of the United States and who are indigent, and of the indigent insane of the District of Columbia in the Government Hospital for the Insane, $150,000; and hereafter one-half of the expense of the indigent persons who may be admitted from the District of Columbia shall be paid from the treasury of said District.

Mr. BOONE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "indigent," in line 371, the following:

And whose insanity occurred while in the military or naval service of the United States, or has occurred within three years after discharge from such military or naval service from causes arising during such service.

Mr. Chairman, the language of this bill is similar to that used in a former appropriation bill on this subject, and I understand it has been the custom, perhaps sanctioned by the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, that all persons who have been in the military service of the United States and have been discharged from it, without regard to the time they were discharged, or when they became insane, are entitled to be admitted into the Government Hospital for the Insane. I think there should be some limitation placed upon the time when persons shall receive the benefit of this institution. I have incorporated in my amendment three years after discharge. I think that in that time all persons who have been in the military or naval service of the Government shall have acquired a home in some of the States.

The object of this amendment is not to throw any obstacle in the way of taking care of discharged soldiers who may become insane; but I think when they become citizens of a State, or have been residents of a State for a length of time to entitle them to become citizens, the State should take care of them and they should not be a burden upon the Government.

If the policy that has been pursued, as I understand it, is still pursued, it will not be long before we will have to extend this institution or build a new one. I understand there is an application in this House to appropriate $350,000 to build another asylum. There are now in this institution seven hundred and fifty patients. They are much crowded, and, unless we shall throw some safeguards around it, it will be so crowded as to call for still greater expense on the part of the Government. Whereas, if only such persons as are entitled to go in there are admitted, there will be ample room for all such insane persons as ought to be taken care of.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman whether he does not find as a matter of fact that the abuse there, if any such does exist, arises from the crowding of that institution, not by soldiers or sailors, but from the fact that people come into this District from the surrounding States and after getting a residence here secure admission into this Government Asylum for the Insane? I ask him whether the abuse does not lie there?

Mr. BOONE. There is no doubt there is an abuse in that direction, and that persons are admitted from the District who are really residents of the States. I am satisfied, while there is that abuse, there is also an abuse in the direction I have pointed out. I suppose there will be an amendment offered to this or some subsequent bill to remedy the abuse of which the gentleman from Georgia has spoken.

Mr. RANDALL. This amendment, or one having a similar object, was considered in the Committee on Appropriations, and met with an adverse decision. The point at issue is just this, that any insane persons who were in the various branches of the service indicated in the body of the paragraph can come and be admitted into the Government Asylum for the Insane without regard to the time when they were discharged. The gentleman's amendment proposes to make insanity within three years from the discharge from the military or naval service a necessary qualification for admission into this asylum. That provision we thought best not to incorporate into this bill. I should prefer to lean toward favoring those insane persons who had served their country in the Army or Navy, and to make no limitation as to the period when the insanity made itself manifest, whether three years or any other period after their discharge.

Mr. MUTCHLER. This Government Hospital for the Insane was established about the year 1854. In the year 1866 Congress passed an act which permitted all soldiers and sailors who had been discharged from the Army and Navy for a period of three years and became insane within that time, if their insanity was caused by the service in the Army or Navy, to be admitted there. That is the law as it now stands. The purpose of the institution is, in the first place, to provide an asylum for the insane of the Army, Navy, revenue-cutter service, and Marine Corps; secondly, for insane people who have been in the Army and Navy and have become insane within three years after their discharge if their insanity was caused by such service; and, thirdly, for the indigent insane of the District of Columbia.

Under the peculiar wording of the appropriation bills for the last four or five years, whether unintentionally or otherwise it is difficult to say, the Attorney-General has decided that any person who had served in the Army at any time, without regard to the length of time he had served there or without regard to the cause which had produced his insanity, is entitled to admission to this hospital. It will be seen, therefore, that the Government may be very easily imposed upon; because a person who had served only one day in the Army and who had become insane by the habitual use of intoxicating liquors or from any other imprudence of his own would be entitled to be kept in that institution. It strikes me, therefore, that the present system is unjust to the Government, and that there should be some regulation made that would provide that no person should be admitted there from the Army and Navy unless it clearly appears that the insanity was produced by his service in either of those branches of the Government.

There are to-day in the Army and Navy together but 35,000 men. If there be, as statistics say, but one insane person in every thousand, there should be but thirty-five insane persons in the Army and Navy. Yet we find that the number admitted to the asylum is over four hundred, showing that the States empty out of their soldiers' homes all persons who are imbeciles in any way, bring them to Washington, and put them in the Insane Asylum.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me say just one word more. These people are the wards of the nation, and just as we give pensions to our soldiers and sailors we should give entrance to the asylum in case of insanity.

Mr. RAINEY. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. KELLEY. I would ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he would not permit an amendment striking out the term of three years, so that any man whose insanity is traced directly to causes arising during the war may be admitted?

Mr. HOLMAN. This has been the law for many years.

Mr. KELLEY. But cannot the law be improved so as to admit any man whose insanity is clearly traceable to causes arising during his service?

Mr. HOLMAN. If he has been in the service and becomes insane, let him have the benefit of this asylum.

The question being taken on Mr. BOONE's amendment, there were ayes 29, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I have called the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to the last clause of the paragraph, and I think he will probably agree to a modification of it, if not to the striking of it out.

I offer the following amendment:

Strike out these words at the end of the paragraph: "And hereafter one-half of the expense of the indigent persons who may be admitted from the District of Columbia shall be paid from the treasury of said District."

The reason for my offering this amendment is that probably nine-tenths of those nominally from the District of Columbia belong to that floating population that drifts in from other parts of the country, and it seems hardly a matter of justice, let alone generosity, for Congress to impose one-half of the burden of the support of those people on the District of Columbia.

If the gentleman from Pennsylvania shall think it unwise to strike it out, I would ask his consent then for me to insert the words "born in and" before the word "admitted," in line 375; so that it will read:

And hereafter one-half of the expenses of the indigent persons who may be born in and admitted from the District of Columbia shall be paid from the treasury of said District.

Mr. RANDALL. That would cut it all off.

Mr. BUCKNER. I wish to suggest that the treasury of the District of Columbia, which has to pay $1,100,000 interest, under a bill which has passed here, during the next six months or the next twelve months at the furthest, will be very short of funds, and if this expense can be put upon the Government I think it ought to be.

Mr. RANDALL. This bill applies to all hereafter sent to the asylum. There is an enormous number of patients there from the District now.

Mr. BLOUNT. Two hundred and seventy.

Mr. RANDALL. My colleague on the committee informs me that there are two hundred and seventy patients from the District now in the asylum. This does not interfere with them at all, but the complaint is that from the surrounding States, and perhaps from remote States, insane persons are brought here and get a domicile here, and then are sent into this institution as from the District of Columbia. This provision will make the District of Columbia authorities more careful in determining who shall go in there and enjoy this bounty. I think it is a wise provision.

Mr. KASSON. I do not think that this provision will effect the gentleman's object unless he inserts the word "hereafter."

Mr. RANDALL. The word "hereafter" is already in, and was placed there so as not to interfere in any way with such patients as are now there.

Mr. KASSON. I would suggest that the gentleman amend the latter clause of the paragraph by striking out the word "hereafter" where it occurs and inserting it between the word "be" and the word "admitted;" so that it will read:

And hereafter one-half of the expense of the indigent persons who may be hereafter admitted from the District of Columbia shall be paid from the treasury of said District.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. KASSON. Then I offer it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For general repairs, absolutely necessary, for the buildings of the institution, $5,000.

Mr. BOONE. I do not know that the amendment which I now offer is exactly germane to this bill, but I do not see any other place where it would properly come in. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the clause just read the following:

That hereafter it shall not be lawful for the superintendent of the asylum to hold any other office of profit or trust while superintendent of said asylum.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not yet informed how the gentleman from Kentucky offers this amendment. Does he offer it as an independent section?

Mr. BOONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that it is new legislation, and it is therefore not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that there is a general clause in the bill which reaches the result which his amendment aims to accomplish, and therefore there is no occasion for his amendment.

Mr. BOONE. Where is that general clause?

Mr. RANDALL. I will read it to the gentleman:

Provided, That hereafter no person in the employ of the Government of the United States, or of any Department thereof, or of the District of Columbia, shall hold two places of honor, trust, emolument, or salary: And provided also, That no officer, clerk, or employé of Congress shall hold any other office of honor, trust, emolument, or salary while receiving pay from the Senate or House of Representatives.

Mr. BOONE. I think that covers the point I seek to attain, and I therefore withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For the support of the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, Washington City, District of Columbia, including salaries and incidental expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000.

Mr. BUCKNER. I offer the following amendment:

After line 405 insert the following:

To the Industrial Home School of the District of Columbia, $10,000, to be expended in erecting a machine-shop and other needful buildings for the inmates of said industrial school.

Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania object to that?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows.

To aid in the support of the Children's Hospital, Washington, District of Columbia, $5,000.

For the Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum in Washington, District of Columbia, namely, for subsistence, salaries and compensation, fuel and light, clothing, rent of hospital buildings, medicines and medical supplies, forage and transportation, and miscellaneous expenses, $45,000.

Mr. HARTRIDGE. I offer the following amendment, to come in immediately after that paragraph, and I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not object to it:

For the National Association for the Relief of the Colored Women and Children of the District of Columbia, $10,000;
For Saint Ann's Infant Asylum, $10,000; and
For the Georgetown General Hospital, $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For expenses in detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States, and the coinage thereof, and for detecting other frauds upon the Government, $100,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the close of that paragraph, and it is as follows:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be paid to spies for information.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order that that is new legislation.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say that I am not opposed to having detectives or to paying for detectives, but I think that those detectives should have regular salaries; and I am opposed to this system of spies and informers, for a great deal of evil results therefrom.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. FOSTER. It is.

Mr. FORT. Is the point of order good?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not passed upon the point of order.

Mr. FORT. It occurs to me that this amendment is in the interest of economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the point of order, unless the gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. FORT. I do not wish to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, in the exercise of that liberality of ruling which he thinks the occasion requires and merits, is disposed to overrule the point of order, and to permit the Committee of the Whole to pass upon the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say a word in support of my amendment. I agree with the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WHITE. As I said before, I am not opposed to punishing those who counterfeit the notes of the Government or who pass such counterfeit notes. But I am opposed to paying spies, who go into remote parts of the country and, as they have not infrequently done, encourage persons to pass these counterfeit notes, and then turn upon them and have them punished for the offense. I am opposed to paying for that information. I am opposed to appropriating any money for paying spies upon people living in these remote localities. It is for that reason that I have offered this amendment, "that no part of this sum shall be paid to spies for information." I might add "that this sum shall be paid only to persons who have annual salaries fixed by law."

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] will be adopted. I think the time has come when we should do away with this system of spies and informers.

The question being taken upon the amendment of Mr. WHITE, upon a division there were—ayes 34, noes 69.

No further count being demanded, the amendment was declared to be rejected.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

REFORM SCHOOL OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

For the superintendent, assistant superintendent, matron, three teachers, for medicines and physicians' fees, gardener, farmer, baker, and night-watchman, seamstress, cook, and laundress, and four female servants, and for fuel, clothing, and incidentals, $10,000.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of the remainder of the "Peter farm" or other farming lands adjoining or near the Reform School lands: Provided, That they can be obtained at a price not exceeding $100 per acre, $10,000.
For erecting work-shops, chimney, purchase of steam-engine, machinery, belting, and tools, $11,000.
For fencing, outbuildings, hedge-plants, and trees, $5,000.
For annual repairs of the buildings, building conservatory and stocking the same, purchase of library, and cows, $2,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BUCKNER. I understood that the Committee on Appropriations agreed to this amendment. It has been considered by the Committee for the District of Columbia and is unanimously recommended by that committee.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations have decided that they will not enter upon any new purchase of property or land.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman declines to accept this amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not instructed by the committee to do so.

Mr. BUCKNER. It is very important for the success of this institution that it should have this piece of land. It is one of the best-managed institutions in the District. There is no charge of corruption or wrong-doing on the part of any of its officers. It is altogether one of the most useful and humane institutions to be found anywhere.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this institution established by and now existing under law?

Mr. BUCKNER. Certainly it is.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his point of order and allow this amendment to be voted on.

Mr. HOAR. The point of order does not lie against the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. I presume that is true, from the fact that this is an institution already in existence, having been provided for by previous acts of Congress. This matter has been before the Committee for the District of Columbia. I think the appropriations proposed by this amendment are necessary and proper. The amounts are not extravagant, and are necessary for the purpose of making this institution what it should be. It is a well-conducted institution, necessary for this District, and I hope this amendment may be made a part of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. No one would experience more pleasure than I would in extending our charities. This, however, is not a time when we should enter upon a new field or engage in any increased expenditures in this respect. This amendment proposes to purchase additional land. I know nothing about the value of the land; but I would suggest that we had better not go further than the $10,000 which the Committee on Appropriations have reported for this institution. I now call for a vote.

Mr. STEVENSON. In reply to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, I desire to say that this is not a matter of charity at all; it is an appropriation absolutely necessary for this District.

Mr. RANDALL. The Reform School is a charity.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is absolutely necessary for this class of people. I think this institution a necessary one. It is well conducted and reflects credit upon all who are connected with it. I think this appropriation should be made.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not insist upon my point of order; I have no objection to allowing the committee to vote upon the amendment.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the amendment moved by Mr. BUCKNER, and upon a division there were—ayes 43, noes 87.

No further count being demanded, the amendment was declared to be rejected.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to offer the following amendment, which is the first paragraph of the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER:]

For purchase of the remainder of the "Peter farm," or other farming lands adjoining or near the Reform School land: Provided, That they can be obtained at a price not exceeding $100 per acre, $10,000.

I will give my reasons for offering this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. We might just as well have a vote on this as on the other.

Mr. RANDALL. This has already been voted on.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; it has not been voted on at all, except in conjunction with other matters. I desire now a vote of the committee upon this single proposition; and I will state my reasons. In the rear of the grounds now occupied by the Reform School there is a piece of land known as the "remainder of the Peter farm." This property will pass into other and strange hands unless it be bought by the Government for the use of the Reform School; and if it should pass into other hands, that may tend strongly to break up the Reform School or injure it very materially. If it be not bought now, the opportunity to buy it may perhaps pass away forever.

I am informed by those who profess to know, and who I believe do know, that this piece of ground is absolutely necessary to the proper conduct of the school. If it be purchased for that school, the grounds of the institution will then be bounded on one side by a turnpike, on another by the District boundary, and on another by Rock Creek, making a most beautiful property for the conduct of the school.

I hope no point of order will be made on the amendment and that it will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that the Committee of the Whole has already voted upon this proposition.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; it has not been voted upon in its present form.

The CHAIRMAN. In the judgment of the Chair, the point of order is not well taken, as this is only a portion of the proposition upon which the committee has already voted.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being ayes 47, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Metropolitan police:

For salaries and other necessary expenses of the Metropolitan police for the District of Columbia, $150,000: Provided, That a like sum shall concurrently be paid to defray the expenses of the said Metropolitan police force, out of the treasury of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the duties devolved and the authority conferred upon the board of Metropolitan police by law, for police purposes, in said District, shall extend to and include all public squares or places; and said board is hereby authorized and required to make appropriate rules and regulations in relation thereto.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out "$150,000" and inserting "$200,000;" also by striking out the words "a like sum" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one-half of said sum."

I would like the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to explain upon what principle the committee has acted in departing from the previous legislation of Congress with reference to the Metropolitan police. For years past the Government of the United States has paid two-thirds of the expense of maintaining this force. Now the proposition is that the Government shall pay but one-half. A gentleman near me says, "That is right." I do not know upon what principle it is right. The District of Columbia is less able to pay this money now than it has ever been before; and there seems to be good reason for amending this paragraph so as to adhere to the old rule which has prevailed, so far as my knowledge goes, for years. That rule has been, that the Government of the United States should pay two-thirds of the cost of maintaining the Metropolitan police, and the District government one-third. Unless the chairman of the committee can give some good reason why we should abandon that rule, I think it should still be adhered to by Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount heretofore appropriated by the Government for the Metropolitan police has been, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] states, two-thirds of the total expense of maintaining that force. The Committee on Appropriations have, however, come to the conclusion that one-half of that expense is as much as should be the share of the Government. We do not see any equitable reason why the Government of the United States should pay more than one-half.

Gentlemen will remember that we have officers of our own—watchmen and other persons—throughout the city protecting the Government property; and I have heard it stated that in fact the Metropolitan police do not consider that they are bound for the protection of the public property.

Mr. KASSON. Does not this bill make a change in that respect? I do not observe any appropriation for watchmen on the public grounds, but I do observe a provision that hereafter the police shall take charge of them.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir, we have provided in various bills here for dismissing quite a number of watchmen; and hereafter we intend that the police shall take care of and preserve order in those places where we have seen fit to reduce the number of watchmen. The whole question is whether the Government of the United States is equitably bound to pay more than one-half of the expense of the police force of this city. We have thought that two-thirds, the proportion which the Government has heretofore paid, is too much, and therefore we have made a reduction.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend by striking out the last word. It seems to me that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has not given any good reason why there should be a change of what has been the policy of Congress for years past on this subject. On the contrary, the fact that these policemen are hereafter to have charge of the public buildings and reservations of this city, where the Government of the United States owns such a large amount of property requiring protection, would demand that the Government should pay even a larger sum than has heretofore been provided; for nearly one-half of the entire property of this District is owned by the Government of the United States, yet it does not pay one dollar of taxation. Although the Government of the United States may be very poor, I say that the District of Columbia is still poorer. We have not yet passed a bill for raising a dollar of revenue for this District for the next fiscal year. The bill which passed this House and went to the Senate is there still, and there is strong probability it will be inoperative unless passed soon. Hence there is no reason for this change, and we therefore ought to go back to the policy in existence for years, unless a change be made in the relation which the Government bears to this District. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. BUCKNER'S amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court-house and post-office, Atlanta, Georgia: For continuation of the building, $15,000.

Mr. LORD. I move to strike out lines 451 and 452, being the whole paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I find appropriated under the head of "Treasury Department," if I have figured the amount correctly, over $2,400,000 for the purpose of completing or extending buildings for the service of the United States. I think now is a very bad time to expend this amount of money for such a purpose. I apprehend there is hardly one of these buildings, perhaps not one, which cannot afford to wait one or two or three years.

I think I have a right to say something on this subject, and for this reason: In the city of Utica, where I reside, the United States has paid $150,000, or about that sum, for a lot of land, and has torn down some of the old buildings, so as to make it very unsightly. The city of Utica really needs a post-office and a court-house for the United States courts, but considering the state of the times and the state of the Treasury the Representative of that district concluded not to make an application for an appropriation. I think, should I state all the facts relating to the demand for a court-house and post-office in the city of Utica, I could make as strong a claim as is made for any building provided for in this appropriation bill. Therefore, having concluded, in view of the public necessity, in view of the depletion of the Treasury, in view of the fact, as I understand it, that we are more than $15,000,000 short in the revenues on the estimates of last year, not to apply for an appropriation for a court-house and post-office in the city of Utica, I think I have the right to make this motion and to ask the attention of the House to it. This is the question: Whether it is not better to postpone until some future day the paying out of this $2,500,000? The interest on this money proposed to be appropriated will more than protect the unfinished buildings from injury. I make the motion on this paragraph, intending it to apply to all the appropriations for United States buildings in the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what the gentleman from New York said, I desire simply to say to the House that if the proposition were now to commence this building in Atlanta I would appreciate the force of what he has said. But the building has been commenced. Appropriations have been made by previous Congresses authorizing the construction of the custom-house and post-office at Atlanta, Georgia, and the work is now in actual progress. To leave it unfinished, in my judgment, would do the country more harm than to appropriate this small additional sum for the purpose of completing this work.

Mr. LORD. Let me ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. What amount of money will be required to put this building under cover and keep it for two or three years?

Mr. HILL. It would take this full amount to do that. I say this to the gentleman who proposes to postpone the completion of this work for several years—to a future year—to an indefinite period: The Government has already made an outlay. It has purchased the ground, or at least the ground was given to it. I believe it has made an appropriation to build a custom-house and post-office, and until that work is completed it is paying rent for the building used as court-house and post-office.

Mr. LORD. So we are doing in Utica.

Mr. HILL. Certainly; but I say this small sum would in a short time be swallowed in the rent of other buildings. As a simple question of economy this appropriation ought to be made so this building can be completed at an early day, and then the United States would be relieved of paying rent for other buildings for these public purposes. As a simple question of economy, then, this appropriation ought to be made, and I trust the House therefore will not strike out this clause of the bill.

Mr. COOK. I wish to state that the citizens of Atlanta paid $60,000 for the ground, and gave it to the United States.

Mr. HILL. I am glad my colleague has reminded me of that fact. The citizens of Atlanta paid $60,000 for this ground and gave it to the United States. Now to allow the building to remain incomplete would be allowing so much dead capital, and the Government in the mean time will be paying rent for other buildings. We only ask $15,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the position taken by the gentleman from New York when he rose and made his motion to strike out the paragraph about the court-house and post-office at Atlanta, Georgia. I supposed there was in that paragraph within itself something to which he had objection. As he proceeded, however, he assumed the position that the work on all public buildings in this country should be suspended; and that is the question before the House. In the first place, in the effort to reduce expenditures in this branch of the Government service, the gentleman will find before we pass through with this bill that the committee have gone much further than a great many gentlemen in this House are prepared to go. They have gone further in the line of reduction of expenditures than has ever been done before.

I think, sir, we have gone just as far as we can safely go in the way of reduction. A great many buildings simply need covering; but without it there will be a great destruction and a great loss to the Government. I think there will be no one on this floor who will be prepared to take the position that we must stop everywhere the work on these buildings throughout the country. With reference to the appropriation for Atlanta, Georgia, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] asks whether the amount of $15,000 will cover that building. I will answer the gentleman that five times that amount will not do so.

Mr. LORD. My question had reference to how much it would cost to finish the building, and whether $15,000 would complete it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I say it will not.

Mr. LORD. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. BLOUNT. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. LORD. How much has been expended?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know the exact amount that has been expended.

Mr. CANDLER. The sum of $40,000 has been already paid.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

Subtreasury and post-office, Boston, Massachusetts: For purchase of additional land condemned by the United States courts, including interest and expenses incident, $235,000.

Mr. PIERCE. I desire to offer the following amendment, which has the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations:

Amend in lines 454 and 455 by striking out the words "United States;" and in line 455, after the word "courts," insert "of the State of Massachusetts."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that that paragraph be read as it will be if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subtreasury and post-office, Boston, Massachusetts: For purchase of additional land condemned by the courts of the State of Massachusetts, including interest and expenses incident, $235,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was not this condemnation in the United States court?

Mr. PIERCE. No, sir; it was in the courts of the State of Massachusetts. The Legislature passed an act authorizing proceedings to be brought in the State courts, and proceedings were had similar to those in the case of land condemned by the United States courts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought we passed an act with a view to the condemnation of that land.

Mr. PIERCE. No, sir; it was done by the courts of the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts knows of his own knowledge that this condemnation was made in a State court, then I will not object to his amendment.

Mr. PIERCE. It was made by the superior court of Massachusetts under a special act passed by the Legislature for that purpose.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Custom-house and post-office, Cincinnati, Ohio: For continuation of building, $200,000.

Mr. SAYLER. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out "$200,000" and insert "$400,000."

I do not propose to antagonize the general purpose of economy that has been evinced by the present Appropriations Committee. I believe as much as they do in retrenchment and reform. But I undertake to say that there is neither retrenchment nor reform in a proposition to build a house and not appropriate a sufficient sum of money to carry through the necessary work on it.

These gentlemen profess to be wise politicians, but I have only this to say, and I say it for the benefit of my friends on the republican side, that if you stop this work in these cities, you will probably have republican Representatives here from every leading city in the United States. If you stop the work you increase the expense, and you do not accomplish the purpose that the people of the country want accomplished. Now, sir, we had an appropriation last year for this building of $600,000. This is the amount that really ought to be appropriated for this year. After the most careful estimate, and after reducing it from time to time, the architect has brought this down to $400,000. The committee has chosen to make the appropriation $200,000. The result will be that the work will be stopped in the city of Cincinnati about the middle of September, as I am assured by the supervising architect.

Mr. RANDALL. That is in time for the election.

Mr. SAYLER. Yes; in good time for the election. The work will be stopped in Cincinnati, and under this appropriation it will be stopped in Saint Louis; and under this appropriation it will be stopped in Chicago. And what do you make by it? A man might as well say that he would fasten up his pocket-book and not pay his grocer's bill.

We are putting up these buildings; they are started; they are going on; and now you undertake to make an appropriation of less than is sufficient to carry on the work. No private individual would do his work in that way if he were building for himself.

I hope, therefore, that this amendment will be adopted. I appeal to the gentlemen of the committee to accept it. I have no charges to make against the Committee on Appropriations. I see the chairman of that committee is looking a little bit wolfish just now.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not aware of it.

Mr. SAYLER. Perhaps he does not want to be so. I sympathize with his general purpose; but he is doing that which is not a measure of economy, which is injuring his own party, and injuring the public service of the country.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the first time I have heard it announced that we ought to put up public buildings for the purpose of electing members of Congress. But, as regards the merits of this question, we propose to go slowly in all these public buildings, especially the larger ones, and they will suffer nothing thereby. We give to Cincinnati $200,000; and there are $82,000 there unexpended which can be used. Therefore, there is within a fraction of $300,000 for that building. We deemed that that, in the present condition of the finances of the country, was quite adequate.

Some of the committee were rather inclined to the sentiments of the gentleman from New York, [Mr LORD,] who wishes to strike out all the appropriations for public buildings. We think it better not to do that, for the reason that some buildings might be injured and their present structures impaired if no appropriations were made. Therefore, we went as far as we considered it possible to go, and have appropriated something over $2,000,000 for public buildings, against something over $4,000,000 appropriated last year.

Now, the gentleman alludes to Saint Louis and Chicago. I may as well meet the case of these two cities just at the threshold of this discussion. For Saint Louis we appropriated $450,000, and I do not think that the gentlemen from Saint Louis will, in view of the condition of the Treasury, urgently ask for more. Now, as to Chicago, there is to-day unexpended on the account of the Chicago building $596,000; in fact there is more money on hand to expend on the building at Chicago than any other public building in the United States. These are the only three points upon which I wish to speak. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BANNING. I hope the House will not make haste to vote upon this question. I hold in my hand a letter which I received this morning from Mr. Hannaford, the architect of the building at Cincinnati, which I ask to have read, and I hope that members of the House will listen to it and vote in accordance with his recommendations.

I wish to say one word in addition. Cincinnati pays the Government more money in internal-revenue tax than the whole State of Pennsylvania, and yet there is an appropriation here for a building in Philadelphia of $350,000 and Cincinnati only $200,000.

Mr. RANDALL. We cut down the estimate $400,000.

Mr. BANNING. Unfortunately Cincinnati did not have a man upon the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, that is a reflection on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BANNING. I do not mean it in an unkind or offensive way.

Mr. RANDALL. That is very unjust; it is not in accordance with the facts. I have acted here in regard to my own State precisely as in regard to other States.

Mr. BANNING. In Cincinnati we pay $9,000,000 of internal revenue.

Mr. KELLEY. Do you drink the whisky that pays that tax?

Mr. BANNING. Not all of it.

Mr. KELLEY. I take it that the consumer pays that tax.

Mr. BANNING. It is consumed after we have paid the tax on it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that I may have the letter read and that gentlemen may listen to it. It is from the man who superintends the construction of this building, and shows its present condition.

Mr. LUTTRELL. California pays $16,000,000 of internal revenue, and has no representative on any important committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF CONSTRUCTION,
UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE AND POST-OFFICE,
Cincinnati, June 20, 1876.

SIR: The telegraphic dispatches from Washington state that only $200,000 have been recommended by the committee to be appropriated for the construction of this building. This, if true, is a grave error and in no wise true economy. I doubt if there be a point in the United States where quarters for official business are more imperatively demanded than here.

The post-office is so cramped for room and in such miserably lighted apartments that it is with the greatest difficulty that the public business can be transacted at all. The difficulties attending the proper and prompt distribution of the mail from this point on account of the insufficient accommodation provided is liable at any time to bring our city into disrepute in all localities depending upon this office for the regular transmission of mail matter. Still another point worthy of consideration is that the business of the Cincinnati office is steadily increasing, and that under the most favorable auspices the building under process of construction cannot be finished for many years.

Regarding the custom-house department, its accommodations are as limited and contracted as the post-office. Appraiser's stores, bonded warehouses, &c., in connection with this portion of the service, are scattered broadcast over the city, involving an expense for rent, watchmen, store-keepers, &c., which will also grow with the necessary increase in our trade as a port of entry. While this scattering abroad is at the same time a burden upon the public, as under the present condition of affairs, it is half a day's journey to properly transact business.

As far as the United States court-rooms are concerned, you well know their condition. They are a disgrace to a civilized community, indeed but little better than the "black hole of Calcutta" or the hold of a revolutionary prison-ship.

The pension office is in rented quarters; so also the surgeon of marine; so also one or more of the route or post-office agents located in this city.

There can be no question raised as far as the necessity of the new building is concerned.

A business view of the progress of the work will also lead to the same conclusion. Building material and labor, both skilled and unskilled, are both alike very low in price. And now is the time to build. Again, the thousands of laborers and mechanics in our city and vicinity that have been seeking work and finding none are certainly entitled to consideration. If you could stand in my place for just one day and take note of the applicants for work, you would appreciate how great a boon the Government work is to the hundreds now employed and the many hundreds more of dependent wives and little ones. Neither are the benefits confined to Cincinnati. The stone used in the construction of the foundations and piers of the "subbasement" are furnished from Greensburgh and Saint Paul, Indiana, either in Mr. HOLMAN's present district or the one he formerly represented. The pitiable appropriation contemplated will even cramp these contractors, who are still delivering stone. The iron-work for the basement and first story is under contract in Louisville; a portion of the granite is furnished from Missouri; the cement from Louisville; the mills are, however, in Indiana; and so on throughout the several departments of the building.

Regarding another matter in connection with building, I crave your indulgence to say that the money heretofore expended, as far as I have controlled it, I know has been judiciously and honestly applied. Our record is clean. Neither has the building and the work connected therewith been made a mere channel of partisan aggrandizement. I am free to say that as far as politics are concerned I am now and always have been a republican; but in the discharge of official duties I have kept an eye single to the good of the public service and the interest committed to my care.

In conclusion, I would urge you and Mr. SAYLER to use your best endeavors to largely increase the contemplated appropriation. It is certainly a just, economical, and an every way wise thing to do.

Respectfully,

SAMUEL HANNAFORD,
Superintendent United States Custom-house and Post-office, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Hon. H. B. BANNING,
House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it be in order to move to amend the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Tennessee that it is undoubtedly in order to move an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I move as a compromise the proposition to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] by substituting $300,000 for $400,000.

Mr. RANDALL. You might as well compromise in that way all through the bill.

Mr. SAYLER. I believe that $300,000 would carry us through the summer, and therefore I will accept the amendment offered by the member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. SAYLER. I object to being interrupted by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; he does not quite own this House, so far as I know.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe the Chair recognized me to ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing the debate on the pending paragraph.

Mr. O'NEILL. Does that include the whole of the appropriations for public buildings?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not; it includes only the clause now under consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1846) authorizing the retirement of Colonel W. H. Emory with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general;

An act (H. R. No. 1989) granting a pension to Robert Cavanaugh;

An act (H. R. No. 2198) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha R. Robinson, of Portsmouth, Ohio;

An act (H. R. No. 2824) to change the name of the steamboat Paragon, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania;

An act (H. R. No. 2849) for the relief of William Rule, postmaster at Knoxville, Tennessee;

An act (S. No. 558) making a further appropriation for the erection of Government buildings in Dover, Delaware; and

An act (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, of Missouri, late disbursing officer of the United States Navy.

Mr. WHITTHORNE asked, and obtained, leave for the withdrawal of the papers in the case of F. F. McLaurin, now before the Committee on War Claims and not acted on.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. Pending that motion, I move that debate on all the paragraphs relating to public buildings shall be limited to five minutes for and five minutes against each paragraph.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Pending that motion, I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn takes precedence of the motion for a recess.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and it was not agreed to, upon a division—ayes 16, noes not counted.

Mr. RANDALL. I will modify my motion in regard to limiting debate, and will move that all debate on the pending paragraph be closed when the consideration of the sundry civil bill is again resumed in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAGE. I insist upon my motion for a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move to amend so as to take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

The amendment of Mr. LUTTRELL was not agreed to; and the motion of Mr. PAGE was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. RANDALL to close debate on the pending paragraph of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BANNING. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BANNING. Will not the gentleman listen to a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Not now.

The motion to limit debate was then agreed to; and the motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The pending paragraph was the following:

Custom-house and post-office, Cincinnati, Ohio; for continuation of building, $200,000.

The pending amendment was the amendment of Mr. SAYLER, as modified by accepting the amendment of Mr. ATKINS, to strike out $200,000 and insert $300,000.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending paragraph is exhausted.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. SAYLER, as modified; and upon a division there were—ayes 68, noes 66.

Mr. RANDALL. No quorum has voted, and I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. BANNING were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 67, noes 68.

Pending the announcement of the result of the vote,

Mr. RANDALL said: A majority having voted against the amendment, it is rejected. In order to avoid the point of order that no quorum has voted, I am willing to consent that the amendment may be offered in the House and a vote taken upon it. If the House will make a record to increase the amounts for public buildings, it will relieve the Committee on Appropriations from all responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I move to insert after the pending paragraph the following:

Custom-house and post-office, Chicago, Illinois, for continuing the building, $250,000.

The custom-house and post-office building at Chicago, in consequence of some defect in the foundation, was delayed during nearly the whole building season of last year, and hence after the work was recommenced in the month of August or September but a comparatively small amount of work could be done.

The CHAIRMAN, (there being much confusion in the Hall.) The gentleman from Illinois will suspend until order is restored in the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. As the committee seems to be somewhat restive I move that the committee now take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend so as to take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the committee now takes a recess, what becomes of the House in the mean time? My point of order is that the Committee of the Whole cannot take a recess.

The CHAIRMAN. In the judgment of the Chair it is competent for the committee to take a recess without rising and going back into the House.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair will permit me to bow in wonder at his decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] to take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 54, noes 71.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires now to say that upon consultation with the Speaker pro tempore of the House, whose conviction seems to be clear that it is not competent for the Committee of the Whole to take a recess without rising and going back into the House, in deference to that opinion the Chair asks to withdraw his ruling, although the present occupant of the chair is still thoroughly and clearly convinced that it is competent for the committee to take a recess.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that if I were in the chair I would give the same decision. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill be taken from the Speaker's table and non-concurred in, and, for the sake of expedition, that a committee of conference be appointed on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. RANDALL. I move also that the Senate amendments be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. RANDALL, Mr. SPARKS, and Mr. HURLBUT as the committee of conference.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now take a recess till eight o'clock.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend the motion so as to provide that the recess be until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at eight o'clock p. m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) on the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The pending amendment was that offered by Mr. CAULFIELD, to insert after line 458 the following:

Custom-house and post-office, Chicago, Illinois, for the continuation of building, $250,000.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Chairman, at the time the recess was taken I was showing that the progress of the building in Chicago had been impeded by the fact that a defect was discovered in the foundation of the building just before the building season commenced last year. The construction of the building was thus delayed, and was not recommenced, I think, until September. During the interval, however, stone had accumulated upon the ground and at the places where it was being dressed, and when the work was recommenced it was necessary that large amounts of money then on hand should be paid out in consummation of contracts already begun. The work has been going on since that time until now. The walls of the building are yet by no means completed.

It is alleged by the chairman that there is now on hand a large amount of money with which to go on with the construction of this building. In the presence of the chairman of this committee and Mr. HOLMAN, of the Committee on Appropriations, I had an interview the other day with the Government Architect, Mr. Potter, to whom I put the question whether the money now on hand was sufficient to go on with the building until another appropriation could be made in course of time. He replied that the money now on hand would not put the building under cover; that if it should be allowed to remain without cover for the winter, it would be materially damaged; but if $250,000 were appropriated now, it would enable him to put the building under cover and to go on with the work upon the interior of the building during the winter season. In that state of affairs he would expect to be able to complete the building in a year from this time.

Instead of the appropriation of this $250,000 being contrary to economy, it would be a matter of great economy, for the reason that if it be not appropriated the completion of the building will be postponed probably for another year. The Government is now paying from $40,000 to $50,000 annually as rent for buildings occupied for court-rooms, marshal's offices, and for the post-office. That expenditure will have to be continued as long as the building remains in an incomplete condition.

It will also be remembered that Chicago has suffered very much by the fire which occurred in 1871; that thousands of her working-people were deprived of employment, and that the construction of this building afforded to those poor men the means of a scanty livelihood when their homes had been burned and they had been thrown upon the cold world's charity. Those men were again thrown out of work for the whole season of last year, until September, when a few of them were again employed. As the work progressed the ordinary number of men was finally engaged upon the building; but if the work be stopped, they will be again out of employment. They will then have no means of sustenance; for in these dull times it is impossible for them to obtain other employment.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask for two minutes more in order that I may be enabled to read a letter which I hold in my hand from the Supervising Architect.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Potter, the architect, says:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
June 14, 1876.

I have to inform you that the amount, $250,000, included in the "estimate of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877," is absolutely necessary to be appropriated for the proper and economical continuation of the work upon the construction of the United States custom-house, court-house, and post-office at Chicago, Illinois. With this sum made available, in addition to the balance now in the Treasury, I feel confident of being able to place the roof upon the building and protect the work from the severities of the coming winter season, and advance the entire work during that season to such a point as will enable me to fit the building for the accommodation of the Post-Office Department on or before the 4th of July, 1877. I cannot urge too strongly the making of this appropriation, the necessity for which is apparent from the fact that the public offices in Chicago are now located in buildings totally unsuited to their wants, and for which enormous rentals are paid annually. The work upon the new building has been delayed by a series of events unequaled in the construction of any building under the direction of this office, and its completion at an early day is not only a necessity to supply the demands of the public service, but will result in a large saving to the Government from rentals and furnish proper facilities for the citizens of Chicago.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. POTTER,
Supervising Architect.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the amount which remained there when the committee made the investigation on this subject was $631,892 unexpended, but there were claims against that which reduced the amount to $596,216.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask whether there were not claims against that sum?

Mr. RANDALL. I have given the statement as it was given to me, and I believe it to be correct. Now, the gentleman is mistaken, for this $250,000 which is asked is for the continuation of the building.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. So that the $250,000 is not sufficient to complete the building at all. There are $596,000 to be expended during this year, which is $150,000 more than we have allowed to be expended during the next fiscal year on any other building in the United States, and yet they are not satisfied. They want to add $250,000 more, which makes $850,000 on this building; $400,000 more than we have recommended on any public building in the United States.

Under these circumstances I think the gentleman ought not to press the amendment. The policy of the committee has been in respect to these public buildings as far as possible to finish as many of the small buildings as possible. And you will observe in these appropriations that the smaller buildings have been given the preference in this respect and that the cutting off has been in reference to the larger buildings. For instance, we cut off Philadelphia $400,000; we cut off Saint Louis $300,000; we cut off Cincinnati $200,000; we cut off New York $200,000. We cut off from the larger buildings which could not be completed during the next fiscal year where we could do the work slowly and threw in toward the smaller buildings enough money in that way so as to complete them.

I think it was a wise proceeding, and I hope the House will not disturb the policy agreed upon by the committee. We feel that at this time two millions and more of dollars was all that could properly be expended from the Treasury of the United States for these public buildings. Last year when we had struck the decrease in the revenue which we are now beginning to realize, we gave more than four millions. Now, we thought there was great liberality in proposing to give $2,000,000 and more to public buildings of the United States out of the public Treasury.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Let me correct an erroneous statement.

Mr. RANDALL. Go on.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The gentleman misunderstood me or I did not make myself intelligible if he supposed I said that the $250,000 was sufficient to complete the building. I did not say so, and I did not intend to be so understood. What I say is that if $250,000 is appropriated it will enable the Architect to put the roof on the building, and to do work on the inside of the building during the winter season. Otherwise if the roof is not put on the building it will be damaged for the want of a roof during the winter.

Mr. RANDALL. One word more. This letter of the Architect is the same old story as to every public building. It is the same statement before our committee. It is a natural statement, and I am not surprised at it. Here is an officer of the Government who has made his estimates. He has made them $5,300,000, and it is the most natural thing in the world that he should adhere rigidly, so far as he can, to them. He does not realize, as we do, the terrible embarrassment to commerce and trade of every description, to the manufacturing, industrial, and agricultural interests of the country. We see it and hear of it every day.

Mr. HARRISON. I make the pro forma amendment of striking out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations assumes that of course the Architect will make a false statement to this House. What right has the chairman to say he knows better than the Architect what ought to be done there? Does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations understand these things so well? There are five hundred and odd thousand dollars yet unexpended, but owing to the fact that the materials have been accumulating for nearly a year while that building was stopped without any fault of our people, this five hundred and odd thousand dollars will be exhausted. The stone will be cut and placed in that building before the middle of next October. Then what will be its condition? Under the laws of the United States the Architect can make no contract for the roof of that building until the appropriation has been made. In the middle of next October you will find that building with $3,000,000 expended in one of the worst climates for a building in such condition in the world, subject to larger vicissitudes of weather than any other city in America is subject to. Three million dollars' worth of building without a roof! And I know whereof I speak, because I am an owner and builder in Chicago. I know that this building now erected to the cost of $3,000,000 will deteriorate inside of the six months of winter a large part of the amount now asked by the Architect if left exposed during the winter weather. The gentleman laughs. I have seen a building in Chicago thrown out of plumb six inches by one winter's "freeze." It was a question last year whether the freeze itself was not what was the matter with that building, instead of the fault of the architect. Six or seven architects there consulted, and they never determined whether it was the fault of the original architect in laying his foundations or the freeze.

Now, sir, are you going to leave three millions of property uncovered and unprotected—for what? To save $250,000? No, sir; but to save an advance of $250,000 for one year. In the city of Chicago we pay $17,000 for a post-office; $25,000 for a custom-house; $2,500 for an appraiser's office and stores; in all, $44,500. And here, with two million five hundred thousand dollars' worth of buildings already erected, this economical committee, that has got economy on the brain so much that it cannot see out of the rut in which it is placed, refuses to advance simply $250,000, and allows $2,500,000 to be destroyed.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Wisconsin. I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment, and yield my time in opposition to it to my distinguished friend from Chicago, [Mr. HARRISON.]

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for his courtesy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we as agents of this great country should act here as business men. If I have to rent a store for $10,000 and I can borrow money enough to build it at a cost per annum of $500, would not I be thought a simpleton if I did not borrow the money and go on and build, and by building save my rent?

They say here that the Government has no money. Sir, the Government has the best of all money; it has boundless credit. It can borrow as much as it pleases at 5 per cent. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars costs the Government $12,500 per annum by borrowing this money, if we have it not. But I do not believe that we will have to borrow a single dollar. We simply put it out of one pocket and it returns to the other. We simply circulate it. We are rich today; but we seem to be poor because the money stands still in the vaults of the Treasury. Let it circulate. Erect buildings, or rather finish those buildings commenced. Give labor employment, and thus make money do its legitimate duty. Finish the buildings which winter may find in an unprotected condition; and thus you will do a triple service: You will employ idle labor, you will protect the buildings now in course of erection, and you will save a large rental.

The gentlemen of this committee seem to think that money idle in the Treasury is wealth. Sir, money is the grandest machine to move the world; but money must move or it moves not the world. Idle money is the most useless of all commodities. Money moving is a blessing from high heaven. Now, by the expenditure here of $12,500 a year in interest we save $44,500 in the way of rent and save $2,500,000 of public property already reared up in the city of Chicago and liable to destruction from the vicissitudes of our climate.

Will this committee go before the city of Chicago, a city the very center of the labor union, a city in which four or five papers are published pouring out to the country every day appeals to the wants and to the passions of the laboring-man? Are you going there to stop work on this building and let them say, "Here this democratic Congress has not brains enough to see that by the expenditure of $250,000 it saves from destruction three millions of property?" Sir, this is no small matter. We may have in Chicago bread riots, and this blow will fall just before the election, when we are going to elect Tilden or Hancock, or some other of the "great unknowns. [Cries of "No, never!" from the republican side of the House, and laughter.] Yes, sir, we are going to have an election. And my friend from Illinois [Mr. FORT] and Judge KELLEY will get up and say, "See what these democrats have brought upon you," and they will say it with some show of reason.

I ask this House to save this building. Chicago pays $8,000,000 of revenue every year into the Treasury of the United States. Says Judge KELLEY, "But do you drink it?" Ay, we drink five times, man for man, as much as does any city in the East. [Laughter.] Five times, sir! We make the whisky; but they say, "Ah, you are the makers; we are the consumers." Let us see how that is. We make whisky to be shipped to the East to manufacturers, and they ship it back to us, doctored up, watered, and adulterated with 100 per cent of profit, and we consume it. That is the way the West pays the taxes of this Government. And why? Because the East keeps men in Congress here who manage to do something for it. The East keeps them here, and they work for the interest of the East and the detriment of the West. And my republican friends will drive out every single democrat from the West, and this fall we may have the misfortune to elect another republican President, [cries from the democratic side of "No, never!" and laughter,] if you gentlemen on the democratic side of this House do not act more wisely.

Mr. LE MOYNE. I take the liberty of trespassing for a few moments on the patience of the committee to make a very short statement in explanation of the reasons why Chicago asks for a small appropriation. As I look over this bill I see how large appropriations are made for some of the other cities, and at the same time the chairman of the committee stated that these are greatly reduced from former appropriations, and when I consider the amount that Chicago asks I can only again be reminded of the extreme modesty of Chicago.

Now, sir, I have always been in favor of retrenchment and economy, but I am opposed to this kind of economy which takes in at the spigot and lets out at the bung-hole, and it seems to me that this matter is going in that direction. In 1871, prior to the fire, Chicago had a building which accommodated the post-office and custom-house and the courts of the United States. The fire consumed the roof of that building and the inside part of it, but did not destroy the walls. The walls were left standing. Sir, that building could have been repaired for the use of the Government at the estimated cost of $400,000. Some enterprising person, conceiving that it would be better for individual purposes to put up a new building and rent it to the Government instead of improving what remained of the old building by putting a roof on, constructed a new building, which was rented to the Government, and the rent agreed upon was $25,000 a year on a three years' lease. That lease was taken. Now at that time that was an extremely high rent, but the Government was at the mercy of the man who owned that building. I do not know why, but I suppose because the Government could not do otherwise than pay the rent.

I understand gentlemen here to say that the reason why the Government had to pay so high a rent was because the Government had nothing but greenbacks to pay it with. That building did not accommodate all the wants of the Government in the city of Chicago. The Government was compelled to rent a church and paid for that church $20,000 a year. They could not refit the building which the Government owned but they could fit up the church. The total amount now paid for rent for Federal offices in Chicago is $54,000 a year. Now this lease has been made for the accommodation of the United States courts for three years. I never knew why this church was taken for the use of the Government except that it adjoins the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, and it might be that when the distillers came there to pay their taxes they would be influenced by the sanctity of the Young Men's Christian Association and make honest returns. I am sorry to say that the experiment failed. Even then the wants of the Government were not supplied, and they had to make a new lease for three years for the post-office at a rent of $25,000 for that same back-building. The post-office needed another building, and they had to rent an additional one for which they paid $30,000. I have the figures here from the Post-Office Department to-day, so that the Government is now paying rent for buildings to the amount of about $60,000 a year and refused to go on and finish this building; so that the Government has perpetrated what is really a gross extravagance instead of economy.

Mr. FOSTER. I am gratified beyond measure to find my democratic friends from Illinois and Ohio preaching the doctrine that it is not economy to save at the spigot while the bung-hole is running. Now I want to say to this House that Chicago is as well treated as any other locality in the country in this bill.

The gentleman from Chicago says that there are $3,000,000 worth of property in Chicago without a roof. Why, Mr. Chairman, that same gentleman has been voting for a Navy Department without a roof, standing by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He is an excellent watch-dog, but he does not bark when any of the family are around. He has been voting for a consular and diplomatic bill without a roof, for a post-office appropriation bill without a roof, but when we come to the Chicago post-office, where $3,000,000 worth of property are without a roof, then he rises in a terrible way. Now I want to say to you democrats who stand by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that when the matter comes home to you, if you have any part or lot in this reduction of $30,000,000 that you are about to make, stand by it faithfully. I know that the whole principle here is wrong. I know that you ought to have given for the public buildings of the country $4,000,000 instead of $2,000,000, but the whole principle is wrong. You have stood by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whenever anybody else was hurt; now stand by him when you are hurt yourselves.

Mr. RANDALL. Something has been said here about the stone used in these buildings. Now I want to tell the committee something about the manner of conducting the erection of public buildings. I want to tell the committee about my own city of Philadelphia. Now in that city we are in this situation, that an enormous sum of money has been expended on stone for the first, second, and third stories of the building; so that all the stone needed for the first story is ready, and nearly all needed for the second and third stories is ready; but the stone for the foundations has not been contracted for, and therefore I have found it necessary to insert the proviso that this money should be expended for the completion of the foundation and the putting up of the first story.

Now, this reminds me very much of something that occurred when I first came to Congress. I happened at that time to live upon the outskirts of Georgetown, and a man who had been in the Army settled in my immediate neighborhood, and people generally supposed that he was not very sound in his mind. He put down four large poles. I do not know that he had "economy on the brain," but he certainly had "music on the brain," for he sang all day; it was not the music of the Marine Band, but he supplied his music himself. The first thing that we saw him do was to put the roof upon the four poles and proceed with the building and carry it story by story toward the foundation. It was a very low ceiling; for he had too much roof. He lived in the third story, climbing up the poles to get in there. Then he built the second story; and finally he managed to get a parlor.

Now, I submit to the gentleman from Chicago that that man was generally credited with being insane. He had not economy on the brain, I suppose, although he was a very industrious man, but we all thought he had music on the brain.

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to ask the gentleman if that is the way he is disposed to build the public building in Chicago, to build from the top down?

Mr. RANDALL. I want to build steadily up from the foundation, just as every other house should be built. But I was very much reminded of the man who built his house from the roof downward when I was listening to the gentleman from Chicago.

Now, to be serious, and I want to treat this House with good humor, as I have been in good humor in relating this story, the truth is there is money enough already appropriated to go on slowly with this building. I hope, therefore, that the House will not disturb the condition of the $600,000 which will have to be expended in Chicago.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania answer one question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois on the left of the Chair [Mr. CANNON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I want to say that I live in Illinois, away down in the country. There are many of my constituents who have never seen the public buildings of Chicago or anywhere else. But once in a while we from the country journey up to Chicago, which, by the way, is our principal city, I believe, and we like to see the public buildings there. We like to travel around Chicago to pay for our whisky and cigars, and have a good time generally.

I am therefore in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. HARRISON] for several reasons. One reason is that I have been on this side of the House protesting against the cutting down of appropriations ever since I have been here this year, and I believe I have been beaten every time. It is a great deal like rubbing salt on a sore back, to be beaten all the time. I do not want my friends from Chicago—there are three of them, I believe, on that side of the House—to feel as I have felt this session. It is not a good feeling to have. It has been some time, gentlemen, since you have felt bad on that side of the House.

Another thing; Chicago is a pretty smart little city if it is in Illinois, or Illinois in Chicago, whichever way it may be. We in Illinois think that we pay some internal-revenue tax. It is said that we pay this year over $20,000,000. I think that is about six millions more than is paid by any other State.

There is nothing in this bill for Chicago, yet when I turn to page 20 of the printed bill the very first paragraph I find is this: "Custom-house, court-house, and post-office, Evansville, Indiana, for continuation of building, $50,000." I was surprised, and I must say thunder-struck, when I turned to the estimates and found that the entire estimate for Evansville was $50,000. I suppose it must be on account of the large amount of internal-revenue tax paid by Indiana. I want to call attention to the fact that Chicago does not get anything in this bill for her public building, while Indiana gets for the public building at Evansville all that is asked for.

Now I have no doubt that that is a mistake. But I want to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to it, especially the attention of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] for somebody might say that because he was on the Committee on Appropriations therefore the committee give full up for Evansville all that was asked, but did not give Chicago anything.

Now let me say in cool, hard earnest that, while there are some things about Chicago that I do not like, and while I expect after the next election to like her a great deal better than I do now, yet personally I like the gentleman from Chicago. Chicago is a grand, noble city, the metropolis of a grand, noble, wealthy, fast-growing State; a city doing more business to-day, I take it, than any other city in the Union, unless it be New York, and crowding fast on the heels of New York, which has its magnificent public building completed, or about finished. It is right and proper that Chicago should have its public building, and I ask in fairness that this side of the House and the other side of the House will do what is right and proper for Chicago.

Mr. HENDERSON obtained the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. After the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] has spoken, I will ask consent of the committee that all debate upon this amendment be considered as closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, after the five minutes to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] is entitled have expired, all debate upon the pending amendment be considered as closed?

Objection was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] will proceed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish to occupy the attention of the committee for more than a few moments; but living as I do in the neighborhood of the city of Chicago, and knowing how much the people of that city are suffering for the want of this very building, I feel that it is but an act of justice to the State in which I live and to one of the great and prosperous cities of the country for me to say a word in behalf of this amendment.

It is said that there is an unexpended balance for this building which is re-appropriated. I do not know whether that is the fact or not. I suppose, however, it is or will be re-appropriated. But, Mr. Chairman, if that be true, it grows out of the simple fact that on account of some supposed defect in the foundation of that building this money has not been expended, as it should have been, during the present fiscal year. Yet during all this time that city of now nearly half a million of inhabitants has been compelled to transact its great business, the business of the United States courts, of the custom-house, of the internal-revenue offices, and other business of the General Government in most inconvenient and unsuitable buildings. And I think, Mr. Chairman, it is not true economy for us to postpone from year to year the erection of this public building so much needed in the city of Chicago, paying, as the Government is doing, very high rents, and allowing the community to suffer from the inconvenient places necessarily used for the transaction of the public business. I say that where it is necessary to erect public buildings for the convenience of the people in the transaction of the public business, and where we can thereby give employment to the distressed laboring-men and mechanics of the country, it is the duty of the Government to do so. Let us erect these public buildings where they are needed, and give employment, so far as the Government may have it to give, to these mechanics and laborers of the country who we hear so much said about their being out of employment. It will be a relief to them, and the Government will only be doing what it ought to do.

I believe that this building in Chicago ought to be erected at the earliest practicable day. If there is any unexpended balance on hand, it is only because the work for the last year has been suspended. And the people of Chicago having suffered so much inconvenience for the want of this building, it is all the more necessary to push forward the work now and complete it.

Mr. Chairman, there is a large amount of business done in the United States courts of Chicago and in the Government offices of that great city. Chicago pays a large amount of money into the Treasury of the United States, larger perhaps than any city in the Union, of internal revenue. This is a building, as I believe, much needed, and I hope it will be completed at the earliest practicable day, and for that purpose I think the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CAULFIELD, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 33, noes not counted.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend by inserting after the pending paragraph the following:

Custom-house and post-office at Albany, New York: For continuation of building, the sum of $50,000.

I desire to say a few words in advocacy of this amendment. For this custom-house and post-office at Albany, New York, the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended an appropriation of $150,000, which the Committee on Appropriations have seen fit to disregard. I understand it has been the policy of that committee, or at least a majority of its members, not to vote an appropriation for any public building not actually in process of construction. Now, while this determination may seem to be a broad stride in the way of economy, it in some instances is grossly unjust and will prove in the end a niggardly and false economy, not only unworthy of the committee, but seriously injurious and detrimental to the best interests of the Government.

I ask attention while I endeavor to demonstrate by statistical information and otherwise the urgent necessity for progressing at once the erection of the building at Albany, which, in my opinion, has already been commenced.

The first act of Congress looking to the construction of a building for Government purposes in the city of Albany was approved March 12, 1872. (Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 39.) This act limited the cost of the building to $350,000, but made no appropriation, and required the site to be given by the city. The second act, approved June 10, 1872, appropriated $100,000 to commence the work. Pending the passage of these acts much time was spent by the Supervising Architect of Government buildings and committees of citizens and of the common council of the city in the selection of a proper site on which to erect the building. After a careful examination of all the questions relating to the subject—the amount and importance of postal, internal-revenue, pension, and court business, the value of property and papers to be protected, the convenience of officials and citizens—it was decided that the property located on the corner of State street and Broadway, known as the Exchange Building, together with a building known as the Mechanics and Farmers' Bank, should be purchased at a cost of about $300,000, the city agreeing to close a street known as Exchange street running between the above-named buildings and to pay one-half, the Government paying the balance for the property.

Upon this understanding Congress passed an act March 30, 1873, appropriating $150,000, and subsequently on June 23, 1874, an act appropriating $5,000, its portion for the payment of the site; the city appropriating a like sum and vesting the title to the property in the Government. Thus it will be seen that $155,000 has already been expended by the Government for the land, and $100,000 appropriated toward the construction of the new building.

During the past fall and winter a portion of the latter sum has been expended in taking down the exchange and bank buildings, the materials of which now lie piled up on two of the most important thoroughfares in the city, to the great inconvenience of business men in the vicinity and the citizens generally. This was done by order of the Government; and if the building had not been taken down the Government might have realized by rental from 10 to 12 per cent. per annum. This would seem to be virtually, if not actually, the commencement of a new building. Now, at any time the common council of the city may pass an ordinance ordering the removal of the débris, which, as I have said, is blocking up the streets, and which, a large portion being blocks of granite, would be an expense of several thousand dollars to the Government; and to replace them again for the purposes of the building would cost as much more. This certainly would seem to be a short-sighted and narrow-minded species of economy.

Exchange street has been closed and all the conditions and promises to be performed on the part of the city have been honestly and faithfully carried out; and I most respectfully submit that the Government on its part should in good faith perform the obligations and contract entered into by its Congress with the city of Albany. The unexpended balance in the Treasury is totally inadequate to any further progress of the work, for the reason that the foundation and a portion of the superstructure should be built and well covered up to secure protection from the rigor of our northern winter, which will require an expenditure of a much larger sum.

It is also desirable and important that additional ground, say twenty-five feet, adjoining that already secured be purchased at once, thus taking advantage of the present depreciation in real estate, to obtain the necessary protection from fire from contiguous property. By the action of Congress in this matter and the progress which has already been made some idea may be formed of the importance attached to this question by those who have given it due consideration.

It may be proper right here to submit additional reasons, if they be deemed necessary, why this work should at once be progressed and carried on to completion as rapidly as possible.

The business of the post-office in the city of Albany is among the most important of any in the country, the office there ranking among the first in the amount of postal matter distributed and fourteenth in the list of amounts received and disbursed. For the transaction of this vast business the first floor of a building 27 feet wide by 270 feet deep is now used. Its safety is endangered from many causes by occupants of other portions of the building. Owing to its peculiar dimensions, the cost for heating and lighting is over $2,000 per annum. It has few conveniences for employés, is out of the way and inconvenient for the people, and costs the Government $4,000 per annum rent.

The Government pension agency in that city is also one of the most important in the country, the number of pensioners paid there every three months averaging over ten thousand, and the annual disbursements amounting to over $1,500,000. The apartments occupied for this purpose are wholly inadequate and unfit for the magnitude of the business transacted.

The internal revenue collected in the Albany district is also equaled by few in the country, the annual amount averaging during the past fourteen years about $1,500,000 and the aggregate over $20,000,000. The apartments for this service are situated in a hired building and subject to the usual objection in such cases, and also inconvenient and expensive.

This value of goods, lumber, &c., on which duty is paid in Albany amounts every year to over $1,000,000, and the duties to over $300,000, and increasing at the rate of 25 per cent. per annum. For this branch of the service there is almost no convenience at all.

For the United States courts, three terms of which are held in Albany each year, there is absolutely no accommodation whatever, the marshal having to look for a room sometimes a month before the term, and a forced removal has been endured more than once and an adjournment made necessary for want of a regular place in which to hold court.

It is perhaps needless to add that Albany, the capital of the Empire State, is a city of about one hundred thousand inhabitants; that its citizens are among the most intelligent, enterprising, and respectable of any in the land; that it has contributed more to the Government and received less from it than any other city of like population; that, having performed all its stipulations with the Government in good faith, now that labor and material are cheap and the expense of building less than at any other time, it feels that it has the right not only to ask but to demand that at least a portion of the appropriation recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury be at once made for the speedy completion of this building. The recommendation was $150,000, but the Supervising Architect is of opinion that $50,000 is sufficient to complete the foundation, as shown by the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
June 21, 1876.

SIR: In reply to yours of this date, relative to the funds required for the construction of the United States custom-house, court-house, and post-office building at Albany, New York, I have to inform you that, in addition to the balance now in the Treasury available for the work, the sum of $50,000 will be required to complete the excavation, lay the concrete foundation, and construct the building up to the grade of the surrounding streets. In the construction of this portion of the work the material reserved from the old buildings formerly upon the site, now stored on the streets surrounding the work, will be consumed, and the work can be protected from the frosts of the winter. I understand that the city authorities of Albany are very much dissatisfied with the occupation of the streets by this material, and will demand, if it is not used within a reasonable time, that it shall be removed therefrom to the site of the building. The cost of this removal will add to that of the building without any benefit to the Government arising therefrom, and the material cannot be stored upon any portion of the premises without materially interfering with the progress of the work.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. POTTER,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. C. H. ADAMS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote on the amendment. I think the disposition of the committee is manifest.

The amendment of Mr. ADAMS was not agreed to, there being ayes 47, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Custom-house, court-house, and post-office, Evansville, Indiana: For continuation of building, $50,000.

Mr. LORD. I move to amend by reducing this appropriation to $25,000. I regret that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is not present; but I am informed that this appropriation for Evansville, Indiana, is the only appropriation which is fully up to the estimate of the engineer or architect, as the case may be. Therefore I think it ought to be reduced one-half.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope that will not be done. The gentleman from Indiana is not present. This was agreed to by the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe there is only a very small unexpended balance. [To Mr. RANDALL:] How much?

Mr. RANDALL. Forty-nine thousand dollars.

Mr. ATKINS. Well, that will make about $100,000 altogether.

Mr. RANDALL. If the committee seriously entertains the thought of cutting down this appropriation, I wish the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to be present. I have sent for him. Speaking for no one else than myself, I want to say (as I have a right to do) that in committee I voted to make the appropriation for this building $25,000. I would like, however, to have the gentleman from Indiana present when this matter is acted on, and I suggest that the paragraph be passed over for a moment. I have sent for the gentleman.

Mr. EAMES. I hope that the paragraph will be passed over until the gentleman from Indiana is here.

Mr. HURLBUT. I know he wants to strike it all out; and, if he does not come, I shall have to make that motion. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I am opposed to practicing this sort of false economy. I hold that the time for the Government to erect buildings is when labor is cheap, when poor laboring-men are on the verge of starvation. When private individuals are building, when they are going into the market and making their demand for laborers, that is the time when the Government should not interfere to raise the prices of labor. But when the people of the country are suffering because money does not circulate, that is the time the Government should go on and erect buildings.

Some gentlemen seem to think that when a public building is erected the money expended for it is lost. But, sir, it is only a change in the character of property. The money simply goes out of one pocket into others. But there stands the building, the evidence of wealth; and it is the thing that the people want.

In every country under heaven where there have been enlightened rulers the periods when the people were starving were the periods when public improvements were erected. But in this country when labor is idle on the street and begging for leave to toil, when men cannot earn their bread because there is no employment, gentlemen come here with false principles of economy and propose to stop work upon buildings in course of erection, and to allow those buildings to be destroyed. This they call "economy."

Sir, I am in favor of the appropriation for this building at Evansville. It is already in progress of construction. The Government will gain by finishing it. It will save the large amount which it now annually pays as rent; it will be a measure of economy. Let the Government do as a private individual would do if he wanted to build. They ask where is the money coming from? This money comes like all other money of the Government. Money passes from hand to hand. I once saw a ten-dollar bill marked on court day and track was kept to see what that $10 would pay in passing from hand to hand, and it paid eight hundred and odd dollars during one single day. But here they keep money hoarded. They tie it up when circulation would make it abundant. I am opposed to any such economy.

Mr. FULLER. I am obliged to the gentleman from Illinois for the speech he has made in favor of this measure. I desire to inform the committee that this building is in my district in the city of Evansville, and not in the district of my colleague, [Mr. HOLMAN,] as some gentlemen seemed to suppose. And it is important, Mr. Chairman, that this $50,000 should be appropriated at this time in order to place this building in a condition to be covered in before winter. I ask that the report of the Committee on Appropriations in this regard be sustained.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a balance of $49,000 remaining unexpended.

Mr. FULLER. I have a letter from the superintendent of that building in which he states that money on hand would be exhausted on the 1st of June or the last of May and that unless appropriation is made the building would have to stop, as there would be no money on hand.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it go over until the gentleman from Indiana comes in.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I wish to say a word in regard to this appropriation. I have been disposed to sustain the Committee on Appropriations. They have given Indiana only $50,000. This appropriation is not to be laid out in my district. It is for a building in the extreme southwestern portion of my State. Inasmuch as Indiana only gets $50,000 I am somewhat surprised at the motion to strike out $25,000 of that amount. Indiana has never had any appropriation worth talking about from the Federal Government. She has no extensive public buildings. The Federal Government has received millions of dollars from Indiana in the way of taxes without laying out any money there compared to what other States has received. This building at Evansville, Indiana, is the only custom-house in the entire State.

I hope the report of the committee will be sustained. It has been acting wisely. I have been voting with that committee throughout, and I am disposed to stay with them on this as well as on other matters.

Mr. HURLBUT. Was it not agreed by the House that this should be passed over until the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] came in? If so, what is the use of us arguing it?

The CHAIRMAN The Chair did not understand there was any such agreement, although it was submitted to the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. I heard no objection.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I think the House thoroughly understands the question, and I hope the vote will be taken.

Mr. LORD's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HURLBUT. I move to strike out the whole paragraph, and I do it because I am satisfied if my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who is the high priest of economy, were present he would make a sacrifice of his neighborhood and State to carry out the great principles of economy, retrenchment, and reform. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, this building has cost—I am told the gentleman from Indiana is not here, but I do not know why he is not here—this building has already cost $300,000. There is now unexpended of appropriations, as I learn from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the sum of $49,000. Three hundred thousand dollars for a building in a "tupenny-hapenny" town in the southwest corner of Indiana! There is joy in heaven (which is our side of the House) over one who repents, and we have taken much pleasure in the eleventh-hour repentance of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARRISON.]

Mr. COOK. Heaven is not on your side.

Mr. HURLBUT. It does me good, though the process is hard, to see him converted, for there is no gentleman who has stood up more hard-facedly and more iniquitously in reducing every other interest that has been before this House than my colleague from Chicago, [Mr. HARRISON.] It is a good thing when those things come home to gentlemen. I have not heard their eloquent voices in behalf of any of the other interests which in my opinion have been struck down by this committee. But when the question comes home, when that terrible calamity is presented, when the unintelligent or the intelligent voters of their districts may by possibility remember those things against them—a consideration so small I exceedingly hate to hear any gentleman use it on this floor—when that consideration arises, then for the first time the rut of economy they have been pursuing in the train of this Committee on Appropriations, just as a wagon-load of hoop-poles is dragged behind a team, is abandoned, and they turn out asking large and liberal appropriations for their own neighbors, and as a means of getting at it they log-roll with gentlemen desiring appropriations.

There has been no reason shown here at all by any one why $650,000 should be appropriated at Evansville. No gentleman has got up and said that the $49,000 which remains unexpended is not sufficient to keep up that building. That is the policy upon which this committee has been proceeding, and the rule they apply to one I say they ought to apply to the others. If it is proper sauce for one style of animal it is proper sauce for another. I hope this motion, which, in the interest of economy, retrenchment, and reform, I offer in the name of my absent friend, whose silvery voice has not been heard for two hours and whose cheering presence we miss, for his sake will be agreed to.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I see very clearly, Mr. Chairman, that this motion is not made for any other purpose than to annoy my colleague, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who is not here. It is well understood that this appropriation is necessary in order to secure this building at Evansville. My friend from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] exhibits a great deal of the spirit that is common in some cities of Illinois. They do not know that there is any other place but Illinois. I know that Illinois is a very fine State. I know she has many very fine cities. But, sir, the city of Evansville is a very flourishing city. A large business is transacted there. There is a large wholesale trade in many articles imported there. The navigation of the Ohio is not obstructed at Evansville at all. It is below the falls. I do not understand that there is any earnestness whatever in this motion. I understand it is more particularly to annoy my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who is a man of economy and to whom the country is deeply indebted for his services upon this floor.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. Is Evansville in the district of Mr. HOLMAN or not?

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. It is not. Gentlemen should recollect when they talk of Evansville to annoy Mr. HOLMAN that it is very far distant from his district, about one hundred and fifty miles. Mr. HOLMAN's district is in the extreme eastern portion of the State, while Evansville is in the southwestern portion of the State, more than one hundred and fifty miles from Mr. HOLMAN's district. I wish Mr. HOLMAN were here. No man could defend himself better than he could.

Mr. O'NEILL. I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is on a committee of conference. Could he not be sent for?

Mr. RANDALL. He is unable to come. I ask for a vote.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I move to restore the paragraph. I sympathize with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and if the gentleman from Ohio has not exaggerated the number of roofless buildings that are to be exhibited in this centennial year throughout the country we shall all have occasion to sympathize with the entire Committee on Appropriations and with the democratic party. I never claimed, Mr. Chairman, in my life to be anything but a pure republican, but for three or four minutes I am going to try to say something for the benefit of the democrats.

If the statements that have been made are correct—and, mind you, I base what I have to say upon the truth of those statements—if there is to be exhibited to the world in Chicago a post-office and custom-house roofless, upon which two millions and a half of good money have been spent by the Government of the United States, I say to the Appropriations Committee and to the democratic party that they cannot go hopefully to the next election with such an exhibit. And if you add to them all the other roofless buildings to which the gentleman from Ohio has referred, why you may as well do as my friend from Indiana did to-day in voting against paying the interest on the 3.65 bonds. He found that he was the only man against it and suggested that there should be no vote taken in the negative. Now, you may just as well give up the election and yield to the other side at once if you are to exhibit all these roofless buildings.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. To whom does the gentleman from New York refer?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. In addition to the roofless buildings the policy of the Appropriations Committee in regard to the suspension of labor upon public buildings will in my judgment a few years hence appear most extraordinary.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. You spoke of the gentleman from Indiana. What gentleman from Indiana did you refer to?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I referred to Mr. HOLMAN and will refer to you directly. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I want to say one word to the gentleman from New York. If this attack that is being made here is to be directed at Mr. HOLMAN, I desire to say that Mr. HOLMAN is no more interested in this matter than the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I am supporting Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman misunderstands the drift of my remarks. I moved that Mr. HOLMAN'S proposition be restored.

I was going to say that if the policy of the Appropriations Committee in suspending labor on all these public buildings is carried out there will be too many roofless families in this country for the political success of the democratic party this year.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that there is at this hour every facility for carrying on in a reasonable manner and very economically these public works. There never has been—and this is to the other gentleman from Indiana, (addressing Mr. LANDERS)—there never has been any day—I state this upon figures that do not lie—there never has been at any time so much currency, currency lying idle in the United States in proportion to the amount of business as there is this hour. There is more inflation of the currency now than ever. We hear a great deal about contraction of the currency and the dreadful resumption act. But I say again, upon my knowledge, that there is more inflation of the currency to-day really and relatively to the amount of business being transacted than there ever has been at any other time in the history of the country.

Labor is cheap. You can hire a man for about a dollar a day in greenbacks to carry on all these works, and there never has been a time in the history of the country when the Government might with so much propriety honestly and with a firm, stern hand continue the public works as now. I mean seriously to say that the Committee on Appropriations, in cutting down to the lowest cent the expenditures on all public buildings and works, use an instrument that cuts both ways, for they impoverish labor at the same time that they have the Government property going to destruction.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I would like to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I will answer the question.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. My question is whether my colleague was elected by democrats or by republicans?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I was elected from the city of Brooklyn, where I have lived for thirty years, and in my judgment I had a few more democratic votes than republican; but I wish to say that before the election democrats came to me saying that they were going to vote for me, and warned me not to be anything else but a republican. I should disgrace them if I were to pretend to be anything else but a republican. I am not what is popularly known as an independent republican or a liberal republican. I am a strait republican, but I am also an independent man, who dares to do his duty.

Mr. YOUNG. I do not rise to address the committee either in support or in opposition to the amendment now pending, but I rise simply to ask in favor of Judge HOLMAN, who has been frequently alluded to in this debate, that this clause be passed over until he can be present to explain to the committee his action in the Committee on Appropriations. It places him in a false attitude before the House and before the country, and it is due to him that this matter should not go out to the country until he shall have an opportunity to give the reasons which influenced him in his vote in committee. I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over for the present.

Mr. BUCKNER and others objected.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, but I want to call the attention of the members of the House to the fate of any man who attempts "retrenchment and reform" in this country. A man who has stood here year by year as Judge HOLMAN has in favor of retrenchment and reform, except in his own district, the moment his back is turned his enemies attempt to cut down the appropriation that belongs to him honestly. I wish that gentlemen may see the danger of reform and retrenchment. The moment their backs are turned, their enemies turn on them and rend them. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. We have had fun enough; now let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing over this clause for the present?

Mr. BUCKNER and others objected.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask for a vote on my proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken on Mr. HURLBUT'S amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court-house and post-office, Lincoln, Nebraska: For fencing, grading, approaches, and furniture and carpets, $15,000.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out "$15,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000." My reason for doing this is that at the custom-house and court-house building in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, a number of years ago an appropriation was made to put an expensive fence around it, and last year that fence was taken down at a very great expense.

Mr. RANDALL. I can state the facts about this matter. There is $48,000 unexpended at this point. The estimate was for fencing and grading, and approaches, $25,000, and a large appropriation in addition for furniture. The committee gave $15,000 for fencing and grading and approaches, and for furniture.

Mr. ATKINS. The word "furniture" is not in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. It is in the estimates.

Mr. ATKINS. It is not in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that we cut down the estimate for furniture and carpets from $25,000 to $10,000. We propose to turn over a new leaf in reference to the furnishing of public buildings. We do not need magnificent furniture and the finest carpets. It is proposed to give them substantial furniture and what any member here would think fine carpets for his parlor. Heretofore large sums of money have been wasted on furniture and fine carpets, foreign at that. I see my friend and colleague [Mr. KELLEY] is looking at me, but in order to make the paragraph complete I will move to insert the words "furniture and carpets" after the word "approaches."

Mr. CROUNSE. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the pending paragraph:

For carpeting and furnishing the same, $25,000.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriation as proposed by the committee is $15,000 for the court-house at Lincoln, Nebraska, and it is so small that I thought no one could have objected to it, but to my surprise that little pittance that has been awarded to my State seems to provoke the hostility of some gentlemen for reasons to me unknown.

Now, I am not one of those gentlemen who advertise themselves in advance as being in favor of retrenchment and reform. If there are any words of which I am sick and if there are any words which have been used to cover up hypocrisy, they are those words. And the insincerity of gentlemen who raise this cry is shown whenever it comes home to themselves; when that happens, they squirm. They remind me of Artemus Ward's patriotism. He was willing to fight the rebellion so long as his wife's cousins held out. So, as long as the practice of economy does not affect them, they are for it heartily; but when the matter comes home to these gentlemen, as it has in the proposition to cut down the amount they desire for their localities, they insist that the retrenchment reform should begin and end elsewhere.

Now, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury has recommended an appropriation of $20,000 to finish this building. I do not know upon what estimates gentlemen think that the work can be done for $5,000. It must be in harmony with the rule that seems to prevail here, that when $3,000 is asked for $1,000 is appropriated. I am surprised that they do not cut off the appropriation entirely; that would be retrenchment. Why do they not shut up the courts of justice, discontinue the mails, and stop the administration of the Government generally? That would result in great saving of expense. I insist that this appropriation shall remain as it is, at $15,000, to complete this building in that populous city situated in a rapidly-growing country. And not only that, but the other amount recommended here of $25,000 for furniture should be voted. There is no economy in giving $15,000 necessary in completing a building and then leave it unfurnished. The Government now has to rent buildings for the purposes for which this building would be used. The supervisor asks nothing extravagant. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CROUNSE] is not now in order. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. JONES,] to strike out the word "fencing," and also to reduce the appropriation to $5,000.

The amendment of Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] to insert after the word "approaches" the words "and for furniture and carpets."

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The next question was upon the amendment of Mr. CROUNSE to add to the paragraph these words:

For carpeting and furnishing the same, $25,000.

The question was taken upon the amendment, and was not agreed to.

Mr. CROUNSE. That is just what I expected. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I move to insert the following after the pending paragraph, as a new paragraph:

For court-house and post-office at Topeka, Kansas, $50,000; the entire cost of the building to be erected not to exceed $250,000.

Last winter Congress appropriated the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of procuring a site for the erection of a court-house and post-office at the capital of our State, the city of Topeka. After that appropriation was made, the people of our city raised $10,000 more and procured a first-rate site for the erection of the building, and it is now owned by the Government of the United States, with a fee-simple title, and is ready to have a building erected upon it.

The circuit in which Kansas is situated contains, I believe, nine district courts of the United States, and the Kansas district is the second of the nine in the amount of business there transacted, and is among the first three of the districts in the whole country in reference to the amount of business transacted in the United States courts. Yet up to the present time not a dollar has ever been expended in the State of Kansas for public buildings, although that State contains to-day a population of 600,000 and its capital city has a population of about ten thousand.

I believe that the Committee on Appropriations of the last House, which thoroughly investigated this question, agreed that there has never been more reason for the erection of a public building in any city than in Topeka. We are compelled to-day to depend upon the county for a room in which to hold our courts. The court-room is insufficient for the purpose; there are no rooms in the building for the clerks' offices, and they are now in insecure buildings at least fifteen hundred to two thousand feet away from the room in which the court is held. There is no room for the United States marshal, for the district attorney, or for any other of our officers.

Last fall, owing to the pressure of business in that district, the United States district court was held in the common council room of the city of Topeka, a room only twenty by forty feet in size, while the circuit court was running at the same time in the court-house of the city.

Mr. RANDALL. This building is not yet begun.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. An appropriation has been made for the purchase of the site.

Mr. RANDALL. Simply for the purchase of a site. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommend that no new buildings be commenced. I ask a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken upon the amendment of Mr. BROWN, of Kansas, upon a division there were—ayes 39, noes 67.

No further count being demanded, the amendment was declared to be rejected.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For the remodeling and reconstruction of the building now on the lot and premises in Jersey City, New Jersey, belonging to the United States, for the purpose of a post-office, all the unexpended balance of the amount heretofore appropriated for purchasing the said lot and premises for the site of a post-office building in said city, and also in addition thereto the sum of $12,000.

Mr. LORD. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what amount is included in the term "unexpended balance?"

Mr. RANDALL. I would state that the original act in reference to the building in Jersey City—the gentlemen from New Jersey will correct me if I make an incorrect statement—was for the purpose of purchasing the site, upon which a building was already standing, in which the business of the post-office was being carried on. They desired to have that building torn down and a new building erected, which the Committee on Appropriations decided had better not be done. It was then suggested that, in addition to the balance of the appropriation which was left after the purchase of that lot, (the lot now belongs to the United States,) we should give $12,000 to change the building standing on the lot so as to adapt it to the post-office and for court-rooms. By this additional expenditure of $12,000 we would save altogether the expense of a very costly building in that city.

Mr. DOBBINS. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

For completion of the United States court-house and post-office at Trenton, New Jersey, $34,923.37.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Supervising Architect, in which he states that the sum proposed in my amendment will be necessary to complete the building which is in course of erection in Trenton, New Jersey. I think it must be apparent to the mind of every business man that as a matter of economy purely it would be well to make this appropriation. In the event of its not being made, the money already appropriated will be expended by the month of August next; the building will be left without a roof during the coming winter, and the Government will necessarily be put to the expense of renting for another year the buildings both for post-office and court-house purposes. The sum paid annually for the rent of those two buildings is the larger part of the amount of money necessary to finish the building already so nearly completed.

These considerations, if there were no others, it strikes me, are sufficient to induce every candid, honest-minded man who is disposed to economy, who if he had a matter of business on hand of the same kind would be sure to pursue the course of finishing it under the circumstances, to vote for this appropriation. I am of the opinion that Solomon in his day knew almost as much as some of our modern financiers know to-day. You know that he uttered this proverb: "There is that which scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." I think that is good doctrine to-day. We farmers understand that. When we become so stingy that we will not properly feed our stock, they get poor. When we become so penurious that we will not feed our land, we fail to get a crop. I think it evident that this proverb may be applied to the case in hand. The application of about $34,000 is all that is needed to save that amount in rent in the short space of two years.

Besides, the practical result will be good in giving employment to men who are willing and anxious to work. We are not asking the Government to issue gold-bearing bonds to be sent into a foreign country in order to finish this building. These men, perhaps, would be idle if this work were not done. This view of the subject seems to me a powerful reason in favor of doing the work and doing it now. I undertake to say, without fear of successful contradiction, that no intelligent business man within the sound of my voice would fail to finish the building if his own personal interests were involved and if the surrounding circumstances were such as they are here.

Mr. RANDALL. There is an unexpended balance of appropriation for this building of more than $18,000. The committee deemed that sufficient for the present.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. That is not sufficient to put a roof on the building. Several hundred thousand dollars have been expended on this building; and it only needs the roof. I hope there will be no objection to this appropriation of $34,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for a vote.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being ayes 49, noes not counted.

Mr. COX. For the purpose of making a remark, I move to strike out the last word. I know very well that a great many appropriations made in this bill and in other bills were rendered necessary by certain beginnings in the outgoing administration. Gentlemen know to what administration I refer, without making myself more explicit.

Mr. KELLEY. That of Andrew Johnson?

Mr. COX. The gentleman will find out before I am through.

A great many criticisms upon this side have been made because the Committee on Appropriations of this democratic House has endeavored in some matters to further economy, while in some other matters pursuing what has been done by the previous administration. I heard the gentleman from Illinois speaking a moment ago about "so much saving at the spigot and losing at the bung." I have heard that before. Whenever gentlemen on the other side undertake to defeat the economy and retrenchment which are begun in this House, they invariably appeal to little matters; and we have had, I am told, a debate this evening, which I missed, between two little men—my honored friend from Brooklyn [Mr. CHITTENDEN] and the gentleman who represents the Hudson River, [Mr. WHITEHOUSE.] I think I ought to have been here and taken part in it. [Laughter.]

But I would not despise the day of small things. If I quoted Solomon, like my friend from New Jersey, [Mr. DOBBINS,] I would apply that allusion about scattering abroad to the last ten or twelve years; and I would deduce from it the moral which I once had occasion to tell the other side of the House they ought to learn from the Sunday-school scholar, that—have something to do with both ocean and continent; they make up the sum-total.

Little drops of water,
Little grains of sand,

Why, do not you gentlemen know that your appropriations have already been cut down below this year's estimates by this side of the House $63,000,000?

A MEMBER. Sixty-four million dollars.

Mr. COX. Yes, $64,000,000, according to the tables produced here yesterday. There is a reduction upon the appropriations of last year, not to speak of the estimates, thirty-nine and one-third millions.

Mr. FOSTER. Thirty-two million dollars.

Mr. COX. Well, let it be so, if it satisfies the gentleman. These reductions are made up of little items. All human things are little, considered comparatively. Why, my friend from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] is not as large as the Rocky Mountains; he could not touch the Himalayas, nor the Andes, nor the Alps, and, compared to the moons of Jupiter, he is nowhere in creation. [Laughter.]

All things are comparative. Let us not despise small men or small things. Why, sir, Isaac Newton, who discovered the great law of gravitation, which holds by its unseen hands all the stars together, was born a very little baby, that went into a quart cup. [Laughter.] All things are little. Why, sir, the human race fell because of some person—I think it was a female—eating a little apple. [Laughter.] The apple that William Tell shot at was little; and the apple that fell on the head of Newton and taught him gravitation was little. The acorn is little compared with the oak.

I once had occasion here to speak about the moth, and to kill an appropriation which I supposed was of little account. But when my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, in a subsequent session, I think, looked after it, he found it running up to nearly half a million dollars which you had been voting. It was nothing but the little moth eating out the very vitals of the country, and feeding on clothing besides. [Laughter.]

You call these little things. Why, sir, I read the other day that if all the power used in Illinois during a single summer to crush out the flies—to say "shoo fly!" to those little creatures—were properly collected and utilized, it would suffice to run the gigantic Corliss engine at Philadelphia.

Do not despise the day of small things. Sixty-three million dollars we have saved already in the appropriations! We would save more but for your filibustering to-day. Do you remember how you did it? O, I was mortified after all your profession of economy. How good you were at the beginning of the session! How you declared that you wanted to assist us! Yet to-day, when we were doing all we could to further the bill, the Senate being so much behind, the end of the fiscal year near at hand, and a dead lock threatened, you filibustered to avert, if possible, some catastrophe, I suppose, on the 1st of July.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask for a vote.

Mr. COX. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Post-office and court-house, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: For continuation of building, $350,000; to be used in completing the foundation and setting the stone of the first story.

Mr. LORD. I move in line 487 to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so it will read $250,000, instead of $350,000.

Mr. Chairman, I will say in regard to that amendment that I am so much pleased with the work of the Committee on Appropriations that I think the House ought to encourage it. I do not think the gentleman from Philadelphia will seriously oppose it. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is sufficient for the object proposed, at least at the present time.

Mr. RANDALL. The House must exercise its best judgment on this amendment.

Mr. LORD. I want to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I propose to deduct the same sum of $100,000 from the appropriation for the post-office of the State of New York.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope you will not do that. We have cut New York.

Mr. LORD. Then I will confine myself at present to this amendment.

Mr. LE MOYNE. I move to amend in line 487 by striking out the words "300," so as to leave the appropriation $50,000 instead of $350,000.

Mr. Chairman, a few days ago, while on a visit to Philadelphia, I was put in a room in the hotel where the window opened out upon the ground where these public buildings are to be erected. I saw the ground upon which it is proposed to erect this post-office and court-house at Philadelphia, and I never saw a more promising field for economy in my life. There is nothing on the lot except some derricks and a board-fence. There is nothing there which needs protection. There are no walls to be finished. Now it is proposed by this provision which is recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, not to fence in the lot, not to cover in any building which may be destroyed if not protected, but to put $350,000 in the foundation which has yet to be commenced.

I heard the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a moment ago say that it was a sufficient reason for not making an appropriation for some place out West that the building had not yet been begun. Well, if the same reason be applied in this case, why should $350,000 be appropriated to put in a foundation for these public buildings in the city of Philadelphia which have not yet been begun? If the stone has been contracted for, as I am told it is, it will keep. The stone will keep there just as it has done in the city of Chicago. They have been kept in Chicago, and it is proposed by this committee to keep them a while longer. If they will keep in Chicago, they will keep in Philadelphia just as well.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard it stated on this floor that the people are demanding to have in all things economy; that the Treasury is depleted, and that economy is now compulsory. I therefore persist in saying that Philadelphia, to which we have given one million and a half as bounty, is a bad place to begin now to put in foundations.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the appropriation for the post-office at Philadelphia will not be cut down. The well-known liberality of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought to satisfy this House, in my judgment, that in his own city this appropriation ought to be made at $350,000. The gentleman from Indiana had an appropriation for the Evansville post-office fully up to the estimate while all other appropriations have been cut down. I think it no more than just this House should recognize the distinguished services of the gentleman from Pennsylvania just as well as those of the gentleman from Indiana, and it should give them for their respective cities and States all they ask. I think it would be a gross act of injustice if this House should vote, after the magnanimity displayed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Indiana, to cut down a dollar on the appropriations asked for their respective States.

Mr. RANDALL. I take no favor from anybody in connection with any appropriation. If it is not in the public interest, vote it out. But I wish to say a word more. The committee has cut this appropriation more severely than any other appropriation of the bill relating to public buildings. These are the facts: There has been appropriated for that building $3,000,000. Nearly $1,500,000 went for the lot. Eight hundred and odd thousand was expended in the purchase of stone in the State of Maine for the first, second, and third stories. They purchased improperly, as I think, for the first, second, and third stories under contract before they had made a contract for supplying the foundation stone. I cannot condemn in too severe language such a contract.

If that building is to be gone on with at all, the foundation, in my opinion, should be completed. That is all we ask, or all that is asked, so far as I know, by the committee—that the foundation stone shall be supplied and the stone for the first story shall be set during the next year. The architect of that post-office has been knocking at the door of the Committee on Appropriations all this winter asking for that deficiency in order that the work may be continued.

But lest I should be charged—I say it here—with some sort of favoritism because of the position I occupy, I have not urged a dollar of deficiency for that building to continue the work. The building has stood idle in consequence, and I have received severe condemnation at home because of that fact, of my determination to be consistent upon these matters.

Mr. HURLBUT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether any part of the foundation has yet been laid?

Mr. RANDALL. O, yes.

Mr. HURLBUT. This says, "to be used in completing the foundation."

Mr. RANDALL. There has, I think, been three hundred thousand dollars' worth of stone placed in the foundation. There has, however, been not more than $325,000 expended in the city of Philadelphia in connection with this building, omitting the money expended for the purchase of the lot.

Now, all I want is that the appropriation shall be sufficient to buy the balance of the foundation-stone necessary, and to set the stone of the first story, already paid for; and I want that this money shall be expended in the manner in which every man who has a house to build builds it—right from the foundation up.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will remember that it is contrary to the rules to smoke within the bar of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not smoking. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not refer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask my colleague on the committee what was the estimate for this building at Philadelphia?

Mr. RANDALL. The estimate was $750,000.

Mr. ATKINS. Then the appropriation is less than half the estimate?

Mr. RANDALL. It is less than half the estimate. I think after the statement of facts I have given the House will see that I have been entirely consistent in all my acts in the Committee on Appropriations, whether in regard to my own city or in regard to other cities.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentlemen allow me to ask him, is this one of the little things spoken of by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RANDALL. I had nothing to do with the starting of this building. When this building was started my voice was very small in this House.

Mr. WHITE. Is this one of the little drops of water or one of the grains of sand spoken of by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LORD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what the estimate of $750,000 was intended to cover?

Mr. RANDALL. I am told that it was to pay for more stone. That is the reason I am in a measure reconciled to the reduction. They have got stone for the first, second, and third stories there, and they want more money to buy more stone from the State of Maine. I do not want any more stone bought or paid for until the stone they have has been set. It is a plain business transaction.

Mr. O'NEILL. I have been somewhat responsible to the extent of my vote and to the extent of my action in the last Congress in the Committee on Appropriations for continuing the building of the post-office and court-house at Philadelphia, and I have been responsible in other Congresses in trying to get the Congress of the United States to give Philadelphia a building worthy of that city. In former Congresses I have voted for millions upon millions for the New York post-office, and I did it willingly and with pleasure. I also have voted for millions upon millions for the post-office in the city of Boston; the New York post-office, I think, costing some $12,000,000 and the Boston post-office $8,000,000.

I intend to propose before we get through with this paragraph to strike out the $350,000 put in by the Committee on Appropriations and to insert in its place $750,000, that being the amount for each of the past two years given by Congress toward the completion of that building. There was first expended about one and a half millions in the purchase of a lot in a situation very convenient to the business of Philadelphia. I stand by the estimate made by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, for I think he understands what he is about, and I think he is a gentleman upon whom we can rely.

I care not whether this money has been expended for cutting granite or not. You cannot put up a large building without having the stone cut long in advance of the day when you are to use it. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought to understand, after all the attention he has given to these public buildings all over the United States, that you cannot put up a large building unless you have the stone cut and prepared days and weeks and months before it is to be used. And if the money heretofore appropriated has gone principally for the purpose of getting out the granite, it has gone well and properly. And now we want the appropriation to continue to build that post-office and court-house, and the amount for the next fiscal year to be $750,000.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I am too fond of referring to the city of Philadelphia. But I will state it as a fact—I do not refer to it with a view of bragging up the city of Philadelphia, but it is right that the House should know it—that that city is increasing at the rate of one square mile of houses every two years, and that that increase has gone on for the last eight years. And, wonderful to relate, in spite of all the hard times, in spite of all the difficulties in the last six years, that city has built within its borders over five thousand houses in each of those years.

I often hear my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] speak of the want of employment for labor in the city of Philadelphia. I grant that he knows a great deal about it, for he has given to that subject the study of years. But, in spite of that, in the last twelve months and in the twelve months preceding that, eleven thousand houses have been built within its limits and thousands of mechanics and laboring-men, willing to take employment at such wages as offered, have had it upon these buildings——

Mr. WHITE. If I understand this proposition, it is to appropriate for the city of Philadelphia $350,000 to build a post-office that is not needed. If I am correctly informed, they have a post-office there that is good for a century. And not only is it proposed to appropriate this $350,000 now, but it is intimated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] that he desires to ask in the future, if not just now, for as much more.

Now, I desire to enter my protest here against this reckless expenditure of the public money. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has told us all along that he is in favor of retrenchment and reform. In evidence of that, the Committee on Appropriations went into the Interior Department and propose to cut off one hundred clerks in the Pension Bureau, when I am informed by the Commissioner of Pensions that that Bureau has been running behind at the rate of one thousand cases per month for the last nine months, and that it requires, instead of a reduction of one hundred clerks, one hundred additional clerks to enable them to catch up with the business by the 1st of January next. Is this the economy, retrenchment, and reform that the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to give us? Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars to Philadelphia for a post-office! Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars more at the next opportunity! You cut off the clerks of the Pension Office, whose duty it should be to see that the poor pensioners scattered all over the country are paid the pittance which the Government grants them. Sir, I protest against it.

Again, if you go to distant portions of the country, we have no post-office buildings for us in the remote portions of the country. The Postmaster-General is compelled by the lack of funds not to put service on routes established by law, and yet the gentleman proposes to give $350,000 for a post-office in Philadelphia. He is not satisfied with having a great centennial humbug there this year, but he must have a new post-office there.

A little while ago a post-office was burned down in a town in my district, and a little box worth $50 was destroyed. They applied to the Post-Office Department to get a new box, and the Post-Office Department replied that there was no appropriation for that purpose; and yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to give $350,000 for a post-office in his own city; and, sir, I protest against it. It is unjust. If you are in favor of economy and reform, I ask you to show it by your acts, and not by your preaching.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not want to consume the time unnecessarily. I want to go right along with the business before us; and hence I will not reply to anything that has been said by the gentleman from Kentucky or other gentlemen about the Centennial. But I want to say this: that Congress granted a million and a half of dollars to the exposition, which was well and good; it was in the interest of our country in a national point of view and in an international point of view. I will say nothing of the millions of dollars contributed by the city of Philadelphia and the State of Pennsylvania and the million and a half contributed by the Government to the centennial exposition, excepting that all this money gave employment to hundreds and thousands of men, which was a great blessing in these hard times.

Now the policy of the democratic majority is to depress labor, to depress the poor man. I have seen it during the whole of this session of Congress, and in all the years I have had an opportunity of being in public life I have never known anything else when the democratic party was in power, either in the States or in the National Government, than that the laboring-man was made poorer and the rich man no richer by their legislation.

But I desire to speak of the necessity of a large appropriation for this purpose, because the city of Philadelphia wants a post-office commensurate with the business done there.

Why, our foreign business has vastly increased during the last year or two. Philadelphia is the greatest manufacturing city almost in the world, and its business men have vast correspondence with people of foreign countries, as well as with our own citizens. We want a post-office that will meet the wants of the people. I desire to see the post-office there completed, and I want to see it done speedily. I do not want to see it dragged along and the erection of this building continued for six or seven years.

I say let us make these appropriations in accordance with the estimates made by the Supervising Architect; let us make the appropriation for the Philadelphia post-office, for which I am now speaking, according to his estimate. That building, with $750,000 appropriated this year, can be built up to the top of the first story; I do not think there is any doubt of that; and then in a year or two more we can have the building completed. As we have made liberal appropriations for post-offices in all the great cities of the country, let us make the necessary appropriations to finish the post-offices in the cities where they are not yet finished.

Mr. FORT. The city of Chicago does more mail business than the city of Philadelphia, considerably more. Gentlemen may wonder at that statement, but it is nevertheless true. The city of Chicago has had a post-office building under construction for some time. Although that city has suffered severely by a calamity which was really appalling, and although the Supervising Architect of the Treasury has recommended that she should have an appropriation of $250,000 to complete the post-office building there, we find that this liberal Committee on Appropriations have allowed her simply nothing at all, not one cent.

It is true that the city of Chicago has no member upon the Committee on Appropriations. But there are one or two districts away down in West Virginia that are well represented upon this floor, and they get $450,000 from the Committee on Appropriations to improve a few dry creeks that have not water enough to float a goose.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman certainly does not want to misstate facts.

Mr. FORT. I refer to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations had nothing to do with that bill. The gentleman has made a statement which I wish him to correct.

Mr. FORT. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I believe, is from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDALL. You said that the Committee on Appropriations made it.

Mr. FORT. The appropriations were made by this House.

Mr. LUTTRELL. While the gentleman is speaking in favor of Chicago, allow me to say that in San Francisco we have no post-office building.

Mr. FORT. I submit that in all fairness if the Committee on Appropriations is going to turn its back on Chicago, a city which I think has claims here, you should not see that Philadelphia, because she happens to have the chairman of that committee representing her, gets an appropriation of $350,000 to be expended upon her post-office. It has been said that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has got every single cent for public buildings in his State that the estimates call for. Why is it? It is really wonderful how the Committee on Appropriations will take care of their own cities and then turn upon another city that has no representative upon that committee and strike out every dollar recommended for that city.

Mr. SPARKS. Does not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] know that the city of Philadelphia is asking for $750,000, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has cut it down to $350,000?

Mr. FORT. Why should she have $350,000?

Mr. RANDALL. Why do you not stick to facts?

Mr. FORT. Keep cool. The spirit of economy has come to the gentleman very lately; since the last presidential election. He now gets up here and lectures this side of the House almost every day for its want of economy.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not have any effect.

Mr. FORT. Judging of the future by the past, we do not know what the next session of Congress may make out of the gentleman.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORT. I have been interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman had declined to be interrupted, it would not have been taken out of his time.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. LE MOYNE to reduce the appropriation for Philadelphia post-office to $50,000; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. LORD to reduce the appropriation for Pfiiladelphia to $250,000; and being taken by a viva voce vote, the Chairman announced that it was not agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for a division on the amendment to reduce the appropriation for the Philadelphia post-office building, in order to show that the republicans are voting to cut it down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the call for a division is too late.

Mr. O'NEILL. I am a republican, and I did not vote to cut it down. I intend to vote to put it up.

Mr. PAGE. I hope that by unanimous consent a division will be granted on that question.

There was no objection; and the question was again submitted to the committee; and upon a division there were none in the affirmative.

Mr. RANDALL. Ah, ha! [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The noes evidently have it.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend the paragraph now pending by striking out "350,000" and inserting "750,000;" also by striking out the words "to be used in completing the foundation and setting the stone of the first story." I want a vote upon that proposition. I want to assert here again that I am a republican, and I believe I represent here not only the republicans of my city who sent me here, but also the democracts of my district, in asking for this appropriation. I have never seen or heard any man in Philadelphia who approved the cutting down of appropriations as they are being cut down by the Committee on Appropriations of this Congress.

I will let what I say on this subject go out to my constituents and to the country; for I am responsible for it and I believe it to be the truth. The people who sent me here to represent them (and I try to do it to the best of my ability) do not believe in such economy as does not permit appropriations to be made for new light-houses. The people who sent me here want the rivers and the bays of the country lighted in the interest of commerce. The republicans who sent me here from the city of Philadelphia and the democrats, many of them my personal friends, who live in that city, do not send me here to concur in cutting down estimates of three or four million dollars for fortifications to three hundred or four hundred thousand dollars, or for cutting down the consular and diplomatic bill from nearly a million and a half to less than a million, or the Army and Navy bills so much as to decrease in a marked degree the efficiency of those branches of the service. Those people send me here to vote for appropriations which will give progress to every interest of this country. They send me here to vote for river and harbor improvements; and that bill making an expenditure of five or six million dollars passed here with scarcely a voice on the democratic side of the House daring to raise itself against it. The people who send me here send me to represent them as citizens of a commercial city, a manufacturing city, a city that has grown faster and greater than any other city on this continent. They send me here to vote for just propositions, such as will promote the progress of the country; and I am not afraid to avow my purpose to do so.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether this amendment is offered to embarrass me in any degree.

Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. RANDALL. If it was, it fails of its object, because I stand here equal to the emergency. I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. RANDALL. Because I think that the bill appropriates for this post-office for the coming year sufficient to accomplish all that is possible to be done this year; that is, to reach the top of the first story. This appropriation is large enough for that; and I stand here ready to do right even though it is in opposing an unnecessary appropriation for my own city.

Mr. O'NEILL. Well, Mr. Chairman, this is not an unnecessary appropriation. It is an appropriation for the convenience of the business people of that city. My colleague knows that last April the appropriation made last year ran out, and there was not a dollar to carry on that building.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word. I yield my time to my friend from Philadelphia, [Mr. O'NEILL.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I think I know as much about the post-office and custom-house building in Philadelphia as does my colleague.

Mr. RANDALL. A great deal more.

Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir; no more. But if I had had the opportunities of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I would have proposed to appropriate $750,000 for that building, so that it could have progressed toward completion. He may talk about the stone that has been cut and not yet used. Why, sir, $350,000 will not set that stone five feet above the basement of the building. By January every dollar of this appropriation will be exhausted, and the work on that building stopped again to its great detriment, and the people of that city, now doing their post-office business in a building so crowded that it has been a wonder to me how they could get along with the insufficient space, are to be put to continued inconvenience by the loss in this building of many months in its completion. I am in earnest in urging this appropriation of $750,000, because I believe it is demanded by the requirements of the public service.

Mr. FORT. Did not the gentleman vote against giving the city of Chicago anything at all?

Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir; I voted for the appropriation for the city of Chicago.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. O'NEILL, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DOBBINS. I move to amend by inserting after the pending appropriation the following:

Provided, That of the said sum of $350,000 the sum of $34,973.37 be used in completing the United States court-house at Trenton, New Jersey.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not germane, and, in addition, we have voted it down practically.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court-house and post-office, Raleigh, North Carolina: For completion of building, $50,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out "50" and insert "100;" so it will read $100,000.

Mr. Chairman, on that amendment I desire to say a single word. The State of North Carolina has had but little in the way of appropriation from this House. She is one of the original thirteen States, and not one of the old States, or indeed one of the new States, but has been the recipient of more benefits at the hands of the Government than that old State. There is not a Federal court-house in our borders. This appropriation is just $45,000 less than the estimate. The building now being erected in Raleigh is one that is creditable to the Federal Government as well as just to that State. The Architect, in his report, said it will take $145,000 to complete it. It can be completed in the next fiscal year. I ask the appropriation be increased as I have moved, as a matter of justice to that State.

Mr RANDALL. There is $22,000 unexpended balance, and we give $50,000, making in all $72,000. And we thought that would be sufficient for Raleigh, to go slowly.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appraisers' stores, San Francisco, California: For continuation of building, $50,000.

Mr. PIPER. I move, in line 493, to strike out "50" and insert "100," so it will read "$100,000."

Mr. Chairman, this is one of those small things which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] talked about. The building this appropriation is estimated for is intended for a court-house to accommodate the Federal courts, the circuit and district courts of that State. The building is 265 by 120 feet. It is also intended for appraisers' stores, for the accommodation of the appraisers of the city of San Francisco, as well as to be used as a bonded warehouse. It will have a capacity of 20,000 tons of storage as a bonded warehouse, and the Government does not own in the city of San Francisco any bonded warehouse at this time.

There has been already expended on this building $508,000, less $43,000 of unexpended balance. The estimate for the completion of this building is $300,000. The Architect estimated for $100,000, which the Committee on Appropriations, in my judgment inadvertently, cut down to $50,000. [Laughter.] Probably it is a misprint in the bill, [renewed laughter,] for I do not suppose for one moment that committee, which is endued with such a desire for economy, could possibly have appropriated only $50,000 for continuing a building that has already had expended on it $508,000, a building that is a necessity for that community.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, it is not in the line of economy, when the Federal Government is paying for the use of the courts alone which this building will accommodate when completed the sum of $12,000 per annum. That is nearly the interest on the $300,000 required to complete the building.

And in addition, as I have already stated, there are no appraisers' stores in the city of San Francisco one-quarter large enough for the business, and the appraisers are compelled to do the greater portion of their work on the sidewalks and streets. The twenty thousand tons of storage capacity of this building will net the Government at least $40,000 a year, thereby saving to the Treasury the sum of $52,000.

Now at the rate this committee is making appropriations it will take six years to finish this building. During those six years the Government would be losing the interest on $508,000, which is $25,000 a year, and that would be $150,000 of loss in six years. By completing the building in two years, as ought to be done, the Government would gain $52,000 a year net profit on the transaction. It would gain in completing this building the interest of six years, netting $185,000. I ask, therefore, in the interest of economy and reform this appropriation be increased to $100,000. It should be $150,000. I ask the House to sustain the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. There are two buildings in San Francisco in the course of erection, the appraisers' stores and the subtreasury building. The committee give enough to finish the subtreasury building and $50,000 to go on with these appraisers' stores.

Mr. PIPER. How much to finish the building?

Mr. RANDALL. All they ask, $27,000.

Mr. PAGE. That is not to erect a building.

Mr. RANDALL. It is to complete a building.

Mr. PAGE. It is to repair an old building now belonging to the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. We finish it so as to make it useful.

Mr. PAGE. I take the floor and yield to my colleague.

Mr. PIPER. I am glad to know that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations did appropriate that $27,000, and I am surprised that they did, because that appropriation saved $11,000 a year to the Government. The Government is paying for the subtreasury and the surveyor-general's office $11,000 a year now.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Will my colleague state what rents we are now paying there?

Mr. PIPER. I will come to that. There is now being paid by the Federal Government in the city of San Francisco for rents $76,000 annually. There is not one public building in that city except the mint that deserves the name of a public building. The gentleman has talked a great deal about the large cities around here. I know they are large cities, but every intelligent gentleman on this floor and every intelligent gentleman in the United States knows that to-day, outside of the city of New York, San Francisco is the next most important city in the American Republic. The trade and commerce of San Francisco this year will be greater than that of Boston, and the revenue collected there for duties on merchandise alone is more than that of any other city except New York. And the driveling, contemptible, parsimonious attempt at economy by this committee toward the Pacific coast deserves the denunciation of every decent man.

Mr. RANDALL. Your language does not amount to anything.

Mr. ATKINS. It is quite unnecessary.

The question being taken on Mr. PIPER's amendment, there were—ayes 31, noes 54.

Mr. PIPER. A quorum has not voted. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers; and will appoint the gentleman from California, Mr. PIPER, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. ATKINS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 59.

Mr. PIPER. A quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California make the point of order that no quorum has voted?

Mr. PIPER. I do.

Mr. PAGE. I suggest that a quorum will not be insisted on if we are allowed to take a vote on this in the House.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House take a recess until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at eleven o'clock a. m., Friday, June 23, Mr. COX, Speaker pro tempore, in the chair.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment, which is that offered by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PIPER.]

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 493 strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000;" so that it will read:
Appraiser's stores, San Francisco, California: For continuation of building, $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote on that.

The question being taken, the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I offer the following amendment.

In line 493 strike out $50,000 and insert $70,000.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this is a necessity. As my colleague [Mr. PIPER] stated last night, we pay some seventy-odd thousand dollars in San Francisco as rent for public buildings. We pay that annually. I know, sir, that when the eastern mails by steamer arrive in that city they are piled up under a shed and a guard placed over them. We have no room to store them. The building is now in course of construction, and the recommendation of the Architect, I believe, was for an appropriation of $100,000. The Committee on Appropriations has placed the appropriation at $50,000; but I believe the necessities of the case require it should be at least $70,000.

Mr. PIPER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. LUTTRELL. I give way to my colleague, who represents the district in which the building is being constructed.

Mr. PIPER. I insist that we shall have $100,000 for that building or nothing. If we can get but $50,000—if that is all they will give us—we do not want any more, unless we get the $100,000.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I differ with my colleague on that proposition.

Mr. PIPER. My colleague one day on the floor of this House, in a very ungentlemanly manner——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to his colleague?

Mr. LUTTRELL. No, sir. The fact is that the House has voted down my colleague's proposition for $100,000. I voted for the $100,000 and aided my colleague in endeavoring to pass that amendment, and desired it should pass. But the House saw fit to vote it down, and now I have offered this amendment in good faith, believing that if we can obtain $20,000 more it will aid us very much. I should have liked an appropriation of $100,000, because the necessities of the case require it; but if we cannot get $100,000 I am willing that we should take $70,000. This is a matter which concerns every inhabitant of the Pacific coast. We pay an enormous amount of Government taxes; and I can corroborate everything my colleague has stated as to the wants of that city. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. PIPER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out $75,000 and inserting $99,000.

The question was put upon the amendment to the amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 16, noes 35.

No further count being demanded, the amendment was declared to be rejected.

Mr. PIPER. I move now to amend the amendment by inserting $98,000.

If this were not a necessity, if it were not in the line of economy, I would not be captious about this matter; but every gentleman must know from the statement which I made, and which I defy any gentleman to refute, that this appropriation is in the line of economy and retrenchment. By the completion of this building within two years the Government will save $50,000, and I will say further, that on a certain occasion when I offered an amendment in relation to the navy-yard at Mare Island my colleague was very offensive to me, saying that I had no right to offer an amendment in relation to it; but yet he seems to think that he has the right to interfere with the local affairs of the city which I have the honor to represent.

I do not want $75,000; I want $100,000. If I cannot get that, let the appropriation go.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I desire to say one word only, and then I am done. My colleague [Mr. PIPER] was out of his seat and I offered the amendment in good faith, and held the floor for the purpose of giving him an opportunity to be heard should he appear. Had he been in his seat I should not have made the amendment, but would have left the matter to be conducted by him, giving to him my hearty support. For so doing my colleague, [Mr. PIPER,] in his arbitrary manner and with intemperate language, would take me to task. I did not offer the amendment with a view to interfere with matters within his district. I am not given to such practices. Can my colleague say as much?

His intemperate language and overbearing manner toward the Committee on Appropriations and myself on this occasion reminds me of a passage from one of the famous Dr. Watts's hymns:

False are the men of high degree,
The baser sort are vanity;
Laid in a balance, both appear
Light as a puff of empty air.

I have acted in good faith, and now the gentleman can take the matter into his own control.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 7, noes 26.

Mr. PIPER. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having appeared, the Chair will order tellers, and appoint Mr. PIPER and Mr. LUTTRELL to act as tellers.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I am not opposing the amendment of my colleague; I am on his side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that it is necessary to have a gentleman who is opposed to an amendment to act as teller; but if the gentleman from California wishes to be excused, the Chair will appoint Mr. ATKINS in his place.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 20, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Mr. PIPER. No quorum has voted, and I insist upon a further count.

Mr. ATKINS. I suggest that this clause of the bill be passed over for the present, and that we proceed with the consideration of other portions of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no; let us go on with this.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, it is the duty of the Chair to cause the roll to be called.

The Clerk accordingly proceeded to call the roll; when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Anderson, Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blaine, Bliss, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cowan, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Eames, Eden, Egbert, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Finley, Franklin, Freeman, Frost, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoge, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hyman, Jenks, Kasson, King, Lamar, Lapham, Lawrence, Le Moyne, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, Maish, MacDougall, McMahon, Milliken, Money, Mutchler, Nash, New, O'Brien, Odell, Packer, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, James B. Reilly, Rice, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schumaker, Sinnickson, Slemons, Southard, Spencer, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stowell, Swann, Teese, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, John L. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, John W. Wallace, Walsh, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Wigginton, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Benjamin Wilson, Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates.

The committee then rose, and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, the chairman had, under the rules, caused the roll to be called, and reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum having appeared, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will resume its session.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session, Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. PIPER] to the amendment of his colleague, [Mr. LUTTRELL.]

Mr. LUTTRELL. As my colleague is opposed to my amendment, I will withdraw it. I merely offered the amendment to allow my colleague time to make a speech.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to the withdrawal

The CHAIRMAN. Then the tellers, Mr. PIPER and Mr. ATKINS, will resume their places.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 68; no quorum having voted.

Mr. FORT. I submit to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that a vote be allowed in the House on this question.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no!

Mr. RANDALL. That will take another half hour.

Mr. PAGE. There is evidently no quorum voting here, and I would ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania consent that a vote be taken on this amendment in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I have several times declined that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a quorum in the Hall, as appeared upon the roll-call just made.

Mr. DUNNELL. There must be a quorum in the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a quorum in the Hall, but if it is the pleasure of members not to vote, the Chair will direct the roll to be again called.

After a further count, the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 83.

Mr. PIPER, (one of the tellers.) That is not a quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. How much does it lack of a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. It lacks four of a quorum. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no; we will make up a quorum.

After a still further count, the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 85.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, [Mr. LUTTRELL.]

Mr. LUTTRELL. I offered that amendment merely to gain time, in order that my colleague [Mr. PIPER] might be present.

Mr. PIPER. I do not want it.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Then I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

State, War, and Navy Department building: For continuation of the building, $250,000.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding the following:

To be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HURLBUT. I move to further amend the paragraph by striking out "$250,000" and inserting in lieu "$750,000;" and I desire to state to the Committee of the Whole my reasons for offering this amendment. Gentlemen are doubtless aware that the valuable records of the War Department, of the Navy Department, and of the Pension Bureau are scattered all over this city in insecure and unsafe buildings, for which the Government is paying, if I am correctly informed, about $150,000 a year rent. The risk of loss is something enormous. They are records which if burned or destroyed could not in any way be replaced; records that every member of this House is interested in who has constituents, as all of us have, who would be benefited by them.

In addition to that fact, this is a great public building, necessary for the United States Government, not located in any small or distant place, but a building in which every member of this House is interested. It is important to the best interests of the Government that a full and adequate sum of money should be supplied in order to bring this building to a completion as early as possible.

I understand the sum estimated for by the Architect for this purpose is $1,300,000. The sum of $750,000 can be well and properly used during this season to advance this building to such a point that we will be able to preserve our records and save the rent the Government is now paying.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] ought to be accepted by the Committee on Appropriations and also by the Committee of the Whole House. One million of dollars was appropriated last year for this building, if I remember rightly. I speak upon this amendment now only for the reason that no one can visit the War Department or the Navy Department building without feeling that the time has come when those old buildings should give way to something permanent in its character, something in which the important records of the Government may be safely preserved. The gentleman from Illinois has called attention to that fact, and probably that is enough to be said upon it.

We appropriate by this bill $350,000 for the foundation of the post-office building at Philadelphia; we also appropriate $450,000 for a court house and post-office in the city of Saint Louis; but when we come to the State, Navy, and War Department building, a building for the accommodation of those three great Departments of the Government here in Washington, a portion of the building now uncovered, a building for which we appropriated a million of dollars last year, it is now proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to give simply $250,000 to this great work.

I think it is due to the Government, to the honor and dignity of the Government, that this great work shall go on to completion. Gentlemen know that last year the Navy Department caught on fire, and the keeping of it now from destruction is the result of great care. It is liable to take fire at any time. The records of that great Department were put in peril last year by the fire that then occurred, and the building is now utterly unsafe.

Now, I do not believe that we are in a condition to stop that work. Those records absolutely demand preservation. When we go into the State Department we realize the security which that building now gives to the important records stored there. Two years ago they were in the building on Fourteenth street, and everybody felt that the archives of this Government were in peril. By the transfer of those records from that unsuitable building on Fourteenth street to the present structure we now feel a sense of security with regard to them.

I think that this work ought to go on, and that the building for these three important Departments of the Government should be completed and the proper preservation of our records secured. The sum proposed in the bill is altogether too small. Before I sit down I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether there is not some unexpended balance which may serve as an addition to this amount?

Mr. RANDALL. The amount appropriated last year was $700,000; the estimate for the next year will be found in the Book of Estimates, appendix G, signed O. E. Babcock, Colonel of Engineers, United States Army. He gives as the estimate of the necessary amount $1,940,428.44, from which he deducts (and this is the point to which I wish to direct attention) "amount of appropriations available, $562,000." Now, this $562,000 added to the $250,000 which we propose to appropriate in this bill will make more than $800,000 to be expended next year, while the appropriation last year was only $700,000.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that while any question relating to my district or city was pending I abstained from expressing any opinion. I desire now to offer some general reflections.

I do not think the country will credit the majority of this House with the practice of sound economy or wise statesmanship. When the question of purchasing a site and constructing new buildings in Chicago was up and one of my colleagues proposed to make the amount $3,000,000 I insisted upon $4,000,000, that the money might be thrown into that stricken city to revive industries; and I hoped that the purchase of land would be made immediately. When more recently the question of a building for Memphis was up I took ground in favor of a liberal appropriation. In one of these cases my own party was responsible, and in the other the opposing political party; but in each case I followed the same sound system.

Our officials report the public debt diminished so much each month; but it is diminished by transferring the debt to another account. We owe to the immediate future the improvement of the rivers and harbors. We owe to the immediate future the public buildings which have been begun and which are needed. The debt is not reduced by paying on one side and increasing on the other side of the account, as we are doing.

Sir, the majority in this House have determined that we are able to pay $2,000,000 annually for the purchase of an inconvenient and costly fractional currency to substitute it for a convenient and cheap one; yet we cannot apply $2,000,000 this one year to the completion of our public buildings! We can buy with money that would redeem 5 or 6 per cent. bonds $40,000,000 of silver at the cost of $2,000,000 annually, yet we cannot make appropriations for the completion of our buildings!

Sir, money put in circulation for those buildings would employ tens of thousands of men. The barefoot, ragged, famishing working-people would thus be enabled to buy shoes and clothes and food. Two million dollars expended in that way would do $40,000,000 of business. But once invested in silver, it is gone. And let us look at the economy of it. If I lose a ten-cent fractional note, I lose it, and the Government gains ten cents. If I lose a dime, I lose the money as I did in the other case, and the Government loses the value of the silver in it, and must replace it when the stock runs low. Millions a year to the Bonanza mines; but let the laborers starve and the country go without public buildings!

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HURLBUT, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 35, noes not counted.

Mr. GOODE. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 499:

For necessary repairs upon the ordnance depot, magazine, and wharves of the United States at the naval station at Norfolk, Virginia, the sum of $50,000, to be expended by the Bureau of Ordnance, under the direction of the Navy Department.

Mr. HURLBUT. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to this bill; it is a military appropriation.

Mr. GOODE. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] that there is an appropriation in this bill for magazines; and he will see that one object of the amendment is the preservation and repair of the magazine at Norfolk station. It is entirely germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not clearly of opinion that the amendment is germane; but being in doubt, he regards it as safest to overrule the point of order, admit the amendment, and let the Committee of the Whole pass upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. RANDALL, (at eleven o'clock and fifty-eight minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. GOODIN: Papers relating to the claim of Hon. M. W. Delahay, late United States district judge for the district of Kansas, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MORRISON: The petition of citizens of Madison County, Illinois, for an appropriation for the protection of the levees and dikes on the Mississippi River in said county, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: The petition of Mary A. Miller, of Washington, District of Columbia, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Second Auditor of the Treasury, transmitting copies of all accounts received at his office from persons charged or intrusted with the disbursement or application of money, goods, or effects of any kind for the benefit of the Indians, from the 1st of July, 1874, to the 30th of June, 1875; which was ordered to lie on the table.

DISTRICT OLDEST INHABITANTS' CELEBRATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

SOCIETY OF THE OLDEST INHABITANTS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
City of Washington, June —, 1876.

The President and members of the United States Senate:

GENTLEMEN: The Society of the "Oldest Inhabitants" respectfully invite you to be present at their celebration of the centennial anniversary of American Independence, which will take place at Ford's Opera-House at twelve o'clock m. The Declaration of Independence will be read by Colonel Horatio N. Easby, and an oration delivered by L. A. Gobright, esq.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JNO. B. BLAKE, President.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR OF THE SENATE.

Mr. SHERMAN. The commissioners of the District have constant business here, and there is some doubt whether they are entitled to admission to the floor of the Senate under the rules. They ought to have admission to the floor. I submit a motion that the commissioners of the District have the privileges of the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For this session.

Mr. SHERMAN. For this session, the Senator suggests. They have really business here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It requires unanimous consent; but I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Admission is granted.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 741) for the relief of such members of the Menomonee tribe of Indians as may desire to become citizens of the United States, reported it with an amendment, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was, on motion of Mr. CLAYTON, recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Indian Affairs have instructed me to report back the bill (S. No. 716) to authorize the execution of a resolution of the national council of the Osage Indians. This bill was reported from the committee once before, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, after due consideration by the committee. It was again, on the motion of some Senator, referred back to the committee, and has been again considered by the committee. It relates to a claim for $180,000 for attorneys' fees of two Indian attorneys for the Great and Little Osage Nations for valuable services that they claim to have rendered under a contract and under an order of the council of the Osage Nation. They submitted their claims to the Government, which finally came to the Secretary of the Interior, and under his discretion $50,000 were paid as attorney fees. This bill now asks for $180,000 more. The committee again report adversely upon the bill, believing that it has no merits and ought not to pass this body now or at any time hereafter.

The report was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3398) for the issue of coin, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 936) to provide for the expenses of district judges when holding court out of their own district; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 937) establishing a mail-route in Oregon; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 938) for the relief of George T. Olmsted, jr.; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to take up, according to the notice I gave yesterday, Senate bill No. 686, amending the statutes to conform to the opinion of the Supreme Court about the enforcement acts, so called.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask whether the special order does not come up at one o'clock?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; there is none.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was a special order, made dependent on the appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not aware of any special order.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was a special order, made by unanimous consent, by which the silver bill was to be taken up, subject to appropriation bills. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Vermont in taking up his proposition, but I wish the special order, as I understand it to be, to come up under the rule. By unanimous consent it was agreed that the silver bill should be postponed and made a special order to come up after the appropriation bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the Journal entry read. If there is any such order, I did not know it. At any rate we ought to take up this bill. It ought to occupy but a little while. I do not propose to debate it at any length. It is perfectly understood. It is only amendatory of the old law, in order to bring it into harmony with the opinion of the Supreme Court, bad as that opinion is; and I cannot help supposing that everybody will agree to this bill at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the order of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the following minute:

Bill (S. No. 263) relating to legal tender of silver coin. Made a special order for Tuesday, June 20, at one o'clock: Provided, There will be at that time no appropriation bill to be considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand it, the silver bill continued a special order until the pending appropriation bills were disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. O, no.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator that the silver bill was made a special order by unanimous consent. I presume the Senator was not present at the time or does not remember the circumstance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was not here when any such thing was done.

Mr. SHERMAN. I stated that I would be willing to give way to the appropriation bills. The Indian appropriation bill had then been reported. I have no desire, however, to have a controversy or waste time about the order of business, but I think it necessary to act upon the silver bill definitely. We may have it understood that it shall be taken up after this bill is over, for there must be some action upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall object after the enforcement bill is concluded to taking up the silver bill, as I shall then ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the District tax bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The special order was a conditional one, and the condition has never attached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sent for the Journal in order to see what the record is. From the minute read by the Clerk the special order has been lost. As appropriation bills had been taken up at that time the special order would not arise and did not, unless something more special was agreed upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was a conditional order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The order was made in the broadest terms, I think upon the motion of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] and was intended to continue until the appropriation bills were over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would not make any difference, because a majority of the Senate, if it were taken up, could postpone it for this bill, or postpone this bill for that one. There is no use in wasting time upon the subject. I hope the Senate will let me get this bill up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking up the bill named by the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. WHYTE. Would one objection carry it over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not. It is subject to a majority of the Senate. The bill has been reported heretofore.

Mr. THURMAN. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which the Secretary will now report by title.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 686) to amend the second, fourth, and fifth sections of the act entitled "An act to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1870, and as a substitute for sections 5506 and 5507 of the Revised Statutes by its title.

Mr. THURMAN. The motion, I understand, is to take up this bill in the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to take up the bill now.

Mr. THURMAN. That motion is amendable, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to take up is not amendable.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it not amendable by substituting another bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the question is on the motion to take up the bill, and such a motion as the Senator indicates would not be in order. The Journal being here, the Secretary will now read the order made in regard to the question which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] called to the attention of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows from the Journal:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced that the morning hour had expired, and called up the unfinished business of the Senate at its adjournment yesterday, to wit, the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to the legal tender of silver coin.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of said bill, and the question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. BOGY,

After debate,

On motion of Mr. BOGY, two-thirds of the Senators present concurring.

Ordered, That the bill be postponed to, and made the special order for, Tuesday, the 20th instant, at one o'clock; Provided, That it will not interfere with the consideration of any appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order only applies to the day named.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was not the understanding of the Senator from Missouri and myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not make any difference. Let us dispose of this bill and then of the silver bill.

Mr. BOGY. My understanding was that the silver bill was to be taken up and was to give way only to an appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We must stand by the record.

Mr. BOGY. It was to be taken up when the pending appropriation bills were disposed of if no other one was ready.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly one o'clock has not arrived, when the special order would come up if there were one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no other way than to be guided by the Journal, which met the approval of the Senate upon the following day.

Mr. THURMAN. Is debate in order upon the motion to take up the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not upon the merits; but on the propriety of taking up, certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope this motion will not prevail. I beg leave now to make a statement, and then I think the Senator from Vermont will hardly press it. There are a number of Senators from this side of the Chamber who are now absent, and I do not think it would be right in their absence to press this measure, which is a debatable measure, to which those absent Senators are, as I may infer from their past action, opposed. I think that during the week in which another convention was held no measure of any considerable character was pressed in the absence of Senators from the other side.

I hope my friend from Vermont, in view of this fact, will not undertake to press this bill until after next week. There is no necessity that I can conceive for pressing it now. If the bill can become a law at all, it may become a law just as well if passed week after next as if it were passed now. No good reason can be given, it seems to me, for taking the bill up now; while to take it up in the absence of Senators who wish to be heard upon the bill, and vote upon it, would be an act of injustice to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, nothing could be further from my intention or my wish than to incommode any Senator on the other side, or to do anything in his absence that the public interest did not imperatively require. I think it will be found on inquiring around that the Senators of the other side who are absent are paired on all political questions; and my friend from Ohio can perceive, as he cannot fail to have perceived in the last few days, that quite as large a proportion of Senators of this side of the Chamber are absent to-day, and have been yesterday and the day before and so on, as of that side; so that there will be no relative disparity of votes or opinions if this bill be taken up and considered now. If Senators of the other side of the Chamber have gone away without pairs and for the purpose that my friend indicates, not expecting that a political motion would be taken up, and that being taken up the result would be somewhat different in some way from what it would be otherwise, I certainly should not press it; but I feel quite confident—and I shall be glad to be corrected if I am in error—that every one of the gentlemen on the other side who would be by instinct opposed to this bill, who is away, is paired; and if that be so, I submit to my friend of Ohio that there can be no impropriety in taking up and having a vote upon it. The general question involved in the bill has been discussed over and over again; and all there is in this bill (because I do not intend to debate its merits, but only to state what they are) is to bring the statutes of the United States into harmony with what is the present opinion of a majority of the judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I cannot say who of the Senators on this side of the Chamber are paired, if indeed any of them are. I have no definite knowledge on that subject. I dare say some of them are paired. I should think it very likely that out of abundant caution and according to the usages of the Senate under such circumstances they have obtained pairs, though I do not know the fact to be so in reference to any one of them, and therefore I cannot make it now a predicate of my action that they are paired; but I think there are some of them who desire, and as to one of them I know that he desires to be heard upon this bill, and he left last night and will not be back for some days.

If the Senator will propose to fix the bill for some time when these Senators can be back, I shall not then oppose its being taken up and letting the Senate vote on the bill. I do not want to discuss it except one section of it. There is one section which is entirely novel and which I do wish to discuss. Upon the other sections I have already expressed my opinion at previous sessions of the Senate so fully that I have no desire to repeat it again. Upon one section I do wish to be heard. But there are other Senators who have not heretofore expressed their opinions on this measure and who would like to speak both in regard to its constitutional aspects and in regard to its policy. I hope, therefore, the Senator will let the bill lie over until, say, Monday week or Tuesday week, and then I will do all I can to help him take it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not spend much of the time of the Senate on this matter; but there is one fact that I wish to call the attention of the Senate to and also the attention of my friend from Ohio. It is about six or eight days ago—I do not remember the precise day—when all the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber were present, and when there was no excuse for not going on with this bill, that I moved to take it up, and I found every one of my friends on the other side voting to prevent it; and they did prevent it because our side of the Chamber happened to be thin at that moment. Therefore, Mr. President, I do not think there is any strong obligation out of mere general courtesy to restrain us from going on with this bill now, unless it would appear that some of the gentlemen on the other side have gone away not expecting that it would be taken up and without pairs. I think when you get at it it will be found otherwise; but in the face of my attempt when the other side was full to get up this bill, and their then defeating it, within a week or ten days, I do not think it comes with very good grace to ask that it shall be put off now.

Mr. THURMAN. One word about that. It is a novel idea to me that there was any want of courtesy in the members of the Senate on this side who voted against taking up the bill in so voting. Where was the want of courtesy in their voting against taking up a particular measure is more than I can see, unless indeed there was some special reason that appealed to their courtesy and required them to exercise it in the taking up of the bill. I do not think there was anything of that kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not say that there was; I only spoke of the contest that seems to be going on to get rid of acting on this bill.

Mr. MORTON rose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was about to make a proposition, but I will first hear my friend from Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. I was simply going to say that I regard the bill which the Senator from Vermont proposes to take up as one of the greatest possible importance. It is a bill which is likely to affect the political and private rights of a great many people in this country in the next few months. We all understand that, without going into the discussion of that question this morning. It is a proposition simply to amend a law so as to bring it within the late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. That decision has virtually destroyed it, and in doing that has left the rights of a great many people at the mercy of their enemies; and I know of no more important measure that can come before the Senate at this session or any other than the question of amending this law.

Mr. WHYTE. I agree with the Senator from Indiana that this is probably one of the most important bills that can be brought at this session before the Senate of the United States; and it is for that reason that I hope it will not be taken up at this time. There are bills relating to the finances which are ready or will be ready to be acted upon by the Senate.

More than that, if that were a bill merely to supply some defect in the laws of Congress as they now exist, about which there was no dispute, it might be important to take it up and hurriedly act upon it; but there is a very wide difference of opinion whether this bill is such a law as is contemplated by the Supreme Court of the United States as "appropriate legislation" to carry out and perfect the amendments to the Constitution. This bill ought not to be passed in a hurry; it cannot be passed in a hurry, because the duty of every Senator is to examine carefully the provisions of this bill, and to discuss it, and to discuss it fully before it is put to a vote. It is therefore of very little importance how many Senators are paired upon the question. It is not votes that are important; but it is discussion and intelligent discussion of this bill that is needed.

The bill as presented originally by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] is almost entirely altered by the report of the Committee on the Judiciary. There was such a diversity of opinion between the Senator from Indiana in the original bill as introduced by him and the action of the Judiciary Committee as to make the bill present a most remarkable contradiction between its features, showing that the Senator from Indiana and the majority of the Judiciary Committee were entirely at variance as to what was appropriate legislation in accordance with the views of the Supreme Court of the United States.

There are Senators in this Chamber who were not here in 1870 when the act was passed upon which the Supreme Court was called upon to decide, who are unfamiliar with the discussions at that time; and, while there are Senators here who participated in them, some of whom thought that that legislation was improper and stated their reasons for that opinion, there are other Senators who were not here, who did not hear that debate, and who are unfamiliar with the reasons given by those Senators. For my own part, I do not think that any legislation which operates upon the individual is "appropriate legislation" under the recent amendments to the Constitution, but that that legislation shall operate upon the States; and in looking at this act as presented by the Judiciary Committee it seems to me to be faulty. But I am unprepared to-day to go into such a discussion. I am quite sure that scarcely any Senators upon this side of the Chamber are prepared to enter into a general discussion of the subject to-day. Under these circumstances, I think the Senator from Vermont might give us some fixed time when we might direct our attention to this particular bill and be prepared to discuss it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I gave notice two weeks ago, and in pursuance of this notice I moved to take up the bill, and nobody was ready then, and I lost the motion because my friend and his associates resisted it until there was not a quorum here and we went away. Then yesterday I gave notice again. Now my friend from Ohio says it ought to be put off until Monday week. What day is that, sir? The day before the Fourth of July; Fourth-of-July week in the centennial year! It might as well be put off until 1976 so far as anything we can do in that week is concerned. After the Fourth of July comes the impeachment trial, and it is in effect saying, as it looks to me at present, that this bill shall not be acted on this session unless it is acted on now. Gentlemen have had full notice over and over again, and if there be any fault it is not the fault of those having charge of the bill that it has not been disposed of before, but the fault of those who resisted it by their votes and their speeches getting it before the Senate. I hope we shall take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 686.

Mr. MERRIMON and Mr. WHYTE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COOPER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN.] He would, if present, vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY;] and, as this is considered one of that kind, I shall not vote. If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] If present, I presume he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WRIGHT, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. DENNIS.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea," on this motion.

The call of the roll was concluded.

Mr. PATTERSON. On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea," on this motion.

Mr. SPENCER. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea," on this motion.

Mr. MORTON. On this subject I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. MCDONALD.] If he were here, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea," on this motion.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I believe I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] I should vote "yea," if at liberty to do so.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Upon all political questions I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.] I suppose this may be put upon that ground; and hence I decline to vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. Although this is not according to the understanding I had about the order of business, I vote "yea," but I give notice that I shall feel at liberty to move to lay this bill aside after some time, if it is not disposed of, to take up the silver bill.

Mr. ALCORN. Without committing myself to the bill, not having yet read it or had the opportunity to do so, I vote to take it up.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Clayton, Conkling, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, and Wadleigh—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Eaton, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Ransom, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, West, Windom, and Wright—36.

So the motion of Mr. EDMUNDS was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. J. SPARKS of Illinois, and Mr. STEPHEN A. HURLBUT of Illinois managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1846) authorizing the retirement of Colonel W. H. Emory with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general;

A bill (H. R. No. 1989) granting a pension to Robert Cavanaugh;

A bill (H. R. No. 2198) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha R. Robinson, of Portsmouth, Ohio;

A bill (H. R. No. 2824) to change the name of the steamboat Paragon, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 2849) for the relief of William Rule, postmaster at Knoxville, Tennessee;

A bill (S. No. 558) making a further appropriation for the erection of Government buildings in Dover, Delaware; and

A bill (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, of Missouri, late disbursing officer of the United States Navy.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Mr. WINDOM, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed the committee of conference on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF ENFORCEMENT ACTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 686) to amend the second, fourth, and fifth sections of the act entitled "An act to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union, and for other purposes," approved May 31, 1870, and as a substitute for sections 5506 and 5507 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 4, after the word "laws," to insert the words "of the United States or;" in line 7, after the word "laws," to insert "any;" in line 11, after the word "give," to insert the words "and every such person and officer respectively shall give;" in line 16, after the word "to" where it occurs the first time, insert the words "execute and;" in the same line, after the word "to" where it occurs the second time, insert the words "the foregoing provisions of;" so as to make the section read:

That if, by or under the authority of the Constitution or laws of the United States, or of any State, or the laws of any Territory, any act is or shall be required to be done as a prerequisite or qualification for voting, and by such constitution or laws any persons or officers shall be charged with the performance of duties in furnishing to citizens an opportunity to perform such prerequisite or to become qualified to vote, it shall be the duty of every such person and officer to give, and every such person and officer respectively shall give, to all citizens of the United States the same and equal opportunity to perform such prerequisite and to become qualified to vote, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and if any such person or officer shall refuse or knowingly omit to execute and give full effect to the foregoing provisions of this section on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of the applicant or person seeking to perform such prerequisite or qualification for voting, he shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered by an action on the case, with full cost, and such allowance for counsel fees as the court shall deem just; and shall also, for every such offense, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500 or be imprisoned not less than one month and not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 2:

That if any person or officer of the United States, or officer of any State, or any person exercising power or authority under the United States or any State, shall deny or abridge to any citizen of the United States, entitled by the laws of such State or by the Constitution or laws of the United States to vote at any election, the right and opportunity so to vote at such election by reason of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, or shall for said cause fail to allow and furnish to such citizen, so entitled to vote as aforesaid, a full, fair, impartial, and equal opportunity, under the laws, with all other citizens entitled to vote at any such election, to exercise his right of voting, every person and officer so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to strike out in the first line of the amendment the words "person or." The section provides—

That if any person or officer of the United States, or officer of any State, or any person exercising power or authority under the United States or any State, shall deny or abridge to any citizen of the United States, entitled by the laws of such State or by the Constitution or laws of the United States to vote at any election, the right and opportunity so to vote at such election by reason of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, &c—he shall be punished. You will observe that it is not said "if any person exercising power or authority under the United States or under the constitution or laws of any State," but the word "person," in the grammatical construction of this section, is as broad as any signification of that word can be; and that is made more clear by the fact that when the word "person" appears in the next line of the section it is qualified by the words "exercising power or authority under the United States or any State," so as to be applied there only to a person who is exercising such power or authority. Where the word first occurs it is used apparently in the broadest possible sense of the term "person." I do not know how any mere person exercising no official or quasi-official function at all can properly be said to deny or abridge the right of any other person to vote, unless indeed he employs some force or duress or intimidation or the like. That is not what is intended here, because those specific cases are provided for further along in the bill. They are provided for in section 4 of the bill, originally section 2. They are also provided for in section 5, the original section 3 of the bill. So, then, so far as the employment of force or intimidation or bribery is concerned, those cases are all provided for in the subsequent sections of this bill. I do not know what interpretation will be given to this section if this word "person" is left in the first line of the second section; and until I can have some explanation of what is meant by it, what propriety there is in having that word in this unqualified sense in that connection, I must insist that it shall be stricken out.

There are other objections to this section, but I prefer to limit what I have to say just now to this particular point that I make in favor of striking out that word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I cannot afford, considering the state of the business of the Senate, to take any time that is not strictly necessary in the discussion of any part of this bill. In one or two minutes, therefore, I think I can reply to the observations of my friend satisfactorily even to him, if we are to have the law at all.

The right of suffrage of every citizen of the United States and of the States to whom the law gives it, is universal and sacred; and this section proposes to punish any person who invades that right, under whatever pretext it may be; and if it may happen that the cases may be rare or difficult to find where a person in his character of person may do that thing, so much the better; but if any such cases can possibly exist, then the man ought to be punished.

But more than that, we put in this word industriously. We did not intend when somebody pretending to be an officer of the United States or of a State should invade this sacred right and should be indicted for it that he should escape the just punishment for his crime by showing that there was some technical defect in his appointment under State authority and that he was not a State officer, but a mere intruder at the polls, in point of law, although good enough to receive all the votes of one side, but having no legal authority to receive them on the other. We intend to reach him in his personal capacity; and whoever about the polls or elsewhere prevents a citizen from voting who has a right to vote we intend to punish, and not allow him to escape by showing that in point of law he did not happen to be the State officer that he pretended to be.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, it seems to me, if that is the explanation of it, that it is a very far-fetched contingency which it is supposed this section is intended to meet. What are the operative words of this section which describe the offense? They are, first, "that if any person or officer," &c., "shall deny or abridge to any citizen of the United States, entitled by the laws of such State or by the Constitution or laws of the United States to vote at any election, the right and opportunity so to vote." That is the first. The second words descriptive of the offense are, "or shall for said cause"—that is, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude—"fail to allow and furnish to such citizen so entitled to vote as aforesaid a full, fair, impartial, and equal opportunity under the laws with all other citizens entitled to vote at any such election to exercise his right of voting."

The first is "if any person shall deny or abridge." How can a mere private individual holding no official function whatever, either de jure or de facto, deny to another his right to vote? And if it is said that he may abridge it, or if it is said that under the other clause he may "fail to allow and furnish to such citizen a full, fair, impartial, and equal opportunity," the answer to it is complete, that the succeeding sections of this bill apply to all cases in which any person by any improper means shall deny or abridge the right of any one to vote. I am opposed to an offense being described in such general terms as this. If you say that a man who denies or abridges the right of another to vote shall be punished, you should state the offense in such clear and precise words that a man may know whether he is violating the law or not; that he may know what the law is. The committee has attempted to do so in the succeeding sections of this bill, and to a certain extent has succeeded. It has said in section 4 of the bill as it now stands:

> That if any person, by force, bribery, threats, or intimidation, or other unlawful means, shall hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct, or shall combine and confederate with others to hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct, any citizen from doing any act required by law to be done to qualify him to vote, or from voting at any election as aforesaid on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of such citizen, such person shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered by an action on the case, with full cost and such allowance for counsel fees as the court shall deem just; and shall also, for every such offense, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500, or be imprisoned not less than one month and not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Here is a section that attempts to define an offense with something like legal accuracy, and covers every possible case supposed by the Senator from Vermont. There is no necessity, therefore, for this second section, and it can only give rise to obscurity in the law, and may give rise to injustice in its execution.

I ask again, how will you draw an indictment under this against a private individual in that he denied or abridged the right of a citizen to vote on account of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude? How would you draw an indictment under it that would not fall precisely within the fourth or the fifth section of this bill? I think I might defy the ingenuity of my friend the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary—and there is no more astute lawyer than he—to draw an indictment under this second section against a private individual or against a man, if you please, who is de facto, but not de jure, an election officer, that would not be necessarily a statement of some one of the offenses provided for in the fourth or fifth section of this act. If that is so, this word ought to be stricken out. You ought not to have any such vague, uncertain, ill-defined, or rather not defined at all, offense upon your statute-book.

Again, sir, let us look at this word in connection with the ninth line of the section:

> That if any person * * * shall fail to allow and furnish to such citizen, so entitled to vote as aforesaid, a full, fair, impartial, and equal opportunity.

What is meant by that, pray? What is meant by a mere private individual failing to furnish to a citizen an equal opportunity to vote? Here he is required to do some positive act, to act affirmatively, to furnish to an individual a free, equal opportunity to vote; and if he does not do that, he is on conviction to be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, "and," not "or," "be imprisoned not exceeding two years;" and that punishment is denounced against a man who has no official character whatever, and upon whom therefore no official duty rests to furnish to anybody an opportunity to vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the question, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont will not vouchsafe to us any argument in response to the Senator from Ohio, and therefore I presume he has not one at hand to present. It strikes me as extraordinary that this section of this bill should be called "appropriate legislation" to enforce the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution, an amendment which prohibited the States or the United States from denying or abridging to citizens of the United States equal political rights on account of race or color or previous condition of servitude. The fifteenth amendment applies, in my judgment, to the States; and, as I understand it, until the State is in default or until the State has refused to grant these rights, which Congress meant to protect in the colored man as in the white man, until the State has done some act, it is not in the power of Congress to pass any law operating upon the State. But suppose Congress in its wisdom chooses to anticipate the action of the States; suppose Congress chooses to presume that a State will act in violation of the fifteenth amendment, and will deny or will abridge to the colored man the political rights which the white man has in the State, and Congress undertakes to pass laws in advance of such act on the part of the State, then those laws ought to operate upon the State; or, if you will go a step further, they ought to operate upon officers of the States and not upon private individuals and citizens within the territory of the States. The act of the individual is not the act of the State. An individual within the State may commit some act in violation of this amendment to the Constitution, and yet neither the State nor the officers representing the State do a single act in opposition to the expressed will of the people in this fifteenth amendment.

This section of the bill provides not only for officers of the United States, not only for officers of the State, but it goes a step further and provides for cases where men are acting as quasi officers of the United States or of the State, intending to prohibit any man from shielding himself when ostensibly acting as an officer by saying that he was not de jure an officer either of the United States or of the State within which he committed the violation of the fifteenth amendment. But it goes beyond all that, and undertakes to punish a man who a court shall say has denied or abridged the right of a citizen to vote in a certain State. Any individual standing on the curb-stone in front of a poll, any drunken fellow that may be riotously disposed in the neighborhood of a polling-place, who commits any act whatever which in the judgment of any court may be a denial or an abridgment of the right of a colored citizen to vote, is to be punished by fine and imprisonment. Could there be a more complete trap laid for an individual? Who is to determine what is a denial or an abridgment of the right to vote? Are such words as these put into the fifteenth amendment to apply to the States to be applied in all their broad latitude to the individual act of every private citizen in every State of this Union?

That is not all in regard to this section. As the distinguished Senator from Ohio said in calling our attention to this section of the bill, when you go a step further, what do you find? As an amplification of this broad charge of denial or abridgment of the right to vote, you actually punish a man for failing to furnish the colored man the right and the opportunity of voting, not neglecting, not refusing upon the part of an officer; but a private citizen who, in the language of the dictionary, neglects to assist a negro man in voting is to be punished by fine and imprisonment by the courts of the United States.

Mr. President, can it be possible that such a proposition can go forth from the Senate of the United States? A man omitting to conduct his colored brother up to the ballot-box and enable him to cast his ballot must go to jail and be fined! Why? Because he does not offer the right hand of fellowship or extend his arm to him and march him up to the ballot-box! Has it come to this, that suffrage is not to be a right of volition, but every man is made a conductor of colored voters to the polling-place and then to the ballot-box? And if you do not do it, if you, a private citizen, do not undertake to carry your colored brethren up, you shall be punished for it by a fine and by imprisonment.

Why, Mr. President, can the fifteenth amendment be stretched to meet such a case as this? The colored man, by the thirteenth amendment, had received emancipation and freedom; by the fourteenth amendment he had received equality of civil rights; and the fifteenth amendment was to guarantee to him equal political rights; but did the people of the United States suppose when they ingrafted that amendment into the Constitution that they were compelling every citizen to conduct and to see that his colored brother was taken to the polls, or to pay by languishing for two years within a jail of the country or submitting to a fine as the penalty for failing to do his duty by his colored brother? No, Mr. President, the people never understood such a thing; the people will not be content that such shall be the law of this land; and I trust the Senate of the United States, if they choose to anticipate the action of the States, if they choose, before the States have denied or abridged the right of suffrage to the colored man on account of his color, will make the law apply to officers of the United States and to officers of the States for refusing, or denying, or abridging this right. I hope they will not go any further than that, but will let the law operate only upon officers of the States and officers of the United States, or those men who claim to act under the panoply either of the Government of the United States or the State of Maryland or any other State, that those men shall be punished for doing that which the people said should not be done by the States themselves. But make no man-traps; pass no laws operating upon private citizens in such general terms as these, putting it in the power of courts to punish men for not doing that which no one ever contemplated it was the duty of a citizen to do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, nothing but the fear I have that my friend from Maryland will think I am disrespectful to him leads me to rise again to defend this section as it stands. The law that we already have on the statute-book has fallen through the meshes of the Supreme Court, on account of the want of a word or of the want of understanding by the Supreme Court of the meaning of the word "aforesaid;" and the Committee on the Judiciary, so far as they have any responsibility about it, do not intend that this supplementary act shall meet with the fate of its predecessor from the want of sufficiently comprehensive language in every section to catch even a reluctant judge or a reluctant statesman.

The Senator says that we are not to punish anybody but officers of the United States or officers of a State, and that it never will do to invade the privilege of a citizen by punishing him in his private capacity because he in his private capacity denies and abridges the most sacred right secured by the Constitution that his fellow-man has. That may be democratic logic, but it is not in my opinion just logic. On my friend's theory, a grand mob of Marylanders may assemble at the polls of Baltimore, there being no affirmative statute of the State of Maryland to authorize them to do so, and without any pretense of authority may exclude the whole body of the colored people of Baltimore, citizens of the United States and of that State, entitled to vote, from voting at all. This section, therefore, speaks of persons in their personal capacity who invade this particular right of their fellow-citizens on account of their race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

I do not think that it will require a great deal of discussion to demonstrate the propriety of a provision of that kind. My honorable friend, if he is sincere—and I have not the least doubt he is sincere as St. Paul was on the way to Damascus, before he got his eyes opened—has fallen into the error of not understanding, I think, correctly the meaning of this phrase in the Constitution and in this act "deny or abridge." I take it that it does not mean, in the sense of the Constitution or of the statute, a man's standing up and expressing his opinion in denial of a man's right to vote. It is reserved to the ingenuity of my friend from Maryland, if he suggested that, to put that interpretation upon the word "deny." The word "denial" is as old as Magna Charta; that very word has been in the Magna Charta of Great Britain from the eleventh century. The "denial" named in the Constitution is an act, just as "abridgement" is. It is standing between, by force, against the law, the right of the citizen and the place where he is to exercise it; and, I say, if any private citizen does that because his fellow-man happens to have a different color from his own, in the face of the Constitution, he ought to be punished.

But, Mr. President, on a question of this kind, where of course the obvious policy of those who do not like this kind of law would be to break out a word here and stick in another there, &c., in order that it might fall through again, it is not worth while, I take it, to spend a great deal of time in discussing criticisms of this character.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont is entirely mistaken when he supposes that I maintained any such doctrine as he chooses to put into my mouth. I made no such statement. I said that here in this section those words ought not to be, because this section is intended, as I suppose, to be "appropriate legislation" to carry out the terms of the fifteenth amendment. The fourth section of this bill provides for the very case of private persons conspiring as a mob to prevent others from exercising the right to vote or getting to the registration office where they can be registered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have not got to the fourth section yet.

Mr. WHYTE. My friend from Vermont says we have not got to the fourth section, but I have read the fourth section, and the fourth section provides for the very case that he puts, and the provision in this section is out of place. This is a section intending to enforce the provisions of the fifteenth amendment on the States or on the officers of the United States representing the United States, or the officers of the States representing the States. It is intended to enforce that, and to prevent them as officers representing the States from denying or abridging, by failing to do certain acts, the rights of the colored citizen. The fourth section provides for the very case that he puts; and neither can there be a mob in Vermont nor in Maryland nor anywhere else to obstruct and hinder and delay men in the exercise of their franchise under this law, if you pass this bill, without punishment, because the fourth section as originally provided in the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana meets that very case. I knew it when I rose. Therefore the Senator from Vermont cannot take my argument and change it to suit his purpose and put me in a false position. I never maintained any such proposition as he attributes to me. I maintain that this phrase "any person," separating and distinguishing the individual from the officer, ought not to be here, because this section applies to the State or the United States through the officers of those respective governments; and therefore when you put that language here and use the words "deny or abridge," as taken from the Constitution, you enact a drag-net, and leave it in the discretion of the judges of Louisiana, whose judicial decisions have been a marvel to lawyers in the past few years—you leave it to that class of judges to decide what is a denial or abridgment of a colored man's right.

No, Mr. President, let the wayfaring man understand what your law is; let him know what he violates when he runs counter to it; let him know that words are used which are plain to ordinary comprehension, and not words that you have to look for mainly in the far-off past to find out what they mean. Deny or abridge the right of a colored man to vote! A citizen ought to know what is the denial or abridgment of such a right; what word may turn a man away from the poll; what cross look may be construed as a denial or abridgment of his right; what motion, what act which a man may say was a denial of his right shall consign him to a jail or penitentiary and make him pay a fine. This is not the place for that provision. The provision of the fourth section of this bill, originally the second section, is one intended to cover the private citizen who interferes and obstructs the colored voter as he approaches the poll. This other section is a section applying to the officers of the United States and the officers of the States who have certain duties to perform, laid down by the laws of the States both in regard to registration and in regard to the deposit of the ballot in the ballot-box.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States, as framed by the fathers, left the elective franchise and the control of elections exclusively to the States. The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States did not attempt to dictate to the States who should or should not be voters; it only in that respect regulated the number of representatives in a certain event where the States saw proper to exclude certain parties from the right of suffrage. The fifteenth amendment is in these words:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote—

And I would here say that it was only by the fourteenth amendment that citizens of the United States were created—

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The tenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Turning, then, to the fifteenth amendment, what power is conferred upon the Federal Government? Is there a power conferred upon the Congress of the United States or upon the Federal Government to operate upon the individual in so far as the elective franchise or elections are concerned? Not in the slightest degree.

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged

By whom?

> By the United States or by any State.

Does it say "by any individual?" The expression "the United States" and "the State" exclude the idea that anybody was designed or intended to be reached except those specifically pointed out and named in the fifteenth amendment; that is, "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." Applying, then, the tenth amendment, which declares that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people;" this clause in the second section of the bill now pending, "any person," is without authority of the Constitution. The Constitution has reference to the United States and to the States, and therefore would apply to officers of the United States and to officers of the States, and not to an individual in his individual capacity. Hence, I think the expression used by the Senator from Maryland, that this is a drag-net, is true and correct.

In my humble judgment, the Congress of the United States has no right whatever to legislate in reference to the action of a citizen in his individual capacity, but only has a right to see that the United States do not deny or abridge the right of a citizen of the United States, and to see that a State in its sovereign capacity, in its corporate capacity as a State, shall not by any law of that State deny or abridge to a citizen of the United States the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

There is nothing in the fifteenth amendment that can by possibility be construed to refer to the power of the United States to act upon the individual; but it is the power of the United States by the fifteenth amendment to prevent this Government, the Congress of the United States, denying or abridging by any law the right of a citizen to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and the power is here conferred also to prevent a State from denying or abridging the right of a citizen to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; but there is nothing in this fifteenth amendment that does authorize the United States to operate directly on the individual in his individual capacity. This being a Government of delegated powers, and Congress having no power whatever save that which is delegated upon the face of the written instrument, and there being no power delegated by the fifteenth amendment or anywhere in the Constitution for this Government to act directly on the citizen in this respect, this portion of the second section which says "any person" is not in accordance with any part of the Constitution of the United States from the preamble down to the last amendment, in my humble judgment.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland has very well answered the illustration put by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of a mob in the city of Baltimore. Such an occurrence would be a case precisely under the fourth section of this act. And now, mark it, if that be the effect of the second section of the act, owing to the presence of the word "persons" in the first line of the section which I have moved to strike out, then we should have this anomaly, that the very same act is punishable under one section of the bill and under another section of the same bill, and if punished under one section, the punishment is just precisely double what it is if it be punished under the other. If those rioters at Baltimore supposed by my friend the chairman of the committee should be indicted, then the fourth section of the act would precisely fit their case; then their punishment on conviction would be a fine not less than $500, or imprisonment not less than one month and not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court; not necessarily both fine and imprisonment, but fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, the fine not to exceed $500, the imprisonment not to exceed one year. But if those same rioters should be prosecuted under the second section, as the remarks of the Senator from Vermont seem to imply they might be, then upon conviction they are to be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, instead of $500, and be imprisoned not exceeding two years; they are to be both fined and imprisoned, and the fine may amount to $1,000 instead of $500, as provided for in the fourth section, and the imprisonment may extend to two years instead of one year, as provided for in the fourth section. Thus you would put it in the power of a district attorney by indicting under the one or the other section of this law to make the the offender punishable either with fine and imprisonment, the fine going to the extent of a thousand dollars and imprisonment being for the period of two years, or if he saw fit, to indict under the other section limiting the punishment to less than one-half of that penalty.

What is the reason of this distinction in the punishment? I cannot help but believe that this section 2 was originally intended to apply simply to persons exercising official duty; and as it was intended to apply to them alone, it was thought right by the draughtsman of the section, undoubtedly, to make the penalty greater in the case of this official misconduct than it would be in the case of the offense of a mere private individual; and that has good reason to support it. When an officer corruptly fails to do his duty or acts improperly in office, we all agree that he should be punished more severely than a mere private individual who had committed a similar offense; and hence the penalty in this second section is double the penalty provided in the other sections of the act for the punishment of private individuals.

But, sir, I think this word "person" has crept into the first line of this second section inadvertently, or I did think so until my friend defended its presence here. I think it was intended to be in harmony with the first section. The first section has the word "persons" in it. The first section is:

That if, by or under the authority of the Constitution or laws of the United States, or of any State, or the laws of any Territory, any act is or shall be required to be done as a prerequisite or qualification for voting, and by such Constitution or laws any persons or officers shall be charged with the performance of duties in furnishing to citizens an opportunity to perform such prerequisite or to become qualified to vote, it shall be the duty of every such person and officer to give, and every such person and officer respectively shall give,

There the word "persons" is very properly used, because it is qualified by the provision that the person shall be charged by the Constitution or by the laws "with the performance of duties in furnishing to citizens an opportunity to perform such prerequisite or to become qualified to vote." That is the first section as it was draughted by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] who introduced the bill. There the word "person" can very properly be found. The same section, going on, says:

It shall be the duty of every such person—

That is the person charged with the duty of furnishing to citizens the opportunity to perform such prerequisite—

It shall be the duty of every such person and officer to give, and every such person and officer respectively shall give, to all citizens of the United States the same and equal opportunity to perform such prerequisite and to become qualified to vote, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and if any such person—or officer, shall refuse or knowingly omit to execute and give full effect to the foregoing provisions of this section, on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of the applicant or person seeking to perform such prerequisite or qualification for voting, he shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered by an action on the case, with full cost, and such allowance for counsel fees as the court shall deem just; and shall also, for every such offense, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500, or be imprisoned not less than one month and not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

That is the person charged by the Constitution or law with the duty—

That is the first section. There the word "person" is very properly used, because he is described as a person charged by the Constitution or laws with the performance of this duty, which he refuses or omits to perform; but when we come to the second section, the words are:

That if any person or officer of the United States or officer of any State.

If it stopped there, certainly the words "any person" would be construed in pari materia with the first section, and would be construed as meaning the person named in the first section; that is, a person charged by the Constitution or laws with the performance of this duty. That would be the fair interpretation of the word "person" in the section if it stopped there, but it does not do so; it goes on:

That if any person or officer of the United States, or officer of any State—

Then comes in—or any person exercising power or authority under the United States or any State.

The insertion of these words necessarily makes the word "person" where it first appears in this section import what that word in its broadest sense means, any person. It necessarily does it, because, when you have provided expressly for the case of a person exercising power or authority under the United States or any State, who is the person described in the first section, when you have done that in the enumeration of those who are to be affected by this act, when you have said "any person, or any person exercising authority," thus making two classes, you necessarily give the word "person" where it first appears its most broad and general signification. Then comes the anomaly that if you punish the man under this section, this private individual, his punishment may be double and more than double the punishment which is denounced against him if you indict him under the fourth or fifth section of the bill.

But, Mr. President, that is not all of the objection. I beg the attention of my friend, the chairman of the committee, to what I am about to say, for I am not speaking in any spirit of hypercriticism at all, and certainly not with any desire to prevent any man, whatever may be his race, color, or previous conditon, from having all the rights to which he is entitled. I am speaking in the interest of good legislation, of proper laws, and especially of proper criminal laws. I want to put this question to my friend: Can he find a case in which a man would be indictable under the second section, if these words "or any person" were out in which he would not be indictable under the first?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to take time, as I said, but my friend seems to omit to see that the first section applies to registration entirely and the second section applies to voting entirely.

Mr. THURMAN. No, not to "voting entirely." I was going to limit my remark. The second section is broader than the first, but I say the second section includes the first. I put the sections wrong in my inquiry. The question I intended to put was, Is there a case in which a man could be indicted under the first section in which he could not be indicted under the second? That is the question that I intended to put. I got the sections reversed in hasty speaking.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I answer that in the negative, just as I did the other.

Mr. THURMAN. Is there a case in which he could be indicted under the first section in which he could not be indicted under the second?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Every case. One applies to registration and the other applies to voting.

Mr. THURMAN. Let us see whether that is the case. Undoubtedly the first section applies to registration; but it applies to more than registration. It applies to the case where a man must have paid his taxes before he can be entitled to vote. It punishes, as it would be very proper if we have the authority to punish, the tax-collector who would refuse to take the tax and enable the man to exercise his right of suffrage. If we had the power to punish that offense, it would be very proper for us to do it. It certainly would be very proper for the State to do it by its laws, and I think it is perhaps done in every State where that is a prerequisite to voting. The first section, therefore, goes beyond registration; it goes to the performance of every prerequisite to the right to vote. Let us come, then, to the second section, and see if the second section does not cover the same thing:

That if any person or officer of the United States, or officer of any State, or any person exercising power or authority under the United States or any State, shall deny or abridge to any citizen of the United States, entitled by the laws of such State or by the Constitution or laws of the United States to vote at any election, the right and opportunity so to vote at such election by reason of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

That is one thing. Under that, could not the registrar who refused to register a qualified voter be punished? Would that not be denying him his right? Would not that be abridging his right? Under that provision could not the tax-collector be punished who refused to receive the man's taxes, and thereby deprived him of his right to vote when he would be entitled to vote? Would that not be a denial of his right? Would it not be an abridgment of his right? What difficulty in the world would there be in indicting the registrar or in indicting the tax-collector under this section for doing the very things which are denounced in the first section? That is not all:

Or shall for said cause fail to allow and furnish to such citizen, so entitled to vote as aforesaid, a full, fair, impartial, and equal opportunity, under the laws, with all other citizens entitled to vote at any such election, to exercise his right of voting.

That is the next thing. Does not the registrar who refuses to register a lawful voter "fail to allow and furnish" him an opportunity to vote? Does not the tax-collector who refuses to receive his tax, the payment of which is a prerequisite to his right to vote, "fail to allow and furnish" him a fair and equal opportunity with others to vote? Therefore, I say that there is not one offense described in the first section of this bill that might not be punished under the second section of the bill. It is true a court might interpret them in this way: that inasmuch as the first section is specific in regard to registration or these prerequisites the second section taken in pari materia must be construed not to relate to the same subject as the first. I do not say a court might not so construe it; I do not say that would not be a proper construction; I am inclined to think it would be; I think if I had the decision of it, or if my friend, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, had the decision of it, or if any one else within my hearing who ever sat on the bench had the decision of it, he would be very apt to construe these sections, in pari materia, in this way and say that although the words of the second section would include words in the first, still as the first is specific the cases provided by it are excepted out of the general words contained in the second section. But that is the obscurity of the thing. A court might so hold or a court might not so hold. A good judge I think would so hold; but what assurance have we that it will be so ruled in every court of the United States? Then comes the anomaly, if I am right in this view, that the one section denounces twice the penalty for the same offense that is denounced by the other section.

To come back to the point, it is perfectly clear, reading the first section and then the second, and then the fourth and fifth, that the original object of the second section was to punish the persons described in the first section of the bill, to wit: Persons who are performing official duties or are charged with some duties connected with elections either by the laws of the United States or by the constitution and laws of a State. That being the case, and that being made more apparent by the fact that the penalty denounced in the second section is double the penalty provided for in the first, and double the penalty provided for in the fourth and fifth sections, it does not seem to me that there ought to be a moment's hesitation in sustaining the amendment which I have offered to strike out the words "person or," in the first line of the second section, which extend the provisions of that section to every individual in the land.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to strike out the words "person or."

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I move to insert between the third and fourth lines of the section the words:

Or pretending to be such officer, or assuming to exercise such authority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Michigan is not now in order, being a separate amendment, the pending amendment being in the second degree already.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator having this bill in charge has felt called upon to precipitate a hasty discussion of it upon the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not done that.

Mr. MERRIMON. It is a subject of the utmost difficulty, one that involves a constitutional question which is likely to give trouble in the future, as it has done in the past.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill was reported on the 16th of May. I do not think that is very precipitate.

Mr. MERRIMON. That is very true; but I take it no one except the honorable Senator himself expected that we would debate this serious question to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I gave notice yesterday and a week ago.

Mr. MERRIMON. It seems to me, in point of justice—and I go further and say in point of common fairness—a time ought to be fixed for taking up and discussing this bill, so that every Senator might have an opportunity to inform himself upon it, to think about it, study it, and express himself in a way that would be entirely satisfactory to himself, to the Senate, and to the country, and elucidate a very difficult subject. If that were done it is more likely that we would succeed in perfecting a law that would in all respects answer the purposes of the Constitution. A statute which was intended to embrace the very subject embraced by this bill was passed some years ago. According to my recollection of the history of that statute, it also was passed in a great hurry. Political antipathies were allowed to prevail. The bill was discussed from a partisan stand-point; it was passed hastily and without due consideration; and the result was that as soon as the courts came to pass upon it the highest judicial tribunal in the country declared that it was in contravention of the Constitution and inoperative. I shall not be surprised, if the honorable Senator and a majority of this body shall in a like hasty manner pass this bill, if, when it becomes a statute, or what purports to be a statute, it shall meet a like fate. Such a course of action is, to say the least of it, unwise and ill-calculated to subserve any good purpose.

For one, I am ready to do whatever is necessary to effectuate this provision of the Constitution. I recognize the fifteenth amendment as an article of the Constitution, one that has become a part of our organic law, and one whose policy ought in good faith to be carried out by every American citizen. I hold myself ready, here and everywhere, to see that it is faithfully executed; that everything that ought to be done under it and in order to effectuate its purpose shall be done by every officer and everybody; but it is due to this section of the Constitution, it is due to the Government, it is due to the American people, collectively and individually, and it is particularly due that class of our population whom it is specially intended to benefit, that we should candidly, not from a partisan stand-point, endeavor to pass a statute which will certainly effectuate the great purpose contemplated. This bill, if I understand it correctly, rests entirely, exclusively, and absolutely upon the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know what authority the Senator has for saying that.

Mr. MERRIMON. I notice that in this discussion, as carried on by the honorable Senator himself and by other Senators, they refer only to this article, and treat it as the foundation, the ground-work upon which the bill rests.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. MERRIMON. If any other ground-work has been indicated or assigned I have not heard it, and I should like to hear it. Let us consider this article in a spirit of candor and fairness—legal fairness, judicial fairness; in that spirit which is calculated and intended to elicit the truth and to arrive at the exact meaning of the article. The fifteenth amendment of the Constitution is in these words:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged—

Now, by whom? These are material words that I am now going to read—

by the United States—

First; second—

or by any State.

That right shall not be abridged, first, by the United States, secondly, by any State—

On account of—

What? Any one of three things, to wit—race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Would any lawyer, much less would any judge, putting aside all political discussion and controversy, ever think of saying or adjudging that the words "abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," embraced anybody or anything except the United States and the several States that compose the Union? I take it not. How it is possible to construe the words "the United States or any State" to imply any person or any collection or combination of persons is beyond my comprehension. If the purpose which the Senator in charge of this bill has assigned to it had been intended, the fifteenth article of which I am now speaking would have read in this way:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, or by any person— or by any person on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

That is the material word to give this section the effect which the Senator seeks to assign to it—

Why were the words "any person" omitted? They are material, necessary for the purpose contended for. Every one upon looking at that article, and then reading this bill in connection with it and seeing the purposes of the friends of the bill in connection with it, must see that the words "any person" are essential in order that they may give the bill the compass that they endeavor to give it. In no conceivable view can the words "any State" be construed to imply any person. The plain limitation is on the States, and not on persons. The States are by the provision restrained from abridging the right of persons to vote, for the three causes specified.

In order, Mr. President, to make this view of mine more manifest and add weight to it, I will suppose a case. Suppose that a State should provide in its constitution or by statute that no man of the African race or who had been a slave or who had been in a condition of servitude should have the right to vote, what would be the condition of the African or the freedman or the man who had been in a condition of servitude in that State? Plainly he could not vote by virtue of the laws of the State. If it were a constitutional provision, he could not vote because the constitution of the State forbade it. If it were by virtue of a statute of the State which the constitution authorized the Legislature to pass, he could not vote because the statute forbade it. Neither could any officer under the State government allow him to vote, although the statute of the United States should command it. Wherefore? Because the constitution and the statute of the State forbade him to do it. I ask the Senator from Vermont how he would remedy an evil of that sort, and whether his bill as it now stands embraces a case of that kind? That that was the evil which the Constitution intended to cut off and to provide against I have not the slightest doubt. It was apprehended after negro slavery had been abolished in the Southern States and it had become the policy of the nation that all men should have equal rights before the law that it was necessary to allow the negro race to exercise the right of suffrage in order to their protection and to maintain the harmony of our system of government. It was apprehended that the Southern States or some of them might provide by law in their organic law, or in their statutes that the colored race, the negroes, men who had been slaves, men who had been in a condition of servitude, should not be allowed to exercise the elective franchise. It was deemed necessary, as the whole history of this article shows, to provide in the article this restriction upon the power of the State which forbids the State to pass any law or to do any act as a State which abridges the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. For fear the States might provide that the negro should not vote and thus protect his rights, the fifteenth article provides that his right to vote shall not be abridged because of his race, that he was a slave, or in a condition of servitude.

There is another important fact in connection with the history of this article which tends to strengthen the view that I am now presenting. It was seriously debated by many friends of the freedmen whether it was wise to confer upon the colored man the right to vote immediately upon his becoming a free man. It was doubted whether, on account of his previous condition of servitude, his lack of opportunity and training, he was qualified in point of intelligence to vote. The debates upon this amendment to the Constitution show that that sentiment was entertained by many statesmen, and that it was a serious question in the minds of the warmest friends of the colored man as to whether it was wise to confer upon him suffrage. It was an experiment, a dangerous experiment, and the warmest friends of the colored man were apprehensive of the result; but they finally came to the conclusion that, in order to his reasonable protection in his rights as a freeman, it was absolutely essential to confer suffrage upon him. They made the venture, and the experiment is now going on. They thought that if he had the right to vote it would be such protection, and sufficient protection as to enable him to maintain his civil rights under the Constitution. And hence, when it was provided that he should not be denied the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, it was not further provided that he should not be denied the right to hold office. I take it that it will not be denied that it is competent for any State in the Union this day to provide by her organic law that no man of the African race shall have the right to hold office because of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude. More than that, you might go into a State like South Carolina, where the colored race predominates, and there it would be competent for the colored race, if they saw fit to do it, to make a provision in their organic law that a man shall not hold office because he is a white man. You may exclude men from office because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but under the Constitution of the United States, under article 15, a State cannot abridge their right to vote.

Then this article of the Constitution operates upon two powers: First upon the United States. It is a limitation upon the power of the United States. Secondly it is a limitation upon the power of the several States, so that no State can pass a law providing that a man shall not vote because of his race, his color, or his previous condition of servitude. Surely that does not imply the power to say that John Smith or William Jones shall not deny or abridge or interfere in any way, however wrongful, with the black man's right to vote or the white man's right to vote. They for such offense must be punished by the laws of the several States. Such a construction would make this provision of the Constitution operate upon individual persons. There is no word in the clause that shows any such purpose; no word that can be warped into such a meaning. Therefore this bill would be inoperative and void.

It may be asked, if this view is correct, if the limitation contained in the fifteenth amendment clearly operates upon the United States and the several States, what is meant by section 2 of article 15, to wit?

> The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

It is easier to ask this question than to answer it. It may be said that it means that where a State shall provide by its constitution or by statute, either negatively or affirmatively, that any person shall not be allowed to vote because of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, in that case it shall be competent for Congress to pass a law whereby the right shall be secured to him as the laws of the State secure the like to other citizens.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would that be necessary? Could he not defend under the Constitution without any act of Congress?

Mr. MERRIMON. How could he vote? Where is the machinery for his voting? Can Congress by a mere statute like this make the officers of the several States who control and manage the elections, officers of the United States for that purpose?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean to say that if a State should pass an act of that kind that would authorize Congress to set up machinery of its own?

Mr. MERRIMON. I think it probable that was contemplated. Congress has passed an act——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the Senator's opinion?

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not say that I have a definite opinion on that subject; indeed, I have not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah!

Mr. MERRIMON. For you have forced this debate on me and others, so that I am not prepared to point out and throw the light that I ought and would be glad to do on the proper remedy. I would be glad to co-operate with the Senator and the Senate and the Congress and the American people to effectuate this article of the Constitution. I am not prepared to say just now, without opportunity for study and reflection, what appropriate legislation is, as suggested by the Supreme Court, but I want to say to the honorable Senator, and I believe he supported the law, there is a law upon the statute-book of the United States to-day which regulates the subject of elections in the several States to a very considerable extent. It is competent under that statute—I shall not say now whether it is valid or invalid—to appoint marshals and inspectors of election to go into the several States to see that the laws of the United States upon the subject of suffrage are faithfully executed and that justice is done. If that statute is valid, and if marshals and other officers of the United States may be sent into the several States to supervise the elections, why may not the Congress provide officers and machinery for holding an election even for State officers in the several States where the right shall be denied? I apprehend that no case of that sort ever will arise. I do not believe the time will ever come when any State will make such distinction of race, but I think it possible that it is within the power of Congress to pass a law whereby, if a State should venture to do that thing in violation of this article, the right should be secured. It might be very difficult to frame such a statute; it might be very impracticable in its operation, but that the exercise of some such power was contemplated this article and its whole history show. At the same time it is just as manifest that it never was intended that the article should operate on natural persons.

Now let us take another view of this subject. Suppose, as is the case I believe in every southern State and in every State where the colored man resides, that his political right of suffrage is provided for and he stands upon the same footing with the white citizen and every other citizen; that the occasion for an election shall come on; inspectors of election, judges of election, and all proper officers of the election shall have been appointed; and a faithless officer shall violate the law of the State, shall refuse to allow a colored man to register because he is a colored man, and afterward he shall refuse to allow him to vote because he is a colored man, avowing that his refusal is upon the ground that he is a colored man, under the laws of the several States that officer would be subject to indictment, he would be subject to such penalties as have been provided by the statutes of the several States; and yet, if those who advocate this bill are correct in their views, he is not only subject to the State tribunal, to be indicted and convicted before them and fined and imprisoned, but after he shall be so indicted, fined, and imprisoned under the State law he is to be amenable also to this proposed law, and he is to be twice punished for the same offense. That is the practical result. And how absurd, how outrageous such a proposition! It contravenes every principle of justice and subverts one of our great principles of liberty, that no man shall be twice convicted and punished for the same offense.

This proposed statute is a mere effort to aid in the execution of State laws. I never heard before of such a statutory provision of the United States. It is novel and striking. Every State in the Union, I believe, has made like provision for all races. An officer of a State willfully violates the law of his State by refusing to allow a black man to register because he is a black man, or a black officer refuses to allow a white man to register because he is a white man, and the refusal is put upon the avowed fact that he is a white man or a black man; he is indicted under the State laws, punished under the State laws, and at the same moment, for the same offense, he is to be indicted and punished under this proposed act of the Congress of the United States. Why, sir, the Constitution never contemplated a thing that leads to such a practical absurdity as that. The Constitution operates on the States; it is a limitation on their power in this respect. Where the States shall deny the right to vote on any one of the three grounds named, it is competent for Congress to pass some law whereby the person so denied his right shall have the benefit of it. What that law is, as I have said, I am not now prepared to say; but such a law I am prepared to support when we shall ascertain what it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose the Senator is aware that the Supreme Court has already determined, and upon that point apparently unanimously, that Congress has power now to provide by legislation of this character (which in one respect they have found fault with, but which is cured in this bill) for this class of cases.

Mr. WHYTE. May I ask the Senator from Vermont whether the opinion of the Supreme Court is such as that it indicates that legislation operating upon the individual is "appropriate legislation?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. Most decidedly.

Mr. WHITE. In what opinion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the opinions delivered this very last session: the United States vs. Reese.

Mr. WHYTE. In which opinion does the Senator find it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what I am trying to tell the Senator, if he can wait a minute. The United States vs. Reese and Fonshee, and The United States vs. Cruikshank.

Mr. WHYTE. But in which of those two cases? I have read them both.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not waste time by reading them. I will send them over to the Senator and he can read them for himself.

Mr. WHYTE. I am much obliged to the Senator. I have asked him to point out to me in the opinions where the Supreme Court so say. I have read them both, and I cannot find it; it may be obtuseness in me; and I should like the Senator to point out to me where the Supreme Court has said so in either of those opinions?

Mr. MERRIMON. The truth is, Mr. President, that the Supreme Court carefully abstained from suggesting what appropriate legislation would be. They were sensible of the same difficulty that I am sensible of, and that every Senator here ought to be sensible of if we mean to pass a law that is going to be operative. They did not know themselves, I venture to say, what appropriate legislation was, and they did not venture to suggest it, and I was peculiarly impressed with the absence of any such suggestion when I read those opinions. It is a very difficult task to determine what is appropriate legislation and to devise an appropriate statute; and, for one, I apprehend we shall not be able to devise it in an hour's debate in the Senate. It will require the most serious and scrutinizing reflection and examination on the part of learned lawyers after they have taken ample time for the purpose, to devise a statute that will effectuate the purpose of the Constitution. The question is not how the article in the Constitution ought to have been made; the question is, what is it in the organic law? We must confine our action to it when we ascertain what its meaning is. Our duty is not to make it, but to ascertain what it is and abide by it, and do as it obliges us to do.

Now, sir, I should like the Senator from Vermont, or any other Senator, to point out to me what provision there is in this bill as a remedy for the case where a State shall provide that a man shall not have a right to vote because of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Suppose that Vermont to-day had a statute upon her statute-book providing that colored men should not vote because of their race, color, or previous condition of servitude, how would this bill afford any remedy in that case? I have read it; I have not had the opportunity to study it very thoroughly, but, according to my reading, there is no provision for the very case contemplated by the fifteenth article of the amendments. It is strange to me that that Senator, having the subject so much at heart, and having had such ample opportunity, should have failed to provide for and against the very difficulty that the fifteenth article was intended to cure and obviate. There is no provision, I repeat, in this bill of a remedy for the colored man if his right shall be abridged in Vermont or in any other State because of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude. That is the point to which this remedy ought to be directed, but it is absolutely and entirely omitted and ignored.

If the construction the Senator places upon this article of the Constitution is the correct one; if by the term "State" this article can be so construed as to operate upon every individual citizen of the several States, it is very much as if we were living to-day in a great consolidated, centralized form of government. That is a view which contravenes the whole theory, history, and practice of the Constitution, and it must be alarming to every citizen of the Union who takes a candid view of his rights under that system of Government which was established by Washington and our fathers.

Sir, we are called upon to-day to pass this strange bill, this bill so far-reaching in its provisions, this bill affecting most injuriously, if it should pass, the very vital features of our Government, in two hours, those who question its constitutional propriety protesting that they have not had an opportunity to examine it or to prepare anything as a substitute for it. If I had the opportunity I would be glad, if I should find I had the ability to do it, to submit something as a substitute that would meet the purpose contemplated by the fifteenth amendment; but that opportunity is denied me as the matter stands. This bill is to pass to-day without proper scrutiny. I have great respect for the Judiciary Committee, for all its members. They are able lawyers and excellent gentlemen and citizens; but, upon a matter that has for years engaged the attention of this country, of the Congress, the lawyers of the country, and the Supreme Court, the members of that committee might make a mistake as well as other people, as they did before; for the former bill passed the scrutiny of the Judiciary Committee of this body. They may err now as they certainly have done in the past, and they ought to be willing to give the largest opportunity for examination, reflection, and discussion. I repeat, I regret the course the Senator in charge of the bill has taken.

If the bill is to pass in this shape, if, by the term "State," this article is to be construed so as to operate upon individuals, why not put in another clause which will provide that any man who shall commit an assault upon another because he is a black man, or a black man who shall commit an assault upon a white man because he is a white man, shall be indictable in the Federal courts? Why not? The force of the logic of this bill goes that length. If, sir, you can make the term "State" mean "persons" in this article of the Constitution, you may provide that, if a white man and black man shall engage in a street fight, because one is black and the other is a white man, they shall be indictable in the circuit courts of the United States. That is the logical effect of the doctrine that underlies and permeates this bill; and I believe that some of the statutes supported by gentlemen whose zeal outruns their judgment looked to that end, went to that length, and it was only after the touch-stone of truth and judicial judgment was applied that it was found that such statutes could not operate, being in contravention of the Constitution. It is strange indeed, to me, that some gentlemen of ability and learning lose sight of reason and truth when the wish is father to the thought. We might as well apply the touch-stone of the law now; it must come to that in the end.

There are many things I should like to say on this bill that I have not said. I should like to take it up section by section, and scrutinize it in connection with this fifteenth article of amendment to the Constitution, but I am not prepared to do it. I had no idea that this the most important bill which has been before the Senate at this session would pass after two hours' desultory and hasty debate. I had supposed that the honorable Senator from Vermont would desire and extend the largest opportunity for discussion, and would be glad to have all the light possible thrown upon the bill; but with all his abilities, with all his opportunity to investigate this matter and manifest purpose to pass the bill at once, he does not deign in opening the debate, as he has a right to do under parliamentary usage, to give us an explanation, an exposition of this bill. I was anxious to hear him say and show that this bill rests firmly upon certain provisions of the Constitution, that it is essential, and to show with his keen logical mind how it would fit the Constitution and rest there like a great structure set upon a rock; but he has not done it. I take it he cannot. I believe he cannot. I know he cannot; he goes on with his mind and eyes closed, leaving the Supreme Court to again declare the invalidity of this proposed legislation. This, it seems to me, is not right. I deprecate and deplore such a course of action about a matter of so much moment.

Mr. MAXEY. May I be allowed to make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. MERRIMON. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. I understand the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to say, in response to a remark made by the Senator from Maryland, that he did not rely exclusively on the fifteenth amendment for this power of Congress to legislate on individuals in respect of the matters contained in the bill. I should like to have the Senator from North Carolina, while he is up, get out what provisions of the Constitution it is that justifies this legislation.

Mr. MERRIMON. I was going, before I took my seat, to ask the honorable Senator from Vermont, for my own information and benefit, if no one else desired it, to tell me the constitutional provisions upon which this bill rests and upon which it can stand, if not upon the fifteenth amendment. I think it was due the Senate. I expected to hear him go into a learned exposition of the constitutional provisions that warranted this bill; but it seemed as if he was in a hurry, and notwithstanding my protestation and the protestation of other Senators of an honest desire to get at the truth and to do right about this business, he would not heed us; he goes on in hot haste; and I tell the honorable Senator now that I apprehend if he goes on in this hot haste and this bill passes as it is the Supreme Court, in the exercise, not of partisan haste and feeling, but in the line of truth in the application of the touch-stone of the law, will go through the meshes of this bill again, just as they did through the other. That is what I expect. I do not believe this bill can stand, and therefore I am against it. It is not going to effectuate the purpose that ought to be effectuated; and then, besides, it goes to the country and to the world as a manifestation of a purpose on the part of Congress to wipe out those limitations upon Federal power which are essential to the preservation of free institutions in this country. I am against it, sir, upon all these grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary as section 2, to strike out the words "person or" in the first line.

Mr. WHYTE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPENCER, (when his name was called.) On this question and all other questions connected with this bill, I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HAMILTON, (when Mr. WINDOM's name was called.) I am requested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to say that he is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] on these questions. If the Senator from Minnesota were here he would vote "nay," and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea" on this amendment.

The call of the roll was concluded.

Mr. MORTON, (who had at first voted in the negative.) As this appears to be a political question, I ask leave to withdraw my vote. I am paired on all political questions with my colleague, [Mr. McDONALD,] who is now absent from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If he were present he would vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and I should vote against it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. BOGY. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON.] If he were here he would vote against this amendment, and I should vote for it.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.] If he were here he would vote "yea;" and if other words were inserted in place of those proposed to be stricken out here, or rather at the end of the third line, I should vote "nay." As it is now, it is not necessary to state how I should vote on this precise amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Caperton, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Booth, Conkling, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, and Wadleigh—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Gordon, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Key, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, West, Windom, and Wright—34.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary proposed to be inserted as section 2.

Mr. WHYTE. I move to strike out the word "fail" in the ninth line; and insert in lieu thereof "refuse;" so as to read:

Or shall for said cause refuse to allow and furnish to such citizen.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That amendment is only calculated, I do not say designed, to emasculate the force of the bill. That is all I wish to say. I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. WHYTE. It is not intended for any such purpose, nor do I believe the effect of it, if the change is made, would have any such purpose, if the law itself be worth a rush after it is passed; but it is intended not to put such a word as "fail" in the law, which in the dictionary means to neglect to assist a voter in voting or in getting to the polls that he may vote. I do not think that Congress has any power, nor do I think that any State has power to compel any citizen to assist anybody in executing or obtaining a right to which he is entitled, unless that person be officially charged with such a duty by the law; and as the words "any person" have been left in the section, the word "fail" ought not to remain here, but a word ought to be put in which requires some active resistance, some active refusal on the part of the citizen to do some duty which he ought to perform.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WHYTE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOGY (when his name was called.) As already stated on a previous occasion, I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON.]

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. COOPER (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN.] If he were present he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] who, if present, would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SPENCER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] If he were present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Caperton, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Robertson, Sargent, and Sherman—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Gordon, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Windom, and Wright—32.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary as section 2.

Mr. NORWOOD. For the reasons that have been pointed out by the Senators from Ohio and Maryland, which I will not repeat, I move to strike out the words "and furnish" in line 9, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOGY, (when his name was called.) On this and all other questions growing out of this bill I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON.]

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SPENCER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] If he were present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HAMILTON, (when Mr. WINDOM's name was called.) The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] The Senator from Minnesota would vote "nay" and the Senator from West Virginia "yea," if they were present.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Caperton, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, and Wadleigh—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Gordon, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, West, Windom, and Wright—32.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the committee as a second section.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I offer the following amendment to the amendment: Strike out in the first line the words "person or" and insert at the end of the third line "or pretending to be such officer, or assuming to exercise such authority."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Michigan that the first part of the amendment is not in order, as the Senate has already voted on the question of striking out the words "person or" on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. But that was while it stood alone; and it is very easy to see that the propositions are quite different and that the effect of the two would be quite different. Striking out simply and striking out and adding other words, it seems to me, are quite different propositions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are really two distinct amendments offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I think my proposition is in order.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it not in order to move to strike out those words in connection with a motion to add other words?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not a motion to add words in the same place, but in another part.

Mr. THURMAN. That can make no particle of difference in my judgment. The general effect is to modify the bill. You can move to strike out and insert other words, though a motion to strike out alone has been refused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the words were to be added in the same place, the Chair would have no doubt that it was in order; but as it is, the Chair has doubts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in order as proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold——

Mr. EATON. Let the amendment be reported again.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out in the first line the words "person or" and to add at the end of the third line "or pretending to be such officer, or assuming to exercise such authority."

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it in the same paragraph?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The same paragraph and the same section, bearing on the same proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion to strike out and insert that the rules provide for, as I supposed everybody understood, is a motion to strike out and insert in place of the words stricken out. That is what parliamentary law and the rule refer to; and you cannot evade that by moving to strike out words that have been ordered to stand and insert something else somewhere else in a different part of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that inasmuch as the proposition of the Senator from Michigan is in effect two amendments, moving to strike out certain words and then to insert others in another place, it is not in order, especially as the first portion of it has been passed on by the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. Do I understand the Chair to rule that the motion to strike out the words "person or" is out of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has been voted that those words shall stand.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not ask the Senator from Vermont; I asked the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that, inasmuch as the words "person or" were moved to be stricken out by the Senator from Ohio and the Senate has passed upon that question, it is not in order now to move to strike them out again unless there is included in the same motion the insertion of other words in the same connection, which is not done by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I beg leave to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. THURMAN. Now, Mr. President, as I understand, the ruling of the Chair is that, notwithstanding the vote refusing to strike out those words, it would be in order to move to strike them ont and insert other words in lieu of them in precisely the same place that those words now occupy. While I pretend to no great knowledge of the rules of parliamentary proceeding, it does strike me that that is a limited effect given to the right that surely cannot be the sound one. A motion is made to strike out these same words which the Senate has refused to do, to strike out; but, coupled with them, and bearing upon the very same subject, and relating to the same subject, and in the very same paragraph of the same section of the bill, to insert other words, the effect of the striking out and of inserting the other words being to qualify the section. Now the Senator from Michigan can achieve his purpose by striking out these words and inserting other words in precisely that same place; but it might require a phraseology that would be awkward; it might not leave the section so symmetrical as it would be by inserting the words in another place; it might require more words, more provisions. But if he can do that by inserting the new words right in that very place where the words are stricken out, why shall he not be allowed to do so by inserting words in the same section, in the same paragraph of the section, the effect of which is precisely the same as if he had inserted them in the same place or if other words having the same effect were inserted in the same place?

I always speak with great diffidence about any question of rules, because I never have made them a study, and I do not suppose I should be very successful if I were to do so; but I do appeal to those who are conversant with such rules in the Senate to say whether or not this extremely narrow and limited interpretation of the right to move to strike out and insert which is placed by the Chair in this case is the correct rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? The Chair desires to state before the question is put, that, regardless of the fact that a motion has already been made to strike out the words "person or" and the Senate has passed upon that, the present occupant of the chair would hold that it would not be in order for any Senator to move to strike out several words and insert other words in different places in this amendment of the committee. That is the proposition of the Senator from Michigan. He moves to strike out and insert. His motion refers to two different parts of the section, and is not to strike out a definite, specific portion of the section. Therefore the Chair holds that upon that ground it would not be in order; and for the further reason that the words "person or" have already been passed upon by the Senate and retained in the section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not mean to be betrayed into wasting the time of the Senate on a collateral subject, when I do not feel at liberty to occupy its time on the main question, that has been gone over so many times and is understood by everybody; but I will say to the Senator from Ohio that his remarks now have reminded me of what he said two or three days ago very positively, and has intimated again, and that is, that he is less familiar with the rules of parliamentary law and of this body than almost anybody in it. I have no doubt he said that in good faith; and he has gone far to convince me that he is correct in the statement.

The twelfth rule says:

> On a motion to strike out and insert, it shall not be in order to move for a division of the question; but the rejection of a motion to strike out and insert one proposition shall not prevent a motion to strike out and insert a different proposition, nor prevent a subsequent motion simply to strike out; nor shall the rejection of a motion simply to strike out prevent a subsequent motion to strike out and insert.

Now, I submit to my friend according to the little knowledge that I have—I do not pretend to have quite so little as my friend does, but I do not claim to have much more—according to the little knowledge and experience I have, I never heard it claimed before that under this provision a motion to strike out simply should not prevent a motion to strike out and insert words, applied to any other proposition than a motion to strike out certain words and insert in lieu of them certain others.

Mr. THURMAN. Now may I interrupt the Senator? The Senator from Michigan proposes to do that very thing, to strike out those words and insert in lieu of them other words.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; he does not.

Mr. THURMAN. But the Senator from Vermont thinks he must insert them in identically the same place. That is the point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what I am saying. I say that I never heard it contended before, and I do not believe I shall ever hear it contended again, that this rule which says that the rejection of a motion simply to strike out shall not prevent a motion to strike out and insert can mean anything else than striking out certain words and inserting in lieu of them—I emphasize the term as I did before—certain other words. The Senator from Michigan does not propose to do that. He proposes to strike out the words that the Senate has said shall stand there, and in another part of the section to insert other words. That does not fall within the rule, and nobody before ever contended that it did that ever I heard of.

Mr. WHYTE. I hope the Senator from Ohio will withdraw the appeal, for this reason: The Senator from Michigan can reach his point in a moment without any question as to the order of proceeding by moving to strike out all after the word "any" in the first line down to the word "shall" in the fourth line, and to insert the words just as he desires:

> Officer of the United States, or officer of any State, or any person exercising power or authority under the United States or any State, or pretending to be such officer, or assuming to exercise such authority, &c.

By moving to strike out the whole of the clause as it stands and inserting these words I suggest to the Senator he would be strictly in order.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no doubt that that would accomplish the purpose of the Senator from Michigan; but, if I am able to judge of anything, his motion is perfectly in order, with due respect to those who understand the subject better than I do. His right to move to strike out and insert, notwithstanding the refusal of the Senate to strike out those particular words, is not denied; but his right to move to strike those words out and insert others in lieu of them, in the way he has done, is questioned. Is not that within the object of the rule which authorizes him to make the motion? But the Senator from Vermont says that he must insert them in identically the same place where the words moved to be stricken out now stand. I say that that is too narrow a construction of the rule and might destroy its utility altogether. When he moves to strike out those words and insert other words which are to take their place, which are to form a substitute for the words stricken out, which are to be in lieu of the words stricken out, he has the right to move to insert the words in such part of the section as will be most appropriate for the purpose, and he need not confine it to the particular hole that is made in the section by striking those words out. If that is not the case, the rule authorizing him to strike out and insert is emasculated, or at least deprived of half its force.

However, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the appeal, because I am afraid that if the question were taken on my appeal now, with this bill before us, the ruling of the Chair would be sustained, and a very bad precedent would be set. I want to raise the question on some bill which has no party in it, if the question ever arises again, when I hope my views in regard to the rule will prevail. I withdraw the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The appeal is withdrawn.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I think perhaps it may not be out of order for me to say that unless the Senator from Ohio is right in what he said as to striking out and inserting, the rule as it now stands is a mere mechanical rule without sense or logic. But I do not rise for the purpose of going into that question. I rise to move the amendment precisely as it was suggested by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] which I undertook to do three or four times before, but could not get the floor. I propose to amend by striking out all after the word "any" in the first line of the second section down to the end of the third line, in these words:

> Person or officer of the United States, or officer of any State, or any person exercising power or authority under the United States or any State.

And in lieu of them to insert:

> Officer of the United States, or officer of any State, or any person exercising power or authority under the United States or any State, or pretending to be such officer, or assuming to exercise such authority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I might make a point of order upon the amendment in that form, but I will not waste the time to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] to the amendment.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to say a few words at least to show my idea of the propriety of this language. I look upon this section as it is now drawn as intended really to control officers or those who assume to act or pretend to have the authority of officers. The whole section shows that that is really the design:

> Shall deny or abridge to any citizen of the United States entitled by the laws of such State or by the Constitution or laws of the United States to vote at any election, the right and opportunity so to vote at such election by reason of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Thus far there is no inconsistency in leaving the word "person" to stand in its present context, without amendment; but when we go further and speak of allowing and furnishing to citizens "so entitled to vote as aforesaid, a full, fair, impartial, and equal opportunity under the laws," that is an apparent discrepancy and an apparent inconsistency, as suggested by the Senator from Maryland. It seems to me with the amendment which I have proposed, the section will cover all that it could now cover by retaining the word "person" in its present connection; and by inserting the words which I have proposed all apparent discrepancy and inconsistency will be removed. I will not say that the section will necessarily be inconsistent as it now stands; but all apparent inconsistency would be removed, and the remedy would be just as perfect if it be amended as I propose. It would include all the cases that it could now include. For this reason I hope the amendment I have offered may be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say one word, because I know that the amendment proposed by my friend is proposed in good faith and with the desire to relieve a difficulty which he thinks he sees. I merely wish to say to the Senate that the committee considered this subject with the utmost diligence and care, and we designed to make this section cover every act of the character named that could be performed by an officer or by anybody else, that nothing should stand between the effort of a citizen having a right to vote and his exercise of that right by putting his vote into the proper ballot-box, and not allow anybody by any technicality to escape by showing that when he did that thing he was not a legal officer, or was exercising office by wrong, or not pretending to exercise it at all, if he did the thing.

Therefore I hope that the amendment of my friend will not be adopted, because the language he uses, "assuming to exercise official function," might be held to apply to a case which would require the Government to prove, in the instance of a great outrage, for example, that the persons who did it did it in the pretended exercise of official authority when in point of fact they might have taken possession of the ballot-boxes without any pretense at all and carried on an election which would be very good to count for one party and not good to count for the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOGY, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this bill with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON.] I presume he would vote one way and I the other.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. SPENCER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] He, if present, would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" on this proposition.

Mr. WRIGHT, (when his name was called.) I desire to say, as I have already stated, that I am paired on this bill with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. DENNIS.] If he were here he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" on this question. I make this statement now, and shall not again refer to the pair in the subsequent stages of the bill.

The roll-call was concluded and the result announced—yeas 16, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Caperton, Christiancy, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Paddock, Ransom, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—16.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THURMAN. The amendment proposed by the committee now under consideration is simply shall the second section be inserted, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. It does not touch the other sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee inserting the second section.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 25, noes 16.

The next amendment was to insert the following as section 3:

That whenever, by or under the authority of the constitution or laws of any State, or the laws of any Territory, or the laws of the United States, any act is or shall be required to be done by any citizen as a prerequisite to qualify or entitle him to vote, the offer of any such citizen to perform the act required to be done as aforesaid shall, if it fail to be carried into execution by reason of the wrongful act or omission of the person or officer charged with the duty of receiving or permitting such performance or offer to perform or acting thereon, proceeding from the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of such citizen, be deemed and held as a performance in law of such act, and of the due performance by such person or officer of his duty in the premises; and the person so offering and failing as aforesaid, and being otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to vote in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had in fact performed such act, and as if such person or officer had done his duty in the premises; and any judge, inspector, or other officer of election whose duty it is or shall be to receive, count, certify, register, report, or give effect to the lawful vote of any citizen, who shall wrongfully refuse or omit to receive, count, certify, register, report, or give effect to the vote of such citizen so having offered and failed to perform as aforesaid, upon the presentation by him of his affidavit stating that he had a right to qualify as a voter, and such offer, and the time and place thereof, and the name of the officer or person whose duty it was to act thereon, and that he was wrongfully prevented by such officer or person from performing such act by reason of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, shall for every such offense forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered by an action on the case, with full costs and such allowance for counsel fees as the court shall deem just; and shall also for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall on conviction thereof be fined not less than $500, or be imprisoned not less than one month and not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, apart from the broad invasion of the right of a State to regulate the mode of registration and the mode of conducting the exercise of the right of suffrage, I do say, with great respect to the intelligence of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and his colleagues, that the ingenuity of man could not devise a scheme for the perpetration of fraud upon the elective franchise more perfect than this section. Scarcely any Senator on this floor will undertake to deny that at this time such a provision as this is unwise and impolitic, apart from the invasion of the constitutional rights of the States; a question which I do not choose to discuss. Here is a provision of law intended to set at naught and to nullify the registration acts of every State in this Union. Here is a provision which undertakes to set up the affidavit of a party denied the right of registration as conclusive evidence of his right to vote, and to inflict punishment upon the judges of election who do not accept his ballot upon his simple affidavit alone.

The reason stated by the party in his affidavit why he was denied registration is to be the conclusive evidence of his right to vote, and on that affidavit he is to trample under foot the registration laws of every State in this Union. No system of registration in a State where colored men reside would be worth a baubee under this section. A man himself, on his own affidavit, furnishes to the officer who receives the ballot the reason why he was denied the right of registration. There is to be no investigation before a court, no application to a court to have him registered where he was denied the right of registration, but in a State where the law prohibits any man from voting unless his name appears upon the registration list, a law enacted in the interest of purity of elections, so that a man can be identified before the day of election, the party offering to be registered, no matter upon what ground he was refused the right of registration, goes to the ballot-box and on his oath alone deposits his vote in the ballot-box, and it may be nullifies and destroys the vote of the honest citizen. No punishment is provided for him for perpetrating his fraud and committing perjury in casting his ballot. O, no; you let him go scot-free; but the man who stands by the law of his State and requires the proof of the right of registration, and who denies registration when no proof can be produced, must be punished, although the party making the affidavit be steeped in perjury. There is no State law to convict the man of the crime of perjury in making such an affidavit, because the State law does not recognize the right to vote upon such an affidavit, and there is no law of Congress to punish the man who swears falsely to corrupt the ballot-box.

We are told that this is in the interest of purity of election and to protect the rights of the people. Look at the fraud that can be perpetrated under this section of the bill. Hundreds of men may be denied the right of registration, because they do not come under the provisions of the State law, and not upon the ground of their color, or their race, or their previous condition of servitude. They may be denied for other grounds, and yet if they choose to swear that they were denied upon those grounds they are entitled under the bill to vote and enabled to go scot-free, though steeped to their chin in perjury. Can that be the intelligent legislation of the Senate of the United States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator be kind enough to recur to the fourteenth and fifteenth lines on page 4 and tell me the meaning of the words "and being otherwise qualified," in connection with the criticism he is now making?

Mr. WHYTE. Who is to determine whether he is otherwise qualified? You make his affidavit the conclusive evidence of his right to vote and he determines it for himself. Ah! the Senator from Vermont may laugh, but a laugh is no answer to an argument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; but it is an answer to what is not an argument.

Mr. WHYTE. Perhaps the Supreme Court of the United States will make the same answer to this bill if enacted into a law that it made to your previous law, that it is not "appropriate legislation."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is possible.

Mr. WHYTE. Then perchance the laugh will be on the other side. I may not make any impression upon the mind of the Senator from Vermont, but it is my duty here to point out that which seems to me to be an imperfection in the bill. I do not appeal to him as my judge whether it is argument or not argument. Nothing is ever argument, probably, in his view which is hostile to the views of the Senator from Vermont; but as a lawyer I state my opinion (which may not weigh in the scales with the opinion of the Senator from Vermont, though I am somewhat elevated in my belief, I must say, in view of the action of the Supreme Court upon his former law) that this section is the grossest—I speak in parliamentary language and respectfully—the grossest perversion of the purity of the ballot-box that can possibly be devised. It puts in the hands of every dishonest negro man in a State power to cast his ballot upon his own say-so as to his right to registration within the State and under the State laws. It is not intended for that, of course. I trust I have too much respect for myself and for the Senate of the United States to say anything that would be discourteous to any Senator or to the action of any committee; but I do say that practically this is providing the grandest engine for fraud that could be conceived by man. It actually opens the door to all sorts of corruption.

There are as many bad colored men almost—I shall probably be allowed to say that—in proportion to number as white men who are open to corruption; and here is actually a carte blanche provided for dishonest colored men to vote on their own affidavit. Let us apply it practically. A man presents himself to be registered under this bill. He is denied the right on the ground that he does not reside in the county or that he has not resided there long enough, and he is turned away upon that ground. What does he do? The day of the election comes on, and he walks up to the ballot-box with his affidavit and swears that he was not registered in the ninth district in such a county in such a State, because of his race, his color, or his previous condition of servitude, and that he was otherwise qualified to vote. What is the judge of election bound to do under this proposed law? He is bound to take that vote or stand the penalty provided in this law. He is not only bound to stand the penalty of indictment and trial in courts of criminal jurisdiction, but is liable to a suit on the civil side of the United States court for the amount which he is to forfeit in case he refuses it. This is to be done without the slightest guard at all thrown around the ballot-box against the man who makes the affidavit. There is no provision in the bill punishing for false swearing in a case of this kind. Can it be possible that such crude legislation as this shall go forth from the Senate of the United States, composed of intelligent lawyers, distinguished in their profession at home, that it shall go forward to be riddled again by the astute judges who sit in the Supreme Court of the United States?

I appeal to Senators not to let party feeling sway them in looking at the principle involved in this case; but, if they want to protect the black man, to protect him with legislation that will do honor and credit to their intelligence as men and to their knowledge as lawyers.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Maryland in expressing astonishment at the provisions of this section. It opens the widest door to the grossest fraud. Not only that, but it virtually offers a reward for it. Of course, no such purpose was intended by the committee, but that is the effect of it.

Every one who is experienced in the manner of elections in the Southern States, particularly for the last few years, has some knowledge of how easy it is to procure affidavits, and any number of them. I need only call the attention of the Senate now to the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Louisiana case. It appears there that affidavits which were absolutely false, shown to be false affidavits, were procured by thousands in order to change the result of the election there. A committee of this body reported the fact, and it stands now in a report made to the Senate. Not only that; but while such a door is opened wide for the perpetration of fraud there is no provision whatsoever made for the punishment of anybody who shall participate in it after he shall have sworn falsely. He is to go scot-free. Affidavits by the thousands may be made in Mississippi or Louisiana, or any other of the Gulf States, to carry an election if men are allowed to vote upon making an affidavit; and if it should appear that every one of them was guilty of false swearing, they are not to be punished at all, but to go scot-free.

I do not know, however, that I shall gain anything by discussing this matter. I rose simply to express my astonishment at the provisions of this section and to offer an amendment to it. I move to add at the end of the section:

> And if any person so offering such affidavit shall swear falsely he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, on conviction before any district or circuit court of the United States having jurisdiction, shall be punished as in other cases of perjury.

Mr. MORTON. There is a statute now covering every case of perjury.

Mr. MERRIMON. The statute is not broad enough to cover this case, and does not cover it at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from North Carolina has expressed his astonishment. I will express mine. He proposes to make it perjury if any person swears falsely, whether he does it corruptly or whether it is an innocent mistake. Where does my honorable friend get his knowledge of human rights or criminal law, when he proposes to punish a man as a perjurer who happens to state an untruth under oath, unless he does it knowingly? In addition to that, as my friend from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] suggests, he makes it perjury if the man offers an affidavit of that kind. Perjury, under the statutes of the United States, under the statutes of all States, and of all countries that profess to have any civilization, does not consist in swearing falsely alone. It consists in swearing falsely, knowing that the statement made by the witness or the person making the affidavit is false and untrue, and for the purpose of misleading and perverting the course of justice and of truth.

My honorable friend from North Carolina says this is a hasty and precipitate discussion, after a month's notice.

Mr. MERRIMON. So it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He seems a little sensitive about anything that can be proposed in regard to these amendments. Nothing suits him; something will suit him, he says, to-morrow or next day, or some other day, or some other time, but never in this way and never at this time. Great lawyer as he is, in the haste and warmth of his enthusiasm he rises and tells us that if anybody offers an affidavit which does not state the truth, however innocent the mistake may have been, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury. That is a greater innovation upon the course of jurisprudence than anything that even my friend's imagination, or that of any other gentleman, has conceived about this bill.

It is said this man may commit perjury—put it in its strongest sense, a real perjury, a willful, corrupt falsehood under oath—and you do not provide any punishment for it. The committee had the impression—perhaps they were wrong; we shall gain information as we go on—that it was not necessary to re-enact all the laws of the United States every time we pass a statute. Here is section 5392 of the Revised Statutes, which says:

> Every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate—

And "deposition" covers "affidavit," as everybody knows—

> by him subscribed is true, willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by a fine, &c.

The committee did not think it was necessary to re-enact the criminal code every time we provided for an affidavit. As I say, I cannot waste time, but the object—I beg pardon, not the object, but the effect—is to waste time upon subjects to be gone over and over again.

I come to my friend from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] He remarked that perhaps what he said would produce no impression upon my mind. My friend from Maryland is greatly mistaken. What he says always produces an impression upon my mind. Precisely the character of the impression, of course, differs with the different occasions on which my friend speaks. When he gets out of the whirlwind of politics and of prejudice—and that is perfectly natural, I agree, because a hundred years of particular institutions and particular views cannot be expected to be gotten over in no time—when he gets out of that whirlwind and fog and comes into regions where his mind is perfectly level, the impressions he produces upon me are always of the most favorable character; but he will give me leave to say that upon these topics I think that he does not see with exactly his usual well-balanced consideration. He objects to this section because we interfere with the registration laws of the States. In that he is mistaken. We do not undertake to do anything of the kind. We only undertake to make the registration laws of States under the Constitution of the United States effective and to protect every citizen of every State, entitled to vote and to register under these laws, in the exercise of that highest right and privilege that belongs to him; so that when a citizen having the right to vote, like the Senator or myself, offers to register and is wrongfully refused on account of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, be he white or black, be he Scandinavian or Slavonic, Caucasian or Mongolian, or whatever, his offer to do what the law requires him to do shall be taken as a performance, just as when I owe my friend money and it becomes due and I offer to pay him and he refuses to take it, the law and justice both agree in saying that I have in fact paid it, and the offer of performance, so far as my rights are concerned, is equivalent to performance.

Mr. WHYTE. May I ask the Senator whether the tender of the money pays the debt?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; it does not pay the debt.

Mr. WHYTE. This bill does that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it secures me from a suit.

Mr. WHYTE. No, it does not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have done all that the law requires me to do by the offer, and having made the offer, if I bring the money into court, as this man brings his vote to the ballot-box, I have a right to put it into the court as he has a right to put his vote into the ballot-box. In either case I have lost no right that the law gives me because my honorable friend refuses to take that which the law entitles him to take and me to offer. So, a thousand other illustrations, many of them a great deal better, might be given.

The simple question is whether there is any body of men or any party in this country now who are willing to say that citizens of the United States and of the States, entitled under the Constitution of the United States to vote, shall be deprived of their suffrage by the wrongful act of some registering-officer of a State, against the law of his own State, against the constitutional right of the citizen, and against the general principles of public justice and republican government. That is the proposition.

When this offending officer comes to be indicted, my friend again is wrong in saying that he is to be convicted upon a false affidavit. There is nothing like it. The Government must prove, in the first instance, that the party who had offered to vote and was refused had a right to vote, and that when he offered to register he was wrongfully and against the law refused the right to register, and thus having been refused, that he furnished all the evidence that this bill requires; that he had thus been wrongfully refused the right to put in his ballot. That being done, the law says that the officer who refused to receive the vote shall be punished.

But I have taken more time, Mr. President, than I intended to do in explaining this section, which is perfectly plain.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I should be glad if I were able to agree to this amendment proposed by the committee; but I have very great doubt myself about the constitutionality of this clause. It is intended to take the place of the third section in the original act. I doubted the constitutionality of that section at the time of its passage, and a recurrence to the Globe will show that I suggested the doubt at that time. The fifteenth amendment provides that no person shall be deprived of the right to vote on account of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The colored voters are entitled to vote upon the same terms and conditions with everybody else; but they are not exempt from the terms and conditions imposed on everybody else. The fifteenth amendment secures the right to every colored man to vote upon the same precise terms and conditions with every other person in any of the States, and that is the right that we are trying to enforce.

This amendment of the committee, which I did not include in the original bill that I introduced, provides that if a person has offered to register, and has been wrongfully precluded on account of race, color, or previous condition, then, upon filing his affidavit, the offer shall be taken as a performance, and he shall be entitled to vote the same as if he had been registered. The question is, have we a right to do that? We have a right to punish the registering officer for refusing to allow him to register; we can punish the persons who have intruded between him and the performance of this preliminary condition; but can we declare that the offer to perform shall be, under the State law, the same as performance? I doubt that very much; I doubted it originally. The State has the right to require every voter to be registered, white and black. If the State makes that condition, is it competent for us to come in and say that where a colored man has offered to register but has been refused, he shall be treated as if he had registered? I should say not, unless the State had made the same provision with regard to everybody else. If the State provides that where any person of any color has offered to register, and has been wrongfully precluded, that person, upon proof made at the polls, may vote as if registration had taken place, then we have a right to enforce that provision in an act of this kind beyond all question. But suppose the State has made no such provision; take for example a State where registration is required, as I believe it is in New York. Take the case of a white person there being improperly precluded from registration. If the State law provides that that white person, upon proof of the offer to register, shall be held to have registered, and may vote just as if registration had taken place, we can undoubtedly enforce a similar provision in regard to colored men; but we cannot, in my judgment—at least I have very great doubt about it—dispense with the requirement of the State law. If the registration has been improperly rejected, and under the State law the person loses his vote in consequence of it, and the punishment of the officers is all that is left, it is not for us to come in and alter that State law.

In the decision of the Supreme Court in the Kentucky case that subject is referred to by the Chief Justice, but in very vague terms. It is a disagreeable matter ever to find fault with a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. By my education I have as much veneration for courts as anybody else; but I read the decision, not only in the Kentucky case but in the Louisiana case, with regret; first, because of their general effect, and, secondly, because I thought the reasoning in each of them was contradictory. While the specific reasoning in each case in regard to the counts of the indictment affirms the power of Congress to legislate upon the averment being made that the right was refused on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, yet the general reasoning in both cases went to the point that Congress could not interfere at all, except where the State affirmatively, as a State, prevented the exercise of that right. I call the attention of the Senate to what the court said on this precise question involved in this amendment:

> The statute contemplates a most important change in the election laws. Previous to its adoption, the States, as a general rule, regulated in their own way all the details of all elections. They prescribed the qualifications of voters and the manner in which those offering to vote at an election should make known their qualifications to the officers in charge. This act interferes with this practice and prescribes rules not provided by the laws of the States. It substitutes, under certain circumstances, performance wrongfully prevented for performance itself. If the elector makes and presents his affidavit in the form and to the effect prescribed, the inspectors are to treat this as the equivalent of the specified requirement of the State law. This is a radical change in the practice, and the statute which creates it should be explicit in its terms. Nothing should be left to construction if it can be avoided. The law ought not to be in such a condition that the elector may act upon one idea of its meaning and the inspector upon another.

They do leave the impression, or rather, you may draw the inference from this clause of the decision, that if the statute is specific it may be good; that is, the offer to perform may be taken for performance, but it is obscure in this as in regard to many other very important particulars, in my judgment. I put it, however, upon general grounds, and I should be sorry to see this measure weakened, I should be sorry to see its character impaired, by the insertion of a provision the constitutionality of which I doubt.

The great point I make is that it is not in our power to dispense with the State law. We can require that the colored man shall vote upon the same terms and conditions with any other man, and if a registrar or any officer of election probibits him, or if a private person interferes by violence, we can punish that officer, we can punish that private person; but whether we can dispense with the performance of the requirements of a State law, although performance is prevented wrongfully, presents a very different question, for in that case they would not vote upon like conditions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am very glad my friend from Indiana has presented this question, and that he has presented it, as he always does, with perfect clearness, so that we can see the exact point. It is a point which had originally great force, although it appeared to me and to the committee and to the Senate, when we passed the act of the 31st of May, 1870, that it was one which was not well founded. The ground upon which we passed it then, in opposition to the doubt suggested by my friend from Indiana and to the violent objurgation of all our friends on the other side, was that the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution, to say nothing about the fourteenth, (and when I speak of the fifteenth I do not mean at any time to exclude all the benefits that can be got for human rights out of all the rest of the Constitution,) speaks of "the right to vote." All that precedes the voting is merely a method of machinery to ascertain what citizen is qualified according to law. It does not make the test of citizenship, the test of the elective franchise, but it is merely a method, wisely provided by States where they have great masses of condensed populations that cannot know each other well, for the purity of the ballot-box. That is the object of registration. It is merely a means to an end of securing to every person entitled the right to vote, and excluding from the right to vote every person not entitled. That is what it is. It is incidental and auxiliary to and in aid of the right of every man qualified to put in his ballot, and not to have it prostituted by the ballot of any man not qualified. That is the fundamental idea. Keeping that in mind, I submit to my honorable friend from Indiana that it relieves us of a great deal of difficulty. Here is the Constitution which he and I both agree to; we all agree to it upon this side; and in a vague and uncertain way, looking to States, &c., our friends over the way agree to it. It is designed to secure to every citizen of the United States equality in the right of voting. The Supreme Court of the United States has said in these very opinions that it belongs to Congress to carry that into effect. As we must all see, it belongs to Congress and nobody else to carry every affirmative provision and every securative provision, as it respects private rights, into effect. The Constitution cannot enforce the laws of the United States, and the Constitution is nothing but the supreme law of the United States. What the Constitution authorizes to be done Congress must do. We agree to that. How is Congress to do this thing? The thing to be done is to secure to every citizen, without distinction of race—I will not name the others, because I wish to be short and will take one word—equal rights under the law to vote. Therefore, if the officers of any State exclude a man from doing what the State law requires to be done generally on that account, they keep him from voting on that account; whereas the Constitution says that the thing that he has a right to do is to vote. It does not say anything about registration. That is merely machinery, means, preliminary steps to sift out the good and the true from the bad and the spurious. The Supreme Court, looking to that, and in a case arising under the third section of the old act, (which is exactly like the one we have here, almost letter for letter, with this difference, that the act of 1870 in the third section did not repeat what the previous sections contained, the words "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude,") say in respect to this subject:

> The second count in the indictment is based upon the fourth section of this act and the fourth upon the third section.

Which is the one we now have under consideration, by putting in the words that the Supreme Court said were left out, the words "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." What do they say, speaking of this very subject, remember:

> Rights and immunities created by or dependent upon the Constitution of the United States can be protected by Congress. The form and the manner of the protection may be such as Congress, in the legitimate exercise of its legislative discretion, shall provide. These may be varied to meet the necessities of the particular right to be protected.

Then they go on:

> It follows that the amendment has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right which is within the protecting power of Congress.

And that is the right to vote, to actually put his vote into the ballot-box.

> That right is exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. This, under the express provisions of the second section of the amendment, Congress may enforce by "appropriate legislation." This leads us to inquire whether the act now under consideration is "appropriate legislation" for that purpose.

The court go on to say:

> It has not been contended, nor can it be, that the amendment confers authority to impose penalties for every wrongful refusal to receive the vote of a qualified elector at State elections. It is only when the wrongful refusal at such an election is because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude that Congress can interfere and provide for its punishment. If, therefore, the third and fourth sections of the act are beyond that limit, they are unauthorized.

What could be clearer, as a distinct statement, that within that limit they are authorized, because it follows what is said about this protection that the Constitution does give being within the power and duty of Congress to enforce? But the court say that if the third section, which is enough for this purpose, is beyond this limit of protection on account of race, then it is unauthorized; if within the limit, it is authorized. Then the opinion proceeds:

> The third section—

In order to make it perfectly clear that that is what is in the mind of the court. Of course if the Senator or I had written this opinion we should perhaps have stated it in different language; it might have been more clear, or perhaps not.

The third section does not in express terms limit the offense of an inspector of elections, for which the punishment is provided, to a wrongful discrimination on account of race, &c. This is conceded, but it is urged that when this section is construed with those which precede it, and to which, as is claimed, it refers, it is so limited. The argument is that the only wrongful act on the part of the officer whose duty it is to receive or permit the requisite qualification, which can dispense with actual qualification under the State laws, and substitute the prescribed affidavit therefor, is that mentioned and prohibited in section 2, to wit, discrimination on account of race, &c., and that consequently section 3 is confined in its operation to the same wrongful discrimination.

This is a penal statute and must be construed strictly; not so strictly, indeed, as to defeat the clear intention of Congress.

* * * * * * *

The statute contemplates—

Then follows what my friend just read—a most important change, &c.

There is not a single word besides these words I have read in the whole opinion, or in any expression of any of the judges (I believe only one other delivered an opinion, and that was dissenting) on this point which intimates that there is any doubt of the power of Congress to legislate directly upon the person and not upon the States, as our friends over the way say, or a single hint that there is any doubt at all about the constitutional power of Congress to provide that when, on account of race or color, a citizen otherwise qualified is denied the right to pay his tax, for instance, and the State law requires a tax to be paid before he can vote, his offer to pay it shall entitle him to vote, so that if the law had said so, for that reason it would have been perfectly constitutional and appropriate.

The court admit that all the way through, but they say the fatal point with the third section is the simple one that it does not repeat what was contained in the previous section, "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." This section of the bill, as reported, provides for supplying exactly that deficiency, and says that where there is a wrongful refusal on that account, and that is made known by an affidavit based upon this constitutional right to not be excluded from any of the steps necessary to reach voting on that ground, it shall stand as performance, and the vote ought to be received. Now if this Constitution is to carry into effect what it says on its face, that the right that is secured is the ultimate one to have the ballot of that citizen have its fair effect in the election, we cannot stop short and say "the elections may go wrong every time; your vote may be offered, but it cannot be received, because the State may make a contrivance in advance that shall enable its inspecting officers to keep you out; they may be punished, but that does not help you. The State may impose restrictions in advance that will never let you come within sight of a polling-place, and the Constitution of the United States does not protect you in your right to vote, and you, being in the minority in your State, have no remedy; the Constitution only enables us to punish somebody that the Constitution does not name at all who prevented your paying a tax that the State had imposed on people before they could vote."

Mr. President, it appears to me that, on further reflection, my friend from Indiana will be satisfied that, looking to the true effect and meaning of this provision of the Constitution bearing upon the ultimate right of voting, this difficulty disappears. When you go on further in this opinion, speaking of this matter, you find that the court say:

The elector, under the provisions of the statute, is only required to state in his affidavit that he has been wrongfully prevented by the officer from qualifying. There are no words of limitation in this part of the section. In a case like this, if no affidavit is in the language of the statute, it ought to be sufficient both for the voter and the inspector. Laws which prohibit the doing of things and provide a punishment for their violation should have no double meaning. A citizen should not unnecessarily be placed where, by an honest error in the construction of a penal statute, he may be subjected to a prosecution for a false oath, and an inspector of elections should not be put in jeopardy because he, with equal honesty, entertains an opposite opinion. If this statute limits the wrongful act which will justify the affidavit to discrimination on account of race, &c., then a citizen who makes an affidavit that he has been wrongfully prevented by the officer, which is true in the ordinary sense of that term, subjects himself to indictment and trial, if not to conviction, because it is not true that he has been prevented by such a wrongful act as the statute contemplated; and if there is no such limitation, but any wrongful act of exclusion will justify the affidavit and give the right to vote without the actual performance of the prerequisite, then the inspector who rejects the vote because he reads the law in its limited sense and thinks it is confined to a wrongful discrimination on account of race, &c., subjects himself to prosecution if not to punishment, because he has misconstrued the law. Penal statutes ought not to be expressed in language so uncertain. If the Legislature undertakes to define, by statute, a new offense and provide for its punishment, it should express its will in language that need not deceive the common mind. Every man should be able to know with certainty when he is committing a crime.

There you see, Mr. President, that the whole decision of the Supreme Court turned upon the one simple circumstance that the third section of the old law did not contain the words which we have reported in this in order to meet their views.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I am anxious to have this law passed and to have it so clearly right that it shall not be subject to future doubt. The fifteenth amendment provides that no person shall be deprived of the right of suffrage on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Whatever conditions to voting the States may attach or create must apply equally to men of all colors and races. If a State establishes the condition of registration, it cannot be made applicable to colored men and not equally applicable to white men, and it cannot be made applicable to white men and not equally applicable to colored men. In other words, the colored man is to have the same right that the white man has, absolutely upon like terms and conditions. If the State reqnires registration as a condition to voting and does not provide that where registration is wrongfully precluded the party on proof may vote anyhow, and make that right applicable to all persons, the question is how can Congress do it? If the State makes registration a condition-precedent of voting and the white man who has not registered and who has been prevented by fraud or violence cannot, upon proof of that fraud or violence, still exercise the right, can we come in and give a right of that kind to the colored man? Is it not a dangerous thing to insist upon?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We do not give it to the colored man any more than to the white man. The Constitution does not speak of registration; it speaks of different things which apply to all races and all conditions.

Mr. MORTON. Have we a right to provide for anybody voting without registration in a State where the State has not provided for it itself? If the State provides that, where a person has been wrongfully prevented from registration, upon proof of that fact he may vote, we can enforce that right; but if the State, in a case of that kind, leaves the voter who has been wronged to the punishment of the registrar, or officer, or person, the question is, are we not bound to leave it there also?

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to ask a question?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WRIGHT. If his doubt is well founded, I submit to him whether, as applied to a presidential election or a congressional election, it does not leave the power entirely in the States on this subject. Would they not have the complete power to nullify and defeat the whole purpose and object of this constitutional amendment if his doubts are well founded?

Mr. MORTON. So far as the congressional election is concerned, we have agreed in the Constitution to leave the question as to who may vote for member of Congress to the States by providing that every person who may vote for members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature may vote for a Representative in Congress. We have no power over that. The fifteenth amendment, however, guarantees that the colored man shall have the full right that everybody else has; that is, he shall not be prevented from voting on account of his race or color. So far as the election of President is concerned, that is a matter that belongs absolutely to the States. They may choose the electors by the Legislature, they may authorize the supreme court to appoint them, or they may provide for their being elected by the people. They may provide for a different class of voters for presidential electors from those who are entitled to vote for members of Congress. As the Constitution stands now, the States can provide just as they please in that regard. The State of Iowa to-morrow by her Legislature, notwithstanding the law she has upon her statute-book for electing her electors by the people, may in defiance of that law choose the electors who shall vote for President and Vice-President. There is no power under the Constitution to prevent it. So I think that, so far as that is concerned, it does not meet the point.

Mr. WRIGHT. The point I make is this: If the Senator's doubt is well founded, then the provision of the Constitution that prohibits any person being deprived of the right to vote by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and gives to Congress the power to provide by law for the enforcement of the provision, would leave it in the power of the States to make distinctions that in the end would absolutely nullify this provision of the Constitution; would allow the States to make distinctions in their statutes in reference to those who should have the right to vote and those who should not have the right.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator from Indiana mean to say that the State of Iowa could provide that white voters in Iowa alone should choose the electors?

Mr. MORTON. No, sir; I do not mean to say that, because the fifteenth amendment comes in there. If she submits the question to an election, if she has an election of any kind, under the operation of the fifteenth amendment the colored man has a right to vote on the same terms and conditions as the white man, and it is not in the power of the State to provide for any other sort of an election. The State of Iowa may attach other qualifications to the right of voting for an elector of President, but she is bound to make them applicable alike to white and black. She may require a property qualification or she may require a different residence from that required of those who vote for other officers. The question of choosing electors is absolutely in the control of the State Legislatures. There is where it is put by the Constitution.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator understand the Constitution to allow the States to impose conditions upon the voters for electors of President and Vice-President that they cannot and do not impose on voters for other officers?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly. The State Legislatures may choose the electors themselves or may, as was once done in Pennsylvania, authorize the chief justice to appoint them.

Mr. DAWES. I am aware of that; but suppose they should provide that all the voters in the State who had an estate of $1,000, and no others, should vote for electors, while as to everything else anybody might vote without a property qualification?

Mr. MORTON. I suppose a State has a right to provide different qualifications for voting for different officers, but under the fifteenth amendment it cannot make any discrimination against the colored man. He has a right to vote for each officer on the same terms and conditions with other people precisely. There is where the amendment comes in. It gives this equality; they may subject him to the same conditions that they subject everybody else to. If they do establish any condition outside of color where they can establish conditions, it is very questionable whether Congress can dispense with it, in my opinion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Indiana has not kept in view the circumstance that the Constitution of the United States does not say anything about registration at all. He suggests a doubt, and I am glad he does not go further, because the Supreme Court in going over this very question have not even hinted a doubt such as he has suggested. If his doubt was turned into a certainty it would deprive us of all power of legislation about registration at all. The Constitution does not say that every voter otherwise qualified with respect to race shall have a right to register or a right to pay taxes. We only get our power in respect to these other sections about registration, &c., solely because they are mere methods incidental to the ultimate security that the Constitution gives to the citizen, the right to vote, which is to put in his ballot and have it counted with that of every other citizen standing upon equal grounds. That is the sole source of our authority; and, as I repeat, all our power to provide that he should not be refused registration and should not be refused the right to pay taxes, or whatever may be the thing, arises merely from the circumstances that this is a means to the great end of security that the Constitution has declared, and that is the vote.

Now, on the suggestion of my friend from Indiana you can exclude everybody from voting, so that any particular race in any State, white or black, Anglo-Saxon or Mongolian or African, may be denied the right to vote forever, and still the Constitution not be infracted. How? Some tax officer says, the law requiring the payment of taxes, "I will not take your tax," and the man cannot pay it. He goes to the voting officer, with his other fellow-citizens, and offers to vote. The voting officer says, "No, I cannot take your vote, because you have not paid your tax; go away." Putting the two things together, the man is ruled out altogether. My friend says, "Punish the tax officer." In order to do that you have got to borrow by implication—a just and fair implication, I admit, out of the Constitution, from the words "right to vote"—the power to go clear through all forms and methods and see to it that this test, discrimination by race, is not applied anywhere; and therefore, when it is applied as the first step, Congress says that that application as a first step shall be absolutely void. That is all there is to it. He has done the thing which the law requires, because you have no right to prevent him from it on account of the ground that you state. Then he stands exactly as pure, exactly as qualified as the citizen whom the testing, registering officer or tax officer has chosen to admit to go through his gate. Now, we tell the voting officer, who is the one alone whom the Constitution speaks to in direct terms, "If any of your fellows before you, either taxing or otherwise, have kept this man from bringing to you a certain piece of evidence on the ground that the Constitution forbids them to keep him away from you upon, you shall take his vote as you ought to do, just as you take the vote of anybody else." That is all it says; and therefore I submit that this bill must fall altogether on its main provisions, based upon this article of the Constitution, or else we are forced to hold that the Constitution looks through all forms and all contrivances and brings the citizen, regardless of his race, up with his fellow-citizens to the ballot-box, where he can have his voice in carrying on the Government.

There is only one other word that I want to say, because I wish to save time; and that is again to suggest to my friend from Indiana that this very section, excepting that we have put in what the Supreme Court said was lacking, has undergone the sharpest argument and the severest scrutiny; and this point, although it was known to the Supreme Court—because it was opened in the other debate, where my friend says they had it—although it was pressed upon them, they did not even allude to. I mean the point that was made in the argument and made in the old debate, that this provision was unconstitutional in its nature. They only say that the provision was unconstitutional because it omitted to state that this rejection had been on account of race. They treat it from beginning to end, in all their statements, assume it to be without a hint or a qualification, perfectly within the scope of the Constitution, as merely a means to the end, and then say, "the one thing lacking," as the Scripture says, is that you did not have in that section, as you did in the preceding one, the words "race or color." Those we now put in. I appeal to my friend to let us try the Supreme Court, after this invitation, upon their own ground; because it seems to me it is fatal to the rights of these citizens whom we are endeavoring to protect if their right to vote is absolutely and forever gone, (however much you may punish the tax officer or registering officer,) if they do all their part and cannot be allowed to come near the polls at all.

Mr. MORTON. The great object of this law and of all laws to enforce the amendments is to put the colored man on the precise level in regard to rights with the white man. When we have done that, we have accomplished our purpose. If we do less, we come short of our duty. If we undertake to do more, we are likely to endanger all.

Now, the Constitution does not say anything about registration; it does not say anything about paying poll-tax and a condition to vote; it does not say anything about any condition or any qualification to vote in the States. All that is left to the States with this single prohibition, that there shall be no distinction on account of race or color—that the colored man shall have the right to vote upon like terms and conditions with the white man.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is he not deprived of that right, may I ask my friend, if he is refused registration because he is black, and then is refused the right to vote because he is not registered?

Mr. MORTON. No; it hardly amounts to that, for this reason: If the State makes registration a condition of voting, provides that no man shall vote who is not registered, though he may have been wrongfully prevented from registering——

Mr. EDMUNDS. And for that reason——

Mr. MORTON. Though he may have been wrongfully prevented from registering, they are still upon the same terms. But if Congress comes in under this amendment and gives the right to vote although there is no registration, then the condition established by the State in one respect is destroyed. That is very clear. If the State says no man shall vote who is not registered, whatever may be his color, race, or condition, that places all upon the same footing; but if we say that the offer to perform the condition established by the affidavit of the man himself is equivalent to performance, we have changed the law of the State in a very important particular.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Let me ask my friend a question. If a State says that no man shall vote unless he is registered, and then the registering officer says to a man, "You shall not be registered because you are a black man," is not that a direct violation of the fifteenth amendment?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is just exactly what this section provides for, as I understand.

Mr. MORTON. If the registering officer says, "You shall not be registered because you are a black man," Congress can provide for punishing him as this bill does, can send him to prison, or can assess a heavy fine upon him as this bill undertakes to do; but if the State says that no man shall vote who is not registered, and Congress undertakes to say that in the case of the colored man he shall vote although he is not registered, then you have overcome the State law in regard to one class, and the equality no longer exists. If the white man is refused the right to vote because he does not live in the State or has not lived there long enough, or is not of the proper age, and the objection is a wrongful one, is fraudulent, he cannot vote, but he can sue the registrar, he can punish the man who deprives him of this right. He cannot vote because the law says no man shall vote who has not registered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I understand, this law simply says that the man's affidavit shall be considered as equivalent to his vote if he is prevented from registration, and therefore from voting, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. MORTON. But if under the law of the State the man's affidavit will not entitle anybody else to vote, although he has been wrongfully prevented from registration, it is clear that the equality does not exist.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it will if he makes the same affidavit that it was wrongfully done and it is true.

Mr. MORTON. For that particular cause. But bear in mind—and here is where the distinction comes in, and I think my friends rather lose sight of it—that so far as all conditions of voting are concerned they are left with the State. The State of Georgia requires men to pay a poll-tax; it is used fraudulently; we all know it; we know that an accumulated poll-tax is demanded as the condition of the right to vote, and we understand perfectly well that this poll-tax in the State of Georgia is used as a fraudulent means to keep the colored people from voting, and has operated in that way. I can point you to congressional districts at the last election where comparatively few colored votes were cast, and where the body of them were kept from voting because this poll-tax was demanded of them and the demand was not made of white men. Georgia has a right to make the payment of that tax a condition of voting, but she must make it equally applicable to all, white and black. If she says that colored men cannot vote without paying a poll-tax, but white men may, she violates the Constitution, and when the inspectors of election demand of colored men the payment of poll-tax, and because they cannot do it turn them away, and do not make a similar demand of white men, they are guilty of fraud, and ought to be punished, beyond all question. That is the case now in the State of Georgia, I undertake to say; it is the case in the State of Alabama; perhaps it is so in other States. Various means are resorted to. But, Mr. President, I am looking to the question of the law, and I want this law to stand upon a solid foundation. I do not want it to be in a condition that the Supreme Court can pick it to pieces.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So do I; and they admit they cannot if you put this in.

Mr. MORTON. I will say to my friend that the reasoning of the Supreme Court on this point is entirely obscure, and the reasoning in both these cases is, in my judgment, contradictory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But not on this point that we are talking of.

Mr. MORTON. In the opinion in the Kentucky case the general reasoning of the court is against the notion that Congress has any power to interfere in any case except where the State affirmatively comes in as a State and denies the right; but when the court come to speak of particular counts in the indictment, under particular sections of the law, it seems to recognize that they would be good if they contained the averment that these rights were denied on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Let me read from this opinion:

The fifteenth amendment does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one. It prevents the States or the United States, however, from giving preference in this particular to one citizen of the United States over another on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Before its adoption this could be done.

There the Supreme Court say that the purpose of it is to prevent the United States or prevent the States, as such, from taking away this right; and if my friend will recur to the other opinion in the Colfax Parish cases, he will find still stronger language used in regard to the fourteenth amendment, which says that no State shall deny the equal protection of the laws.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. MORTON. In a moment. I want to read a short extract from this opinion. Here is what the Supreme Court say in the Colfax Parish cases, speaking of the fourteenth amendment, where the same phraseology is used:

The fourteenth amendment prohibits a State from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; but this provision does not, any more than the one which preceedes it and which we have just considered, add anything to the rights which one citizen has under the Constitution against another.

I confess I was not more astonished at anything in these decisions than I was at that language:

The equality of the rights of citizens is a principle of republicanism. Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of this principle, if within its power. That duty was originally assumed by the States, and it still remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more.

Hence, as I said before, where these two opinions reason in a general way in regard to these amendments, they do deny the validity of these laws altogether; but when they come to speak of particular counts, and refer to the defective averments, they seem to recognize the fact that the sections would be good if they contained the averment that these rights were withheld on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, although the section and the counts do not refer to States as such, but refer simply to the conduct of individuals; so that, so far as the reasoning in these two opinions is concerned, it is not very satisfactory. I prefer to take that which is specific in its character and applies to the counts and to the sections.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana to repeat what he said about the colored people in Georgia being refused the right to vote on account of the non-payment of taxes. I do not know that I understood him correctly.

Mr. MORTON. I have been informed, and I believe very often informed, that in Georgia the tax law, which requires the payment of a poll-tax as a condition of voting—am I right about that?

Mr. NORWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORTON. I have been informed that that law is enforced against the colored people, and is not enforced against the white people. That may not be universally the case, but it is largely so, and has operated, as I am informed and believe, in keeping a great many colored men from the polls who were entitled to vote as well as others. That condition has been exacted of them, but has not been exacted of others.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. President, all I wished to do was to ask the Senator from Indiana for his proof. To indulge in such a loose and vague statement on what he has heard I think is hardly fair, though I suppose it amounts to very little or nothing. A republican convention, composed largely of colored men, that was elected under the reconstruction acts which my honorable friend assisted in passing, adopted the clause to which he has made reference. It was a republican measure; it was a colored man's measure. They required a poll-tax of $1 as a condition precedent to suffrage, and they put that upon the white people of Georgia against their will; and that law has been enforced, so far as I know, impartially ever since. It has been brought to bear upon the white man as well as upon the colored man. It may be true, as the Senator has said, that some colored men have not voted on account of that law; but it was not because the law was rigorously and unjustly enforced against them, but because they value the dollar better than they do the right to vote, and rather than pay the dollar which they themselves have imposed upon themselves as citizens of that State they stay away from the polls. But I challenge the honorable Senator—and I started to say that I defy him—to produce proof that in any instance the white people of Georgia have ever refused to allow a colored man to pay his poll-tax, and then afterward to vote. If his charge means anything it means that, and I challenge him for the proof.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, no amount of ingenuity, no amount of sophistry, can conceal the true nature of the section now under consideration. It is a plain, bald attempt to alter the election laws of the States, and whether it be an attempt to alter them by adding to them or by taking from them, its nature is precisely the same. If a State law says that no man shall vote who is not registered, this section proposes to alter that State law and to say that he shall vote although he is not registered. It proposes to say that a certain act shall be equivalent to registration when the State law says no such thing. Now, it is as obvious as anything can be that if Congress has a right thus to add to or thus to alter a State law under the pretense of securing to every man the right to vote under this guarantee of the Constitution as it has been called, it may, for the same reason, repeal any State law that in its judgment it thinks interferes with perfect equality of right in respect to suffrage.

I repeat, if it can add a provision that is not in the State law, and much more if it can give the right of suffrage in direct opposition to the plain text and demand of the State law upon the ground that the State law is defective and that under it frauds may be perpetrated, officers may act wrongfully, and thereby a person may be deprived of his right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude—if it can thus supplement what it supposes to be defects in the law or change the law so as to prevent this result, it may go further and repeal the law out and out or any provision of the law that it sees fit to repeal.

Where is it to stop, sir? It does not stop anywhere. It is made to apply by this very bill to every election from that of President of the United States down to that of the humblest township officer who may be voted for in any hamlet by the people in any part of the United States. It embraces everything, and its principle embraces every provision of any State law that Congress may see fit in its discretion to say might operate, not by means of any provision in the law itself, but by the misconduct of some person charged with its execution, to deprive some person of his right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

You propose to alter a law of a State which requires registration. Why? Because the law is unconstitutional? No such thing. Nobody pretends that it is unconstitutional. Because it is an unwise law? No such thing. You say that it is a wise law, or at least the people of the State in which it prevails deem it to be a wise law, and you have no right to question their judgment upon that subject. You propose to alter that law; you propose that when that law, perfectly constitutional under the constitution of the State, perfectly constitutional under the Federal Constitution, says that a man shall not vote unless he is registered, or he shall not vote unless he has paid a certain tax, he shall vote nevertheless in defiance of that law. You propose to change a perfectly constitutional and valid law which meets the approbation of the people of the State by whose representatives it has been enacted, and to say that that law shall be altered because you think it is necessary to do so in order to secure to this man the right to vote. Why, sir, I say once more, if that is the case, you can enact all the election laws of the States; you can, by such legislation as this, enact the whole code of election laws of every State and of every municipality down to the lowest municipality in the whole length and breadth of the United States, under the pretense that there is a necessity to do so in order to secure to the colored race a right to vote; and to secure it to them how? To secure them against the misconduct of officials, the misconduct of officers; and under the pretense of securing them against the misconduct of officials you claim the power to utterly change and alter all the election laws of a State and to enact yourselves a code of election laws for that State for all the elections down to the lowest municipality within its borders. That is what this is, and it is nothing less than this; and no amount of ingenuity or sophistry can make it anything less than this.

Is that "appropriate" means of enforcing the provision of the Constitution? You claim that it is under the right to pass "appropriate legislation." Is it "appropriate legislation" to alter the election laws of the States confessedly constitutional? Is it "appropriate legislation" to add to the laws of a State which are confessedly constitutional? Is it "appropriate legislation" for you to enact for a State a code of election laws? If it is, pray what is not "appropriate legislation?" Why is not a total abolition of all State election laws and a code of election laws enacted by Congress itself for every State and every municipality in every State "appropriate legislation" under the pretense, forsooth, of securing to the people of a particular race or of a particular color their right to vote, while the same security in other cases quite as flagrant and needing protection quite as much is not accorded at all? There are men who are denied registration, white and black, from other causes than their race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It has been done again and again and again by fraud. There have been men registered who had no right to be registered without regard to their color, their race, or their previous condition of servitude. Such enormities have happened again and again and again, not in the South alone, but in the North more than in the South, and especially in the great cities of the North. In all such cases the white man is denied registration not because he is white—nobody pretends that—but because the registrars are opposed to him in political sentiment; that is the reason I refer to; it is corrupt; it is because they know that that man will vote for the party to which they are opposed, and therefore he is denied registration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But let me ask my friend, supposing the Constitution of the United States said that no man should be denied the right to vote on account of his political opinions, and then a registrar should refuse him the right to vote on account of his politics?

Mr. THURMAN. Then you would have no right to change the State law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then you would have a parallel case.

Mr. THURMAN. But the Senator diverts me from what I was saying. I say there is as much necessity to protect white men against corrupt registrars who refuse them registration because of a difference in political opinion as there is to protect the black man.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Constitution only allows us to protect on account of race. If it had said "on account of politics," we should be able to pass a law covering that case, but you would oppose it I suppose.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator knows well enough what I am speaking about. I am speaking about this "appropriate legislation," and I say there is no necessity which makes this legislation appropriate; that there is quite as much necessity for protecting men from being rejected from registration or rejected at the polls by corrupt officials who are opposed to them in political sentiment as there is on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and much more, sir. Who believes that any negro man who was improperly rejected was ever rejected because he was a negro man? Take any State you please; take Georgia, that has been alluded to, if they have a registration law, (and I do not know whether they have or not;) take Louisiana; who believes that any republican board of registrars or any republican registrar ever rejected a colored man because he was a colored man? Never in the world; never on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. If he rejected that colored man, it was because he thought he would vote the democratic ticket.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was always for some reason that the law did not reach, undoubtedly.

Mr. THURMAN. That is the reason. So, too, if there was a corrupt democratic registrar who rejected a negro man from registration, or refused to accept his poll-tax, he did not refuse because he was a negro; he did not refuse because he had been a slave; but he refused because he thought he would vote the republican ticket. Everybody knows that is the truth of it. Therefore, if you come to the real essence and truth of this business, there is no necessity whatever for the passage of this law; and it is a false pretense to say that there is a necessity for it because people are denied registration on account of their race, their color, or their previous condition of servitude. No man is rejected for any such cause as that anywhere in this land; and to make that the pretext, to make that the foundation for the assertion of a power on the part of Congress to absolutely annihilate the election laws of a State and to erect Congress into a power to prescribe the code of election laws for every State—for that is the length and breadth, and nothing short of the length and breadth, of this proposition—is simply to say that the States have no rights whatsoever that Congress is bound to respect.

Now I do say that this provision is not at all in the interest of the purity of elections; this provision is not at all in the interest of the rights of any man, white or black.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it not like the State laws in many States in this very respect?

Mr. THURMAN. Suppose it is like the State laws in many respects; the right to pass those laws belongs to the States, and not to you. There are plenty of other laws you might pass that would be like their laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senator is talking now about the propriety of the thing in itself, in its philosophic nature. In all well-regulated States, where they intend to give a man his rights, they do not allow any registrar to prevent the right to vote. If that registrar wrongfully refuses to register a man, they give him leave to go to the polls and make the proper proof, and then put in his vote; and that is exactly what under this Constitution we undertake to do in this case.

Mr. THURMAN. Then leave it to the State law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Constitution of the United States imposes upon us the duty, in respect of race, of taking care of it, and does not give it to the State.

Mr. THURMAN. The Constitution of the United States imposes no duty on you to alter or change the constitutions or laws of the States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but it does impose on us the duty of protecting men from being rejected on account of race, and that is what we undertake to do, and it does not give the States any such right.

Mr. THURMAN. The Constitution of the United States gives you a right to see to it that no State shall abridge the right of any man to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; but the Constitution never told you that some petty registrar in one of the parishes of Louisiana was the State of Louisiana; it never told you that some petty collecter of a tax in some city or town or village of Ohio was the great State of Ohio; and that you, under the pretense of his official misconduct, should change the election law of the Commonwealth of Ohio. It never did any such thing as that. But according to this new doctrine, the implication that is drawn, this guarantee, that simply is a prohibition on the powers of a State as a State, just as the prohibition upon the power of the State to impair the obligation of a contract, is to be stretched, forsooth, into a power to override the very laws of the State which are confessedly constitutional both under the State constitution and under the Federal Constitution. No, Mr. President, argue it as you may, let there be as much ingenuity as there may be upon it, this is a bald, naked proposition to assert for Congress the power to make the election laws of all the States, under the false pretense of preventing discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. President, I did propose to say something about some of the details of this bill, although they have been so well exposed by the Senator from Maryland and others that I hardly think it is necessary that I should do so. I have only to say one thing, however, in respect to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina. I concur with him, so far as my investigation has gone, in the statement that if this bill pass there is no law of the United States under which a man making a false affidavit in order to vote can be punished. I have looked over the laws. The law cited by the Senator from Vermont has certain limitations upon it which are to be found in other statutes of the United States, and so far as I have been able to examine them they make it almost a demonstration that under this law a man would not be indictable however false the affidavit might be. But, sir, I do not care about speaking of these minor matters, although that is not an insignificant matter by any manner of means if you have the power to pass this bill. What shocks me is that this power should be asserted on the part of Congress to change, to alter, to annihilate the election laws of the States and to enact a code of State election laws by act of Congress.

Mr. President, if there is no objection, as I do not think we can get through with this bill to-night, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope not. We ought to finish this bill. We have had so good a speech from my friend that it is a good time now to finish it.

Mr. THURMAN. What did the Senator say?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I said that, impressed now with the force of my friend's remarks, it was a good time to finish this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. It would be an excellent thing if the Senator from Vermont were oftener impressed in the same way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am always impressed in exactly the same way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont does not often make assertions without authority, I know; but when he intimates that in any State of the Union where there exist registration laws parties are privileged to vote on their own affidavit who have been refused registration, I must really ask him to show me the State where such a law as that exists. I do not mean to assert anything from investigation, because I have not examined the laws of all the States of the Union; I have examined some of them, and I am impelled to assert that no such law can be found from Maine to Texas. On the contrary, the law of my State, for which we are indebted to a republican Legislature during the war, which we have continued since the war and since the democratic party has come into power in that State, only with modifications making more ample the protection of the colored man, gives protection to every man who is refused the right of registration on any ground which is unlawful; I care not whether it be because of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, or whatever may be the ground, if it be an unlawful ground the party has his redress just as every colored man has his redress in Maryland to-day if any officer of registration denies him the right to be registered when he is lawfully qualified for registration. I venture to affirm that the same law in its effects, if not precisely similar in detail, exists throughout all the States where registration is a prerequisite to voting. In Maryland—

If any person shall deem himself aggrieved by the refusal of any officer of registration to register his name as a qualified voter by reason of the decision of the said officer that he has not the requisite constitutional qualifications of age, citizenship, or residence, or is disqualified under the provisions of the second and third sections of the third article of the constitution—

That was at that time disqualified by going South and participating in the rebellion—or by the refusal to register his name as a qualified voter for any other cause.

Then the party so refused has a right to go before the circuit court in the county or the supreme bench in Baltimore City and, upon proving those facts, to have his name entered upon the registration-list so that he may be entitled to vote at the next election. What can be fairer, what can be more proper than that provision of law? I venture to assert that no man in Maryland who has been improperly denied the right of registration has failed to obtain the privilege of registration on application to the court. More than that, the law provides that, if he maintains before the court his right to vote, the expense of his appeal to the court shall be paid by the county or by the city of Baltimore, where he is denied the right to vote. That is not all; a clause is inserted in the law punishing any registrar who shall deny to such man the right to vote at the election.

Here, Mr. President, is a provision of law in the interest of the purity of election; here is a mode of redress, a fair, proper legal mode of redress to every man denied his right by enabling him to go before the courts and prove that he has all the other qualifications to entitle him to vote, and that he has been denied because of his race, of his color, or his previous condition of servitude, and thus that wrong can be righted; he can be put upon the list. But, instead of that, here he is made the judge of his rights, and by his own affidavit he injects, in violation of the State law, his ballot into the ballot-box of the State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the committee proposed as section 3.

Mr. MERRIMON. I have been very much edified, sir, by this debate. I am glad that the Senator from Indiana has expressed his thoughts on the subject, and that he thinks so well as he does. He has thrown a flood of light on the subject. His points are well taken, and he argues well, and I am not surprised that the other side have so signally failed to answer the points that he made.

I wish that this morning before the hurried remarks that I made I had had an opportunity to look into the case of Cruikshank and the other case decided by the Supreme Court lately. I was endeavoring to show that the fifteenth amendment did not operate on individuals, but on the United States and on the States only. I beg now, although I am not going into a re-argument of that matter, to read a short paragraph from the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States vs. Cruikshank which supports the view I have submitted. The clause reads as follows:

Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of this principle, if within its power. That duty was originally assumed by the States, and it still remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more. The power of the National Government is limited to the enforcement of this guarantee.

And yet, in the face of that express language and decision of the Supreme Court upon the very point at issue between us, it is insisted that this bill is to have validity if it shall be passed into a statute. My principal purpose in rising now was to insist that I should not be laughed out of court. I do not mean to be. The Senator from Vermont has a very happy way when argument fails him of resorting to an unhandsome sneer at his adversary and getting rid of him in that way. On another occasion he will deal in fulsome compliments, and on another occasion he will indulge in handsome platitudes and take his benefit by such a course as that. On this occasion he has endeavored to laugh me out of court. I mean to give him to understand that I do not intend he shall do so. I maintain that the amendment I propose is reasonable, just, and proper, and I intend to stand by it until the Senate votes it down. If it shall be the judgment of the Senate that it is not proper to be incorporated in this bill, all well, I submit; but my friend cannot laugh me out of court. I know where I stand. I see the right in this matter, and I intend to endeavor to pursue the right. I think it not improbable that in the haste of preparing this amendment I omitted a word that I ought to have inserted, but I had to draw it in a hurry, just as we have had to debate this case in a hurry. This great question, that ought to engage the attention of the Senate for a week, is to be disposed of on a desultory debate of three hours.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator did not think I was laughing, if I did laugh, at what he did not put into his amendment. I do not know that I laughed at all; but if I did, I was laughing at what he did have in it.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not know whether the Senator laughed because of the amendment or laughed because he did not have an argument to answer the place of that laugh. I think it very likely that the latter was the reason; for generally when he has an argument he employs that. It is only when he has not an argument at command that he employs laughter or those platitudes that I talked about. The amendment as I offer it now is in these words:

And if any person so offering such affidavit shall therein knowingly swear falsely—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the amendment which was offered before?

Mr. MERRIMON. It is with the exception of the words "therein" and "knowingly." I have amended it so as to insert the word "knowingly," which I think myself is material, though I am not sure that it would not have done without it.

he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and on conviction before any district or circuit court of the United States having jurisdiction shall be punished as in other cases for perjury.

That amendment is to come in at the end of line 38 of section 3. I offer the amendment because, if the bill is to pass, it is essential to make it perfect; to make those who would indulge in perjury—and I endeavored to show a while ago that we might expect a great deal of perjury if this bill passes—liable to be punished for it as other persons who shall be guilty of perjury.

The Senator then turns to the Revised Statutes, and tells me that there is a general law which embraces this case. I deny it. I say that he cannot show any general law which, in my judgment, upon a fair construction of it, embraces this case. The statute to which he referred is in these words:

Every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed is true, willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be punished, &c.

This statute is confined by the limiting words "in any case." In order to embrace this matter the section must have said "in any case or matter." "Case" has a technical meaning. It means a suit, a litigation properly instituted before some tribunal competent to determine it. It has been so decided over and over again. In order to embrace this case, it ought to have said "any case or matter." In a criminal proceeding the court must construe the statute most strictly, and the court would be bound to say that "case" there did not embrace a proceeding or matter of this sort, one that is entirely ex parte, one that is entirely outside of the ordinary course of justice, one that does not happen at all before a court of justice or in any regularly instituted legal proceeding. The words "or matter," or some words like them of a comprehensive nature must have been used if this statute was intended to embrace a case like that covered by this bill.

Furthermore, the term "affidavit" is not used in this section of the Revised Statutes at all. It might be that in civil proceedings a court would hold that the language is broad enough to embrace an affidavit; but in criminal proceedings, where statutes are construed strictly and always in favor of the prisoner, I think the strong probability is that the court would hold that an affidavit of this sort was not embraced by this statute.

So then I say, sir, this amendment is right and proper, and even in the minds of those who have the impression of the Senator from Vermont this amendment can do no harm; it can answer no evil purpose. While the right created by the statute should exist, the punishment for perjury committed in ascertaining it should be provided for in the same act, so that the offender shall have not only the advantage but the penalty for perjury before his eyes at the same time and in the same way. I insist that the amendment is pertinent and proper; and upon its adoption I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to waste the time of the Senate, as I have said before; but I do not wish to leave my friend to suppose that the word "case" that he refers to means "suit." Sometimes it means "suit" and sometimes it means "instance." If my friend will read the whole section through, I think he will be convinced himself, if he has not got too warm about it, that it means "instance." This is the only section of the statutes of the United States that applies to affidavits anywhere, that applies to official oaths anywhere, and to the ten thousand instances——

Mr. MERRIMON. My friend is mistaken about that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see where.

Mr. MERRIMON. If you will turn to section 1750, page 311, you will find that there is express provision made there for cases where affidavits and depositions may be taken before consuls, and so on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, taken before consuls in a foreign country. That is another thing. I am referring to the administration of the laws of the United States in its own territory. The language is this:

Every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person—

"Tribunal" refers to a suit that is before it; "officer or person" applies to the ten thousand instances happening every day as to customs officers and others before whom you swear to an affidavit—

In any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered—

Take one simple illustration; that is enough, because I cannot spare time to go over the ten thousand; the laws of the United States require an invoice and entry in the custom-house to be sworn to, and that is done before an officer—

In any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed is true, willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury.

That is the statute which comes down from 1790, under which in a general way—although there may be some other special statutes in particular cases which I do not remember—the sanction of an oath and the penalty of perjury apply to the ten thousand instances that happen every week in the United States where an affidavit is subscribed and sworn to out of court before some officer authorized to administer an oath to some independent fact that has not anything to do with a suit at law at all. I assure my friend that I have the best reason for so believing. Therefore I submit to him that his proposition is quite unnecessary. If, however, he thinks it is needed, if he will put his amendment into the same frame that this law is, "swearing willfully falsely to a matter which he does not believe to be true," so as to make it exactly the perjury that this section describes, I shall not take up the time of the Senate in discussing whether it is necessary or not, because I do not care; but I ask you not to adopt entirely different language, which does not even now, as my friend has corrected it after being laughed at, as he says, reach anything like the true definition of perjury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has called for the yeas and nays on his amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I have no objection to accepting the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont. All I want to do is to make the offense perjury. I did not have the statute before me at the time, and I drew the amendment very hastily. I think it covers the point.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. MORTON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. MCDONALD.] If he were present he would vote in favor of this amendment, and I should vote against it.

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] He would if present vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SPENCER, (when his name was called.) On this question and all other questions connected with this bill I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] If he were here he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" on this amendment.

I also desire to state that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARVEY] is paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. KELLY.] If present the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay," and the Senator from Oregon "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. I ought to state that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] If present the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay" on this question.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Caperton, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bruce, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Robertson, Sargent, and Wadleigh—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, West, Windom, and Wright—36.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee proposed as section 3.

Mr. EATON, (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope not; let us finish this matter now.

Mr. EATON. I have no idea that it can be finished.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can be finished in half an hour if we are all quiet, and vote as hard as we can.

Mr. EATON. I submit the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, proposed as section 3.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I have been troubled somewhat with the same doubts and perplexities that affect the Senator from Indiana in regard to the third section; and to overcome that difficulty I propose the following amendment to be added to the section:

Provided, That this section shall not apply in any State where by the laws of such State no person of any race or color shall be allowed to vote without being previously actually registered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary as section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was in section [2] 4, line 5, after the word "required," insert the words "by law;" so as to make the section read:

That if any person, by force, bribery, threats, or intimidation, or other unlawful means, shall hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct, or shall combine and confederate with others to hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct any citizen from doing any act required by law to be done to qualify him to vote, or from voting at any election as aforesaid, on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of such citizen, such person shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered by an action on the case, with full cost, and such allowance for counsel fees as the court shall deem just; and shall also, for every such offense, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500, or be imprisoned not less than one month and not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [3] 5, line 3, after the word "person," to insert "having the right to vote;" so as to read:

That if any person shall prevent, hinder, control, or intimidate, or shall attempt to prevent, hinder, control, or intimidate, any person having the right of suffrage from exercising.

Mr. THURMAN. I have a word to say on that section. I hope my friend, the chairman of the committee, will be able to expound the section to the satisfaction of the Senate; there is no doubt he can to his own satisfaction. I shall not undertake to go into the details of the section, but there is one thing about it that I really need light upon. The section provides—

That if any person shall prevent, hinder, control, or intimidate, or shall attempt to prevent, hinder, control, or intimidate, any person having the right of suffrage from exercising, or in exercising, the right of suffrage, on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of such person, by means of bribery, force, or intimidation, or by threats of depriving any such person of employment.

And the like. What troubles me is to know how a man is to be bribed and made not to vote on account of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does my friend wish an answer?

Mr. THURMAN. Wait until I get through, and you can give the answer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was going to tell my friend to apply to some of his democratic brethren in the South, and he could find out.

Mr. THURMAN. I can very well conceive how you might bribe a man to vote for John Smith; but how that bribing would be influenced by the color of the voter or his previous condition of servitude, is a little beyond my comprehension. My impression is that the fellow who bribed a man, would bribe him if he were white just as soon as he would bribe him if he were black.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It might not cost so much.

Mr. THURMAN. Then colored voters are cheaper commodities than the whites; are they?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; higher. I said it might not cost so much.

Mr. THURMAN. They could be bought for less money.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I said it might not cost so much to bribe a white man as a colored man.

Mr. THURMAN. Then the Senator thinks white men have less respect for themselves than colored men.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A good many of them have, I notice.

Mr. THURMAN. I differ with that opinion. I think all good men, whether white or black, have about the same respect for themselves, and all bad men, white or black, are equally wanting in respect for themselves. That is the way I look at it. The Senator makes a discrimination on account of race. [Laughter.] I do not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend will have a race next week. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to see the Senator from Vermont frame an indictment to convict a man in which he must say—for he is attempting to bring it within the decision of the Supreme Court—that the fellow was bribed to vote for John Smith, or not to vote for John Brown, or not to vote at all, and the reason for bribing him was that he was a black man, or had been in a previous condition of servitude. He was not bribed to vote for John Smith, because John Smith wanted his vote; he was not bribed to vote against John Brown, because the briber was afraid John Brown would be elected; but he was bribed purely on account of the fact that he was a negro and for no other reason. If he had been a white man he might have voted for whom he pleased, and they would not bribe him at all; but they bribed him not to vote, because they did not want a colored man to vote at all, and so paid him not to vote.

If you can possibly conceive a case of that sort, then there is some reason for this section; but if anybody can actually conceive it happening, he has a more lively imagination than I have; and yet one of the wisest and most learned committees of the Senate, presided over by one of the ablest men in the nation, has reported this provision. I have no doubt he can give good reasons for it. I think there are very few propositions that some reasons cannot be given for, and perhaps some imaginable case can be supposed in which a fellow is bribed to vote for "A" or to vote against "B" or not to vote at all, not in respect to how he would vote or what would have been the influence of his vote, but simply because the briber did not want that fellow to vote on account of the fact that he was a colored man or had been a slave.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I will give the reasons at the same time that my friends, who say they are ready, bring in some bill to carry out this amendment of the Constitution and make it effective—some other time. I will not waste the time of the Senate now in chaffing about words here with my friend. This is in the law already, in the act of 1870.

Mr. THURMAN. Now upon my word I do not think that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is treating fairly the poor district judges, some of whom are inops consilii, and who love to try these cases properly, or, what is perhaps more to the point, the district attorneys, who are to frame the indictments. He ought to give them some sort of a chart by which they can predicate an indictment on this section; for they will say "if the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, one of the ablest lawyers in the country, and the framer of this bill, cannot tell what this thing means, cannot advise us how we are to frame an indictment upon it, we give it up;" and consequently the law of my friend will be a perfect dead letter. If he wants the law to be of any effect, I beg him to set up a guide-board for his subordinates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah! Mr. President, when my friend comes in he will select such district attorneys as will not have any difficulty, loving liberty, in securing these rights under this section. I shall feel perfectly safe when that happens.

Mr. THURMAN. Ah!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is merely verbal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [3] 5, in line 6, after the word "person," to strike out "to whom the right of suffrage is secured or guaranteed by the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States;" after the word "bribery," in line 8, to insert "force or intimidation;" and after the word "or," in line 8, to insert the word "by."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same section, line 10, after the word "from," to strike out "rented" and insert "any;" in line 11, to strike out the word "lands" and insert land;" and in line 13, after the word "family," to insert "every;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. —. That if any person shall prevent, hinder, control, or intimidate, or shall attempt to prevent, hinder, control, or intimidate, any person having the right of suffrage from exercising, or in exercising, the right of suffrage, on account of the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of such person, by means of bribery, force, or intimidation, or by threats of depriving any such person of employment or occupation, or of ejecting such person from any house, land, or other property, or by threats of refusing to renew leases or contracts for labor, or by threats of violence to himself or family, every such person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500, or be imprisoned not less than one month and not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment inserting the third section.

Mr. MERRIMON. I want at the proper time to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina will have an opportunity to offer it. The Senator from Ohio reserves the amendment known as the third section. The question will be put on concurring in the other amendments in gross.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the amendment inserting the third section.

Mr. THURMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. CLAYTON, (when Mr. MITCHELL's name was called.) I am requested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to state that on this question he is paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] The Senator from Oregon if present would vote "yea," and the Senator from Delaware "nay."

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPENCER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea." I wish to state further that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARVEY] is paired on this question with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. KELLY.] The Senator from Kansas if he were here would vote "yea," and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

Mr. CAPERTON, (when Mr. WINDOM's name was called.) The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] is paired with my colleague, [Mr. DAVIS.] If present my colleague would vote "nay," and the Senator from Minnesota "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 21, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bruce, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, and Wadleigh—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Caperton, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Hamilton, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, West, Windom, and Wright—35.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MERRIMON. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of section 3. I think that the amendment which I proposed awhile ago, and which was voted down, was a very important one. If a man were indicted in a court under this section and I were employed to defend him, I should confidently expect to get him off on the ground that it was not perjury in contemplation of law. I have provided in the amendment I am now about to offer substantially what is provided in the revised code. I have made it conform to the revised code as nearly as I could:

And if any person so making and presenting such affidavit shall willfully and contrary to his oath in that behalf state or subscribe any material matter which he does not believe to be true, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall, on conviction, be punished as in other cases of perjury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to my friend (because I do not want to take time in showing that it is not necessary) that there is difficulty about "other cases of perjury," because there are several statutes with different punishments; and we have found difficulty in other instances in leaving it in that way, and no punishment at all could be applied. If he says "subject to the penalties provided in section 5392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" I will make no objection.

Mr. MERRIMON. Let the amendment be changed in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Otherwise, it will not be of any value.

Mr. MERRIMON. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And if any person so making and presenting such affidavit shall willfully and contrary to his oath in that behalf state or subscribe any material matter which he does not believe to be true, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury and shall on conviction be liable to the penalty provided in section 5392 of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. THURMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays by all means.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON. On this bill my colleague [Mr. WRIGHT] is paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. DENNIS.] If my colleague were here he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. COOPER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAPERTON, (when Mr. DAVIS's name was called.) On this question my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] My colleague would vote "nay," and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea."

Mr. CHRISTIANCY, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN.] If present the Senator from New York would vote "nay," and with some slight doubts and misgivings I might vote "yea."

Mr. CLAYTON, (when Mr. DORSEY's name was called.) I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. DORSEY] is necessarily compelled to be absent on account of sickness. He would vote for the passage of the bill if here.

Mr. SPENCER, (when Mr. HARVEY's name was called.) I desire to state that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARVEY] is paired on this question with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. KELLY.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

Mr. CLAYTON, (when Mr. MITCHELL's name was called.) I desire to state that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] The Senator from Oregon, if he were here, would vote "yea," and the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay."

Mr. MORTON, (when his name was called.) On the passage of the bill I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. MCDONALD.] If he were here he would vote against it and I should vote for it.

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If present the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPENCER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded; and the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, and Wadleigh—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Caperton, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Ransom, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—13.

ABSENT—Messrs Barrum, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, West, Windom, and Wright—35.

So the bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill supplementary to the present statutes in aid and defense of the constitutional rights of citizens."

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3375) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES H. BLOUNT of Georgia, Mr. W. C. WHITTHORNE of Tennessee, and Mr. EUGENE HALE of Maine managers at the same on its part.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, to the bill (H. R. No. 3375) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. SARGENT, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the President pro tempore appoint the managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT, Mr. CRAGIN, and Mr. WITHERS were appointed the committee of conference on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. WHYTE. I have remained here this evening at very great inconvenience, suffering from severe sickness, in order that the Senate might be assured of a quorum. The vote was so very small on the last two or three amendments that as I was going out of the Chamber I discovered that my absence might possibly leave the Senate without a quorum, and to maintain a quorum I remained. I think it very probable that the Senate will to-morrow be without a quorum, and I therefore move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will not press that motion, because there is some business that ought to be done to-morrow.

Mr. MORTON. There are so many important measures outside of the appropriation bills that I think we ought to meet to-morrow. I hope the motion will not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.]

The motion was not agreed to.

DISTRICT TAX-BILL.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and fifty-six minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 23, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that owing to the fact that the proceedings of the House have not been fully journalized, the reading of the Journal will be postponed for the present. That has been customary heretofore in like circumstances.

CARTER & CRARY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, asking for the return of the papers in the claim of Carter & Crary, transmitted to the House January 19, 1874; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SPRINGFIELD ARMORY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an itemized account of the expenditures for the present fiscal year for the Springfield armory, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHEROKEE LANDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relating to the subject of the appraisements of certain Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LAND GRANTS, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. SCALES. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back the following resolution and move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. It involves some legal points, and the committee thought it should go to that committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and they are hereby, instructed to ascertain whether or not the railroad corporations mentioned, or any of them, under acts entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River," approved July 25, 1866; and "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific Railway and Telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas," approved July 26, 1866; and "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast," approved July 27, 1866, have issued any bonds or securities of any kind predicated upon the conditional grants of the lands of the Indians of the Indian Territory claimed by said companies under the said acts. And if it be ascertained that such bonds or securities have been issued, then it shall be the duty of said committee to ascertain the amount of the same, in what hands they are held, and whether or not the public faith of the United States has been pledged for their payment or redemption.

Be it further resolved, That the said committee in the discharge of their duties be authorized to call for persons and papers, and to report the result of their investigation to the House as early as practicable.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IDAHO CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to a question of privilege, and call up the contested-election case of Fenn vs. Bennett, from the Territory of Idaho. It will occasion no debate, as it is a unanimous report from the Committee on Elections. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution accompanying the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Resolved, That T. W. Bennett was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seat in the House of Representatives for the Forty-fourth Congress as a Delegate from the Territory of Idaho.

2. Resolved, That S. S. Fenn was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress as a Delegate from the Territory of Idaho.

Mr. HOUSE. I demand the previous question on the adoption of those resolutions.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolutions were adopted.

Mr. HOUSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Fenn is now present, and I ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. S. S. FENN appeared at the bar of the House, and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. TERRY. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following adverse reports from the Committee on Military Affairs, and to move that they be laid on the table and the reports ordered to be printed.

The memorial of Andrew Wescott and others, of Hillsdale County, Michigan, in behalf of William Butcher, who asks an honorable discharge as a soldier in the late war;

The petition and papers of Captain James F. Blount, of Beattyville, Kentucky, for relief; and

The petition of Second Lieutenant James T. Knox to be relieved from the responsibility for certain public funds alleged to have been stolen from him.

The adverse reports were laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

MINNESOTA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a question of privilege, and call up the contested-election case of E. Saint Julien Cox vs. Horace B. Strait. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Elections, and will require only a moment's time. I ask for the reading of the resolution accompanying the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Horace B. Strait was duly elected, and is entitled, to retain the seat which he now holds from the second congressional district of Minnesota.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOUTH CAROLINA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I call up the contested-election case of Lee vs. Rainey. There is a unanimous report also in this case, and I ask the Clerk to read the resolution accompanying the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Joseph H. Rainey, the sitting member, was duly elected a Representative of the Forty-fourth Congress of the United States from the first congressional district in South Carolina, and is entitled to his seat.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) on the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The pending amendment was that offered by Mr. GOODE, to insert after line 1499 the following:

For necessary repairs upon the ordnance depots, magazines, wharves, and buildings of the United States at the naval station at Norfolk, Virginia, the sum of $50,000; to be expended by the Bureau of Ordnance, under the direction of the Navy Department.

Mr. GOODE. In order to show, Mr. Chairman, the propriety and the necessity for this appropriation, I send to the Clerk's desk a communication from Commodore Jeffers, the chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, May 3, 1876.

SIR: H. R. No. 1869 providing for the repairs and preservation of the public property at Norfolk, Virginia, was introduced at my instance by Hon. Mr. GOODE.

The sum of $50,000 asked for is urgently required for the construction of shell-houses for loaded shell, a receiving-house for ammunition landed from ships in commission, and a magazine at Craney Island; repairs to shell-house at Saint Helena, and repairs of wharves at Fort Norfolk and Saint Helena.

In the present condition there is always danger of disastrous accidents, as well as present damage to valuable stores imperfectly sheltered.

I have to request that you will urge its importance upon the committee.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM N. JEFFERS,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. JOHN ROBBINS,
United States House of Representatives.

Mr. GOODE. I do not want to occupy the time of the House. If the statements contained in that paper do not convince the House, nothing that I could say would.

But there is one fact to which I desire to invite the special attention of the Committee on Appropriations. Here is an opportunity to save $25,000 to the Treasury. At Ellis Island, near New York and Jersey City, is a powder-magazine dangerous to the people in that vicinity. The Representative of the people on the New Jersey side in that neighborhood [Mr. HARDENDERGH] is desirous of having it removed, and he is assured by the proper authorities that if this sum of $50,000 is appropriated to the naval station at Norfolk, the powder may be removed from the magazine at Ellis Island, thus relieving the apprehensions of those people, and making a saving of $25,000 to the Treasury. I invoke the attention of the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations to this fact, and I am sure that acting in the interests of economy they will favor this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman does not make clear to my mind that his proposition reaches that result. I would like to hear it read again.

Mr. GOODE's amendment was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will show that $25,000 will be saved by his amendment if coupled with the proposition to vacate the powder-magazine at Ellis Island and provide for the sale of the property there, I will agree to his amendment.

Mr. GOODE. I am assured by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. HARDENBERGH,] who is not now in his seat, that he has a communication from the Bureau of Ordnance, setting forth that if this appropriation of $50,000 is made for the enlargement of the powder-magazine at Norfolk, the magazine at Ellis Island can be dispensed with. I call upon the gentleman's colleague, who is also a member of the Committee on Appropriations, to say whether I correctly represent his colleague in this matter.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I understood my colleague [Mr. HARDENBERGH] to say that if $50,000 were appropriated to the naval station at Norfolk, the powder-magazine on Ellis Island, which is now considered dangerous to Jersey City and New York, might be removed.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest that an addition be made to the gentleman's amendment authorizing the powder-magazine at Ellis Island to be vacated and the property there to be disposed of in such manner as the Secretary of War may direct.

Mr. GOODE. I agree to that.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment:

Add to the amendment these words: "And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to vacate the magazine on Ellis Island, and the public property thereon is hereby directed to be sold, if the Secretary shall so order, in such manner as he may prescribe."

Mr. COX. I would like to have that last proviso understood. I presume it is not intended to authorize the sale of the land, but only the sale of the public property there.

Mr. RANDALL. I have drawn it with great care.

Mr. COX. I desire to have it reported again.

The amendment to the amendment was again read.

Mr. COX. I concur in that; but there should be no construction made that the land itself, which is necessary for the defense of New York Harbor, should be sold.

Mr. RANDALL. I have made a reservation that nothing shall be done except at the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. COX. I would not have the authority go to the extent of selling the land.

Mr. RANDALL. We merely provide for selling the property on it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. LEAVENWORTH. I offer the following amendment:

After the amendment just adopted insert the following:
Court-house and post-office at Albany, in the State of New York, $45,000.

I ought perhaps to apologize to the committee for introducing this amendment a second time to their consideration. But when it was introduced last evening the committee was very thin, and I am very sure they did not give to it the consideration to which it was justly entitled.

It is a very remarkable fact that the old city of Albany, one of the oldest cities in the Union, the capital of the State of New York, containing 5,000,000 of people, the center of the great legal business of the State, should have existed down to this present time without anything whatever in the shape of a public building owned by the people of the United States; that we have in the city of Albany no place for a court-house; no place for a custom-house; no place for a post-office; no place for a pension office; no place for the internal-revenue department; nothing of this kind whatever; and that we are to-day paying a large amount of rent for every one of these offices.

There we are situated in the very center of the State of New York, with a population of from seventy-five to one hundred thousand, with a very large amount of legal business done there, with the finest law library, perhaps, in the Union, and the favorite spot with all the lawyers in the State to congregate together to transact their business. And yet we have nothing in the shape of a room for courts of the United States; nothing of the kind.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have appropriations in this bill here before us for places which one-half of the members on this floor cannot locate to-day. I submit how many men in this House there are who can tell where Rockland, in Maine, is located and what is the importance of a public building there; and yet it is proposed that we shall make appropriations for Rockland, in Maine, and Port Huron, Michigan, and half a dozen other places of equal unimportance, and yet the capital of a State containing 4,500,000 people has nothing in the shape of a public building and no appropriation is made whatever for such a building for the accommodation of the offices of the United States.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] yesterday, in enforcing the reasons why an appropriation ought to be made for a building at Atlanta, urged that the city of Atlanta had given $60,000 to buy a cite for the proposed building. What has the city of Albany done? She has paid $150,000 to buy a cite where the public building is to be erected, and more than that she has thrown down a building which stood upon that cite and which cost $150,000, and she did it on the assurance that this building was to be erected. She is of course losing the interest upon the $150,000 and losing also what she might have received in the renting of that building, and the Government is paying rent for a half dozen buildings for the very purposes for which this building ought to be erected.

Mr. PAGE. I yield my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LEAVENWORTH.]

Mr. LEAVENWORTH. I merely wish to call the attention of the committee to some little coincidences in connection with this bill which seem to me rather remarkable. It is very astonishing to me that out of twenty-one appropriations made for public buildings in this bill, eleven, a majority of the whole number, are made for States to which the members of the Committee on Appropriations belong. It is rather remarkable that the other twenty-seven States of the Union should not one of them have an appropriation whatever for this purpose, and that the eleven States to which the members of the Committee on Appropriations belong should get eleven of these appropriations.

It is another remarkable coincidence that those eleven States have nearly two-thirds of the entire amount appropriated by the bill. I do not wish to make any serious charge against the members of the Committee on Appropriations, I do not object to one single appropriation made, but I do insist that if the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations from Pennsylvania had represented the district represented by my friend from Albany, [Mr. ADAMS,] he would not have brought in the bill here with an appropriation of $350,000 for the city of Philadelphia and not one dollar for the old city of Albany.

Mr. HOLMAN. This subject of public buildings is always a subject of interest to the House; but I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to this fact, that, in consequence of having so large a number of public buildings on our hands in progress of construction, it was deemed proper at the last session of Congress as well as at the present session that those public buildings should be completed, or substantially so, before new works were entered upon. That is the inevitable result of the policy adopted a few years ago of entering on the construction of a large number of buildings at the same time. A large amount of appropriations is necessary to prevent the actual decay of the materials with which these buildings are being constructed. It seemed to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, both of the House and of the Senate, highly impolitic that new works should be entered on until those on our hands were substantially completed, even though it involved a larger drain on the Treasury than the country ought to bear at this time.

One other word, Mr. Chairman. Although I regard the building at Albany as of the first importance, and feel certain that the construction of a building at Albany ought to be entered on, still I think that we should not undertake that work until the resources of the country will admit of it.

A word on another subject. In my own State there is a building of this kind in progress of construction. It is in the southwestern portion of the State, while my district is in the southeastern portion of the State. I have never had the honor of living in Evansville, and I have never seen the rising structure. I thought that an appropriation of $25,000 was all that should be asked for for that building and the committee fixed the amount at $25,000. I think that is as large an appropriation as should have been made. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department came before the Committee on Appropriations and urged with great earnestness the importance of an appropriation of $50,000 for the buildings at Parkersburgh and Evansville upon the ground that those buildings are in such a condition as to require an appropriation of that amount.

It was upon his urgent representations that this appropriation was increased to $50,000. He stated to the committee that when the contracts now existing should be exhausted there would be but about $6,000 remaining of the fund, which, added to $25,000, would be comparatively unavailable, and it was therefore desirable that $50,000 should be appropriated. I will say this, having noticed the discussion last evening—and I am very sorry that some gentleman did not mention the fact, for it was known to many on this floor——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will take the floor, and yield my time to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman answer one question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to finish my sentence. I regret that some gentleman did not mention the fact, because it must have been known to quite a number of gentlemen on this floor that I was absent last evening by order of the House as one of its conferees on one of the most important bills of the House, the post-office appropriation bill. It was for that reason, and for that only, that I was justifiable in being absent from my seat. Had I been present, I would have said without a moment's hesitation that it was a question for the gentlemen upon this floor, having no personal interest in the subject-matter, to determine whether the appropriation for this purpose should be $25,000 or $50,000 or nothing at all; and I should have been entirely content with either disposition of the question.

This is a subject in which my own constituents have the same interest exactly, and no more, that they have in the erection of a building in New York, or in Albany, or anywhere else. It is a matter of total indifference to them and their Representative whether no sum at all be appropriated or the sum of $25,000 or $50,000. The sum of $50,000 was fixed at the suggestion and special request of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman now answer a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Did not the Supervising Architect of the Treasury appear before the Committee on Appropriations and make the same urgent appeal for all the other public buildings that he did for the public building in Evansville, Indiana?

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be stating it rather too strongly.

Mr. PAGE. Did he not make the same urgent request with regard to other public buildings?

Mr. HOLMAN. He did with regard to the public building at Parkersburgh, and the committee accordingly made an appropriation of $50,000 for that building. I ought to say, in justice to the Supervising Architect, that he desired ample appropriations for these public buildings. The committee suggested to him that the public service would not justify a heavier appropriation than $2,000,000 this year for this purpose and requested him to indicate the amount required for the smaller buildings; and of course it will be understood that we cannot act on our own judgment alone in this matter. We requested him to indicate the lowest amount that he could get along with on the smaller buildings, so that, after disposing of that question, we might determine what could be appropriated for the great buildings at Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, and Chicago.

The Supervising Architect of the Treasury, as well as the Secretary of the Treasury, thought it inadvisable to make a new estimate, and therefore none was made; and we acted upon the verbal statements of the Supervising Architect before the committee as to the more pressing cases.

I wish to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEAVENWORTH] that he judges the Committee on Appropriations very wrongfully if he supposes that any member of that committee would allow local considerations to influence his judgment in such a matter. I would myself greatly prefer to reduce the amounts of these appropriations. I am as anxious as any one can be to see these buildings constructed in such a manner as to secure the highest possible degree of economy. I would, therefore, be glad to make all the appropriations that the Treasury will bear; and $2,000,000 is the outside sum, I think, that we are justified in appropriating this year for this purpose.

I am heartily opposed to the great, colossal granite buildings that the Government is now erecting at certain commercial points in this country at the expense of the industry of the country. I think it is unjustifiable; I think the sum of money being expended is not justifiable, and that these buildings should not have been entered upon. None of them have been entered upon by my vote to the extent of the appropriations contemplated. I think that plain, solid buildings, suitable structures, such as are necessary for the wants of the present time and of the future, plain, simple structures, adapted in their style of architecture to the genius and character of our Government, are all that are required; not these great, massive structures, where the effort seems to have been to lavish money without regard to the burdens already imposed upon the labor of the country.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. LEAVENWORTH; and upon a division, there were—ayes 64, noes 77; no quorum voting.

Mr. ADAMS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LEAVENWORTH and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THORNBURGH. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has not withdrawn his formal amendment, are we now voting on that amendment or upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LEAVENWORTH?]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to withdraw his merely formal amendment, according to the universal practice of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course I withdrew my formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LEAVENWORTH,] upon which tellers have been ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 75, noes 81.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court-house and post-office, New York: For completion of building, $250,000.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. It is not expected, Mr. Chairman, that a worn-out member of the hard-worked Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures should feel justified in speaking here two days in succession; and I do not rise to occupy the attention of members, but to ask a great favor of the committee. It was generally understood on Saturday last that the Committee on Banking and Currency would demonstrate here on Monday morning, according to the newspapers, in order to furnish a plank for the Saint Louis convention. I got up a little earlier than usual on that day, in order to load a little gun, anticipating that I should have a fair shot at that committee during the day. I brought my gun here; I have carried it in my pocket ever since; but I now learn to my regret that the committee have given up the platform job.

Now, I do not like to give it up; and I want to ask unanimous consent that I may put my little "plank" for Saint Louis in the published proceedings of to-day. It is a very narrow one; it will not occupy more than a page, or a little more than that, and as I have never asked any similar favor of the committee or the House before, and as I do not intend to rise to my feet again during this session unless absolutely compelled to, [laughter,] I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make an appeal that gentlemen who want to talk should talk directly upon the paragraph under consideration. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] wants to make a platform for Saint Louis, let him come and go there along with me.

Mr. YOUNG. I move that the gentleman from New York be allowed to print his "plank" in the RECORD, on the condition he names, that he shall not speak any more. [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the leave asked by Mr. CHITTENDEN was granted. The remarks are as follows:

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee to a slip which I have cut from a newspaper, which I also appropriate without hesitation, because its author showed me his manuscript before it went to the printer:

There were in circulation on January 14, 1875:
Of national-bank notes	$351, 861, 450
Of greenbacks	382, 000, 000
Making a total circulation of	733, 861, 450
There were in circulation June 1, 1876:
Of national-bank notes	334, 567, 440
Making a total of	704, 691, 108

This is a reduction of the volume of currency of only $29,170,342 during a period of sixteen and a half months, or at the rate of $1,767,838 per month. This is, in fact, when it is compared with the contraction in business, a practical expansion of the currency, for we have more currency now for the volume of business done than before the passage of the act.

It will be observed that the total actual contraction of the currency from the date of the passage of the resumption act until the 1st day of June, 1876, was, in round numbers, $29,200,000, or a fraction less than 4 per cent. of the volume in circulation on the passage of the act. Meanwhile the relative contraction in the volume of business has been enormously greater, the result being that we have to-day a more inflated and redundant currency than we have had at any previous time.

Here, Mr. Chairman, is a nut of solid truth, which I would challenge the stoutest champion of legal tender to crack on the spot if I had a single moment of time to spare.

Our whole country is suffering from commercial paralysis, loss of confidence. Darkness still covers great transactions of the past; thick darkness broods over the future; old industries languish and die; new industries are rarely and but feebly organized; capital is timid and not easily conciliated; it will not budge.

If you have in your pocket, Mr. Speaker, a promise to pay made by your nearest neighbor, who is known by the whole world to abound in wealth, a Mr. Belmont for example, but who nevertheless has for ten years neglected his promise, you yourself have by this time lost confidence in him to this extent, that you do not know or pretend to know what he will do in the future. The significance of your loss of confidence depends upon the number of persons moving in the same circle with you, whose capital is also invested in the broken promises of your unfaithful neighbor. If your next neighbor's neighbor, and your next neighbor's neighbor's neighbor, from one end of the land to the other, are full of the same broken promises, then your doubts and loss of confidence becomes chronic and universal, and can only be cured in one way. Pay that thou owest! It is proposed to repeal the resumption act. Is that the way to restore confidence? O, no; be not deceived. If you have power to repeal that act; if you carry it through this House, the other House, and the White House, before your bill is signed and the ink dry, every dollar of the funded debt of the United States wherever held will feel a tremendous shock, and those who vote for repeal will feel it too. Every gentleman at either end of the Capitol who advocates exclusive legal-tender currency will vote for repeal; every one who would recall the shining silver tokens now so joyfully seized upon as substitutes for the costly, unclean, and worn out fractional currency will vote for repeal.

Outside of Congress every bankrupt speculator and every repudiator in the country will applaud the repeal of the resumption act. Can it be possible that a measure of reaction thus supported will restore confidence to capital? Will the indefinite and unconditional postponement of three hundred and seventy millions of honest debt already twelve years past due, and which can be paid now as well as not, restore confidence to capital? Will you plunge a barrel of powder into your stove to put out your fire?

We are to remember that capital owns every dollar of this legal-tender in sums of $1 and upward. Some people sneer at capital. It were equally wise and just to sneer at labor; but nobody dare do that in this country. Capital is no more dependent on labor than labor on capital. Both should be treated here and everywhere with equal respect. How, then, shall we restore confidence? The marvel of our case is that the true and only way is so simple, narrow, and easy that we pass it in search of foolish, mysterious, and untried methods. All that we need do is restore the original funding feature of the legal-tender act.

Allow the owners of legal-tender, in small sums or large, to convert their holdings into bonds bearing interest at 4 per cent, having forty or fifty years to run, and before the growing cotton crop is all marketed you will have gold and greenbacks so nearly of equal value that your tariff will be practically reduced nearly or quite 10 per cent., and the fluctuations in the currency will thereafter be so slight that capital and enterprising people will go earnestly about their business together as unconcerned as the people of France are about the particular day when the banks shall resume specie payments.

I suggest that this is all there is of the case. Let the Government of this great people be honest, and all else may be safely left to time, to their resources, intelligence, and pluck.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3375) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Custom-house and post-office, Port Huron, Michigan: For completion of the building, $26,000.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by adding to the clause just read, "for furnishing the building $25,000." The appropriation for this building at Port Huron, designed for the custom-house, post-office, bonded warehouse, court-rooms, &c, was limited to $200,000. The $26,000 named in the bill finishes the appropriation, and will complete the building—a very neat, plain, simple structure, large enough to accommodate the business of that place at present and for years to come, and which has been erected as economically and prudently, I will venture to say, as any other building in the United States.

There was an estimate of $25,000 for furnishing this building and $20,000 for grading and fencing. The committee have inserted the appropriation of $26,000 for completing the building. If I am correctly informed, that building may be all finished by October or November of this year. Early this fall it will all be ready for occupation as court-rooms, post-office, custom-house, bonded warehouse, and all the offices which were intended to be in that building.

Now, if there can be any appropriation at this time for the necessary furniture, the building can be occupied immediately upon its completion, thereby saving for at least a year the rents now paid for other buildings, amounting to one-half at least of this appropriation. Inasmuch, therefore, as the original amount appropriated for this building was small and has been economically and faithfully expended, as every one knows who has examined the matter, and as there is no place in the city of Port Huron where the records of the custom-house are safe for a single day from damage by fire, I ask this Committee of the Whole not to make now the appropriation for fencing and grading, (which can be postponed till another year,) but to make this appropriation for furnishing the building, so that the Government offices may be removed into it this fall, and one year's rent saved, to say nothing of the increased accommodation of the public business.

In view of the present feeling of the House I would not have made this motion but for the fact that the small appropriation already made has been so economically expended, as is known to every old member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and as appears from the report of the Supervising Architect. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury laid before the committee when the appropriation was granted shows that such a building was absolutely necessary for the business of the Government at that port.

I will not enlarge upon this question. If I had not been absent at New Orleans by order of this House, and thereby been deprived of any opportunity to appear before the Committee on Appropriations when this paragraph was under consideration, I think I could have satisfied them that an appropriation for furnishing this building should have been inserted in the bill as recommended in the Book of Estimates. I do not ask that the appropriation for grading and fencing and doing outside work be made this year.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to correct the gentleman in one particular. He says that if he had been here he probably would have been enabled to secure a further appropriation. I want to say that Michigan had a representative in the committee, and no one could have made more strenuous efforts in her behalf than the gentleman upon the committee from that State. [Mr. WALDRON.] I expected that when the gentleman [Mr. CONGER] returned he would come to me, and, in view of the fact that we had granted an appropriation sufficient to complete this building, would recognize the truth that the absent are not always forgotten.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman will remember that on my return I did express my gratification that the sum for finishing the building had been put in the bill. I am under great obligations to my colleague [Mr. WALDRON] for calling the attention of the committee to the matter.

Mr. RANDALL. Your interests were better looked after perhaps by reason of your absence than possibly they would have been if you had been present.

Mr. CONGER. It is not the first time in my life that I have found my friends able to accomplish my desires better than I could myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has not expired.

Mr. CONGER. Very well, then I wish to say a word more.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a proposition to the gentleman, and it will only take a moment. The motive for completing and furnishing this building is this. It only cost $115,000. It is one of the most economical we have built of late years, and is sufficient in every respect, and will be for very many years to come. It is a plain, simple structure, such as should be erected. The amount estimated for the completion of the building is $115,000. That is covered by the appropriation. I do not believe from the statement all of that sum of money will be required. The estimate for furnishing the building is $25,000, and greatly beyond any appropriation of that kind we have made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has now expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will take the floor then in my own right. I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan to amend his proposition so as to appropriate $36,000 for the completion and furnishing of the building.

Mr. CONGER. I will meet the committee in the same spirit in which they meet me, and I will modify it to $15,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer as a substitute for the paragraph an appropriation of $36,000 for the completion of the building and the furnishing of the same. We are quite confident from inquiry that this will be sufficient.

Mr. CONGER. Let me state to the gentleman that when the change is made from wooden to iron girders, which it was found necessary to do, the whole appropriation will be needed.

Mr. RANDALL. We determined that these smaller buildings should not cost, so far as furnishing them is concerned, more than $10,000. That is the design of the committee. This is a large sum of money for furnishing that building.

Mr. CONGER. Ten thousand thousand dollars can be used in those parts most required for use, and perhaps may answer the present necessity.

Mr. RANDALL. If you are going to put it in, then $10,000 should be the limit of expense for furnishing that building.

Mr. CONGER. I am not prepared to say that it will be sufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. It ought to be sufficient.

Mr. CONGER. The United States court-room, post-office, custom-house, bonded warehouse, and all the other smaller offices are in the same building, and it will be hardly possible that $10,000 will furnish all those rooms with proper furniture, even of the most economical kind. I will modify my motion to $15,000, and I hope the committee will agree to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following substitute——

Mr. CONGER. In order that I may not seem to be urgent beyond what is reasonable, I accept the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move the following substitute:

The Clerk read as follows:

For completion of the building, and furnishing the same, $36,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs and preservation of public buildings: For repairs and preservation of public buildings under control of the Treasury Department, $100,000.

Mr. GOODE. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the repair and erection of barracks at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, sufficient to accommodate the troops stationed there, the sum of $100,000.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the ear of the House for a moment, I hope to be able to show this amendment ought to be adopted. The barracks in use now at Fortress Monroe were constructed in 1862 out of unseasoned timber. They were built for temporary purposes only, and they are now in a very worn out and dilapidated condition. They are nothing more or less than old tumble-down rookeries. The safety of the troops stationed at Fortress Monroe requires these barracks shall be repaired and new barracks shall be built. This proposition has been urgently recommended by the Secretary of War, by General W. F. Barry, commandant at the post, by the surgeon at the post, by the Quartermaster-General of the Army, by an intelligent board of Army engineers who have been sent there to make an examination, and by Major-General Hancock, the commander of that division.

In addition to all this testimony, which, it seems to me, ought to be sufficient to command the respect and convince the judgment of this committee, the matter has been referred to the Military Committee of this House, and they have unanimously indorsed the recommendation. What more can it be necessary to say? What valid objection can be urged to this appropriation? If this committee will not believe the Secretary of War, if they will not believe General Barry, if they will not believe a board of intelligent Army engineers, if they will not believe the surgeon of the post, if they will not believe Major-General Hancock, that Chevalier Bayard, the pride of the Army, it seems to me they are determined not to be convinced. If they do not believe Moses and the prophets, they would not believe though one should rise from the dead.

A MEMBER. And Hancock will be the next President.

Mr. GOODE. I accept the amendment. Hancock will be the next President.

Now, sir, I know it is the purpose of this House to practice the most rigid economy, and to insist upon a reduction of expenditures in all the departments of the Government. It is a laudable purpose. I sympathize with the committee most heartily and cordially. But I submit that in this matter we ought to exercise an intelligent discrimination, and that we cannot consistently with public duty turn a deaf ear to representations like these which come from such respectable and reliable sources.

Knowing General Barry as I do, and knowing him to be a high-toned gentleman, an intelligent, faithful, and conscientious officer, I feel well assured that he would not have recommended this appropriation in such urgent terms as he has done if it had not been imperatively demanded by the needs of the public service. I trust that the amendment will be adopted, and that the committee will not wait until these old shanties, miscalled barracks, have tumbled down upon the heads of the occupants.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee gave full weight to all the recommendations to which allusion has been made, and were disposed to agree to recommend this appropriation. But on reflection we considered that this public work was one that could remain over for a year without any harm to any one; and without inconvenience or suffering to those who occupy the barracks. I therefore hope the committee will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to say to the eloquent gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] that there are hundreds of cases just as strongly indorsed as the one to which he alludes which he has declined to support, and that he has stood up time and again with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and voted with him for these reductions.

Mr. GOODE. Not always. I have exercised a fair and intelligent discrimination.

Mr. FOSTER. On these questions of retrenchment the gentleman is in the position of the watch-dog that does not bark when the family is around.

The question being taken on Mr. GOODE's amendment, there were ayes 38, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

Lighting and buoyage of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers: For maintenance of lights on the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri Rivers, and such buoys as may be necessary, $120,000.

Mr. STONE. I offer the following amendment:

In line 553 strike out $120,000 and insert $150,000.

The sundry civil appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1875, directed that lights and buoys should be placed on the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers, and appropriated $75,000 for that purpose. The sundry civil appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1876, appropriated $100,000 for that purpose. I learn from the officer in charge that that appropriation gave out on the 1st May, 1876, and an act passed during this session of Congress transferred from another fund a certain amount in order that these lights may be maintained. I know that for want of a sufficient appropriation these lights on the Mississippi River had to be extinguished. I therefore ask that the amount be increased from $120,000 to $150,000. It is evident from statistics that the loss of life and property since the establishment of these lights has been 75 per cent. less than in preceding years. I therefore ask on behalf of the residents of the Mississippi Valley that the amount be increased.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a single word. The policy of establishing light-houses on these western rivers——

Mr. STONE. Not light-houses.

Mr. HOLMAN. The policy of establishing lights on these western rivers was entered on a few years ago. The amount appropriated in the first place was $75,000. Last year the amount appropriated was $100,000. There was a deficiency this year of $18,000; so that we appropriated altogether for the service of this fiscal year $118,000. It was thought that $120,000 would be sufficient for the coming fiscal year. We believed that by this appropriation gradually lights would be established at all necessary points and that the proper situations for them would be better understood. Here and there lights have been established which have not been found to be of value. I think if we appropriate for the coming fiscal year the amount of the appropriation in the general bill and the deficiency for this year it would be found to be sufficient. In view of the appropriations made already, I do not think that we of the West should insist on larger appropriations.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word. This is a matter which is very necessary for the commerce upon our western rivers. I find that in this appropriation bill the committee have allowed all that is asked for for keeping up our light-houses on the sea-coast and upon the lakes. Commodore Walker, who is Superintendent of the Light-House Board, informed the committee that this service would require an appropriation of $150,000 a year, and I trust that that appropriation will be given.

These lights are being extended every year. We have five thousand miles of river navigation, and there is very little expense to the Government, for the pay of the men who attend to the lighting of these beacons is only $12 a month. There are none of the expenses attending light-houses and of light-house-keepers; these are merely beacon-lights suspended on poles. If you keep up your light-house system on the sea-coast and on the lakes, I think it is nothing but right and just that you should keep up this system of lighting on the western rivers where more than double the commerce floats than floats on the ocean. The Saint Louis packet companies have stated to me that this appropriation is more beneficial to them than all the expenditures made in the improvement of the rivers. I think that by adopting this course and keeping up this system of lighting we shall save money to the Treasury by reducing the expenditure needed hereafter for the improvement of the rivers.

Mr. BLOUNT. Did I understand the gentleman from Missouri to say that the Committee on Appropriations had allowed all that was asked for to keep up the light-house system on the sea-coast and on the lakes?

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. They did not make any appropriations for new light-houses, but they appropriated for all the oil and all the material necessary for keeping up the light-houses that now exist. It is economy to appropriate sufficient money to keep up these lights and to extend the system. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is aware that Commodore Walker says that this amount is necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. It is true that the committee did not cut down anything in reference to what is known as the light-house establishment, except as to the repairs of light-houses, where they cut off $20,000, reducing it from $320,000 to $300,000. For the lighting of the Ohio, Missouri, and Mississippi Rivers, there was last year an appropriation of $100,000, and the year before of $50,000. We propose now to make the appropriation $125,000, and the fact is that we increase the appropriation $25,000 for lights upon these rivers, and we think that that amount is adequate.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will remember that this system was adopted only two years ago. Fifty thousand dollars was then appropriated merely to test the experiment of the usefulness of the system. The result was so satisfactory that last year Congress, without any hesitation, gave $100,000. I think the experiment has proven so useful that the amount should be increased to $150,000 this year.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe the Light-House Board has gone as far as it intends to go in reference to the lighting of these rivers.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is manifest that this system of putting rivers under the charge of the engineers of the Army and the lighting of the rivers under the Light-House Board very largely increases the expenses of the Government. I was satisfied that by changing the system, which I hope will be done at the next session of Congress, we can very largely reduce the expense of carrying on the service.

Mr. CONGER. I have this to say in addition to what I said before: The system of having lights on the Mississippi River saves the detention of a day or two of vessels bearing freight and passengers down the river and it tends greatly to cheapen transportation for the whole West and to lessen the insurance on vessels and cargoes, and I think that an addition of $30,000 to this appropriation which amounts only to $120,000 will be saved in one month in the year in the lessening of insurance and keeping the vessels from running upon shoals and getting aground.

Mr. CONGER. Allow me to add that long ago upon the whole banks of the Hudson River lights were established at every point by the General Government and it is only lately that the people of the West have demanded the same facilities for the greatest of all our rivers.

Mr. STONE. Allow me to say that the West does not demand light-houses, but merely beacon-lights. I understand from the packet companies that they are willing to furnish the beacons if the Government will furnish the oil. I understand that the amount required is $150,000.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. STONE; and on a division there were—ayes 52, noes 73; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. STONE and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 65.

No further count being demanded, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the right to call for the yeas and nays in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have that right.

Mr. STONE. I move now to amend in line 550 by inserting after the word "Missouri" the word "Illinois," and in line 552 by inserting after the word "Ohio" the word "Illinois;" so that it will read:

Lighting and buoyage of the Mississippi, Missouri, Illinois, and Ohio Rivers: For maintenance of lights on the Mississippi, Ohio, Illinois, and Missouri Rivers, and such buoys as may be necessary, $120,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not include the Wabash and the Green Rivers?

Mr. STONE. I do not care how many you include, so long as they are navigable streams.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no estimate for any such purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no estimate whatever for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no law authorizing such an appropriation, unless there is some general provision of law which will cover it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] rise to make a point of order on this amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. STONE?]

Mr. HOLMAN. I rose to state that there is no estimate for it, which I suppose is the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman says he rose to make the point of order on the amendment——

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist upon it. But I would ask why we should single out one river in this way. There are a great many rivers tributary to the Mississippi which are not mentioned by the gentleman, the Tennessee, the Green, the Wabash, the Arkansas, the White, and other rivers. There is no reason for singling out a comparatively unimportant river in this way.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. STONE; and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following.

Light-houses, beacons, and fog-signals:

For boat-landings at light-stations on the coast of Maine, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts, $10,000.

For site for a light-house and buoy-depot at Little Hog Island, Portland Harbor, Maine, the purchase thereof being hereby authorized, $3,000.

Mr. JACOBS. I desire to offer an amendment at this point.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the gentleman allow the Clerk to read all the paragraphs relating to light-houses, and then he can offer his amendment.

Mr. JACOBS. Very well; I will do so.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For establishing temporary lights along the line of the dredged channel, Manmee Bay, Ohio, $4,000, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation for two day-beacons in said bay made by the act of June 23, 1874, which is hereby continued and made available for this purpose.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] it was agreed to unanimously by the committee that all the paragraphs relating to light-houses should first be read, after which amendments to any of the paragraphs relating to that subject will be in order. The gentleman from Michigan will lose none of his rights by pursuing that course.

Mr. CONGER. With that understanding I will withhold my amendment for the present.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the portion of the bill relating to light-houses.

Mr. JACOBS. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the point I before indicated, after the second paragraph, under the heading "Light-houses, beacons, and fog-signals." I move to insert as an additional paragraph the following:

For the purchase of a site and the erection of a fog-bell on Point Wilson, Washington Territory, $3,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I will reserve any point of order upon this amendment until the gentleman from Washington Territory has made his remarks.

Mr. JACOBS. The Legislature of Washington Territory memorialized Congress for the purchase of this site and the erection of a fog-bell at this point. The memorial of the Legislature was also sustained by the ship-owners and the merchants of that section of the country. The amendment which I propose has also received the sanction of the Light-House Board. Early in this session I introduced a bill making an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the erection of a fog-signal at Point Wilson, Washington Territory. That bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce and received the unanimous approval of that committee. The bill was then reported by the committee back to the House and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I suppose it is by mistake or oversight that it is not incorporated in this bill.

As to the necessity of this appropriation, allow me to state that Point Wilson is at the mouth of Puget Sound, and in the fall of the year the fog is very dense there, and the forests being on fire the smoke is also very dense, and a large number of lives have been lost as well as a large amount of property destroyed for the want simply of a fog-signal at the place indicated by my amendment.

I hope that the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee of the Whole will grant us this small appropriation for this purpose, recommended as it is by the Committee on Commerce of this House, by the Light-House Board, and by the ship-owners and merchants in that section of the country. The commerce of Puget Sound is far more extensive than many gentlemen here may suppose. From seventeen to eighteen hundred vessels pass this point every year, and the number is fast increasing. The interests of commerce as well as the preservation of the lives and the property of the people of that section of the country demand that this small appropriation be made.

Mr. RANDALL. This appropriation is not sanctioned by any law, and, so far as I am informed, is not estimated for in the Book of Estimates. I therefore make the point of order on the amendment that it is not in pursuance of existing law.

Mr. CONGER. The only course by which such measures as this are ever made in order in this House is to refer them to the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Commerce consider them, and if they favor the propositions they report them back favorably to the House, recommending the appropriations, and they are then sent to the Committee on Appropriations. That is the usual course, in fact the only way in which these things have been made in order. That course has been pursued in this case. If the ruling of the Chair shall be that the action of the House itself, by one of its standing committees recommending this appropriation, is not as strong as the estimate of an engineer, then the House heretofore has entirely mistaken its functions. I make these remarks upon the point of order. This is the usual course by which these measures are properly brought before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not intend to say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. JACOBS] is before the Committee of the Whole by order of the House?

Mr. CONGER. No; but I intend to say that this House has referred the subject to one of its committees, and that committee has had the usual consultation with the Light-House Board and obtained the recommennation of that board, which is equivalent to an estimate in the Book of Estimates. The Committee on Commerce also has reported the appropriation favorably to this House, and by order of the House that report has been sent to the Committee on Appropriations, the House having recognized the desirability of the appropriation. The point I make is that that course having been taken gives the same validity, by the prior action of the House, to the appropriation that would be given to it by an estimate from the Secretary of the Treasury in the Book of Estimates. This is the only way in which these things are brought before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair would much prefer that such propositions as these should be submitted to the vote of the Committee of the Whole. But the point of order having been raised that this amendment proposes an appropriation of money not authorized by existing law and for which no estimate has been made——

Mr. CONGER. An estimate has been made by the Committee on Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is speaking of the existing law. This amendment proposes an appropriation of money not authorized by existing law and for which no estimate has been made. It certainly does not tend to retrench expenditures, and hence, in the judgment of the Chair, it is not in order, and the point of order is sustained. So far as the Chair is informed, there is no law upon the subject under or in pursuance of which the appropriation is asked. The point of order being made, the Chair is of opinion that it must be sustained, and that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to submit an amendment to the following clause:

To complete the construction of the light-house on Cross Ledge Shoal, Delaware Bay, $25,000.

I move to amend by adding to this clause the following:

The Light-House Board is hereby authorized to place the light-ships formerly at Cross-Ledge Shoal upon Fourteen-Foot Bank, near the lower end of Joe Flogger Shoal.

I call the attention of my colleague, [Mr. RANDALL,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to the fact that this amendment simply authorizes the Light-House Board to use a light-ship at a place where it is very much needed. The light-house at Cross-Ledge Shoal being so far advanced toward completion that the light is on it, it is very desirable that there should be a light-ship on Fourteen-Foot Bank. From the mere mooring of the ships on this shoal I should think no additional expense will be incurred; and, as a light-ship there will serve a very good purpose, I presume there will be no objection to the amendment on the part of the Committee on Appropriations. We have already made an appropriation for the incidental expenses of light-ships.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman state that this will cost nothing?

Mr. O'NEILL. My impression is that there will be no increased expense; whatever cost there may be will be covered by the provision of the paragraph in relation to incidental expenses of light-ships.

The necessity for this provision the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations must very well understand. In the Delaware Bay, some seven or eight miles below the Cross Ledge light-house, there is a shoal which prevents vessels coming in at night. Frequently steamers bound to the port of Philadelphia have to lie by and lose a night when, with fair weather and by the aid of this light-ship to guide them, they could go to Philadelphia without interruption. My idea is not to incur any considerable expense by this amendment. The proposition is simply to have a light-ship moored where it is absolutely needed.

Mr. RANDALL. My colleague will recollect that a light-ship was at Cross Ledge when we authorized the light-house. The original estimate for Cross Ledge light was $125,000, $75,000 of which has already been appropriated; and in this bill we appropriate $25,000 more, making $100,000, $25,000 less than the original estimate; and I believe it will be completed for $100,000 instead of the original estimate, $125,000. The light-ship which it is proposed to put there is now being used where?

Mr. O'NEILL. It is not being used at all, the light-house at Cross Ledge Shoal being now so far completed that there is a light on it, and has been for some months.

Mr. RANDALL. What has become of the light-ship?

Mr. O'NEILL. It is at Wilmington, Delaware, I believe, or laid up somewhere.

Mr. RANDALL. Then my colleague does not ask any additional appropriation beyond the $25,000 given in the bill?

Mr. O'NEILL. Not at all; my amendment proposes simply to give authority to the Light-House Board to put a light-ship at this point where it will be so useful.

Mr. RANDALL. That must involve expense.

Mr. O'NEILL. It may cost a few hundred dollars; but the expense, I imagine, will come out of the appropriation made in this bill for the incidental expenses of light-ships. The second paragraph under the head of "Light-House Establishment" is this:

Expenses of light-vessels: For seamen's wages, rations, repairs, salaries, supplies, and incidental expenses of twenty-three light-ships and seven relief light-vessels, $230,000.

Mr. RANDALL. If my colleague will add to the amendment a clause providing that the expenses of keeping up this light-ship shall be paid for out of the appropriation to which he refers, I have no objection.

Mr. O'NEILL. I will add that, of course. Allow me to read three lines from the report of the Light-House Board:

It is suggested that when the light is established at Cross Ledge, authority be given the Light-House Board to place a light-ship near the lower end of Joe Flogger Shoal.

As the light is already temporarily arranged at Cross Ledge, I think it would be well to comply with this suggestion.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to the amendment, if a clause be added that it shall involve no additional expense.

Mr. O'NEILL. I modify my amendment by adding the following:

Any expense incurred to come out of the appropriation in this bill under the head of expenses of light-vessels.

The amendment of Mr. O'NEILL, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph last read the following:

That the appropriation heretofore made for a light-house at Port Austin, Michigan, may be expended in commencing the construction of the proposed light-house out on the reef, instead of on the shore: Provided, That the total estimate for its completion shall not exceed $85,000.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee to my statement. An appropriation two or three years ago of $20,000 was made for the light-house at Port Austin, at the junction of Saginaw Bay with the lake, a point at which there have been always more wrecks and more lives lost than at any other point on Lake Huron. Since that time, in a great storm a year or two ago, several vessels were thrown on the rocky reef which runs out from the main land a mile off into the lake, and it was found the light-house on shore would not protect the navigation of the upper lakes, a navigation embracing the passage of some 36,000 vessels each year by this point; that it would not protect them from the danger of that reef. The Light-House Board therefore withheld the application of this money.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order on this amendment.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is too late. But I do not care anything about the point of order. I commenced arguing this question and spoke some time, which shuts out the point of order. Discussion had already commenced; but the point of order could not lie at any rate, I think.

I say, Mr. Chairman, since the appropriation was made for this light-house it has become apparent to the Light-House Board and those interested in the navigation of the lake that the light-house should be out on the rocky reef a mile from shore, and they have withheld the commencement of the light-house until Congress authorized this change to be made. The recommendation of the Light-House Board and of the officer for that district is very strong that it should be placed out on the reef. It will cost some considerable more money to place it out on that reef than to place it upon the shore, but it will be of infinitely greater benefit to commerce.

In my amendment I have authorized the expenditure of $20,000 in the commencement of the construction on that reef, but, so it should not cost beyond a certain amount, I have limited the plans for that building to $85,000. That will probably be some $25,000 more than it would cost on the land, except that on shore there would be some eight hundred or a thousand dollars for the site of the building. I do not ask that an additional appropriation be made, but that the Light-House Board shall be authorized to make this change, limiting the expense of the final completion of the building to $85,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan whether there is not now an appropriation for Port Austin?

Mr. CONGER. Yes; $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Why has not any of it been used?

Mr. CONGER. Because it was found in a great storm there were six or seven vessels piled up on a rocky reef a mile out in the lake. The ship-owners of the lake petitioned the Light-House Board to change the location of the light-house inland to that rocky reef. The Light-House Board has recommended that it should be placed there.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not suppose there was anything of this sort ever forgotten in the State of Michigan. This involves an expenditure in fact of $85,000 for a new light-house.

Mr. CONGER. I think it will involve an expenditure of $20,000 more than the light-house on shore—I mean for the superstructure on the reef. The reef is a great rocky formation between four and five feet above the surface of the water.

Mr. RANDALL. We received no notice of this. Mr. Walker, from the board, if this were absolutely essential, would have apprised us of the fact. I do not recollect to have received any word from him on the subject.

Mr. CONGER. I sent to the committee a letter from the Light-House Board recommending this change.

Mr. RANDALL. He appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and I am positive this is not one of those he recommended. There were three estimates for various purposes of this character from Michigan, and all three were postponed because he said they were not absolutely essential for this year.

Mr. CONGER. I think there were some others I should like to see built. I would not urge them at this time, and I only ask this appropriation, which was granted almost unanimously three years ago, may be used this year in the construction of this building. It is not in that estimate, but in the one three years ago.

Mr. RANDALL. Those in the estimates are for Port Salinac, McGuepin's Point, and Pére Marquette.

Mr. CONGER. There has been a recommendation of $40,000 for Port Salinac light-house. I do not urge that now. When the harbor of refuge is completed it will be near Port Salinac. I am willing that should go over for another year. But I say to the gentleman and I say to this House, as it is a point I am as familiar with as any gentleman on the floor, as my practice carries me by it every month during the season, and therefore I make the statement advisedly when I say it is the most important light-house on the lake for the protection of the national commerce. It has no local importance.

Mr. RANDALL. The difficulty in my mind is that this is starting a new light-house.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; the appropriation of $20,000 has been made for three years.

Mr. RANDALL. For the light-house on the shore?

Mr. CONGER. The Light-House Board did not commence the construction there because of the protest of over one hundred of the ship-owners from Buffalo to Chicago on the lake asking that it be placed out in the lake upon a rocky reef.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, if it was three years ago, it has lapsed and gone into the Treasury.

Mr. CONGER. It has not. The bill referred to provided that appropriations for light-houses and river and harbor appropriations should not lapse. I hope this will be agreed to. It involves no new appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. I offer the following amendment:

At line 628 insert the following:

For the construction of a road from Windmill Point light-station, Lake Saint Clair, Michigan, to the main road from Detroit to Grosse Point, $2,000.

This appropriation, I desire to say, was recommended by the Light-House Board.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMALLS. I offer the following amendment:

At line 591, after "$15,000," insert the following:

For the re-establishment of range-lights at Hilton Head and Bay Point, entrance to Port Royal Harbor, South Carolina, $40,000.

I have letters here from the Navy and Treasury Departments recommending this appropriation. The lights at Hilton Head and Bay Point have been destroyed since the war. The Port Royal Harbor is one of the best in the Southern States south of Hampton Roads; and last winter over six hundred vessels cleared from Port Royal, loaded with cotton, naval stores, and timber. There is a regular line of steamers between New York and Port Royal, and a new line has been established between Baltimore and Port Royal. I ask that the letters which I send to the desk may be read. I do not think the Committee on Appropriations will have any objection to that amendment. I believe that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is satisfied that those lights should be re-established, and that it is absolutely necessary that this appropriation should be made.

Mr. RANDALL. A large number of Government vessels rendezvous at Port Royal, and of course there should be a light there. The difficulty is there was no estimate for it when this bill was made up. The papers have been placed in our hands, or at least in the hands of some of the members of the committee, since the bill was printed. My impression is, from the state of the facts, that if this had been before the committee in due form the committee would have adopted it.

Mr. SMALLS. After what has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I do not ask for the reading of the letters.

Mr. RANDALL. Let them be printed in the RECORD as a justification of what I have said.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 20, 1876.

SIR: The selection of Port Royal as a rendezvous for the North Atlantic squadron renders it advisable to make the approaches thereto as safe as possible, and as the lights shown from Hilton Head have since the war been discontinued, I have the honor to request that a light, if but of the third order, be re-established at that point, as necessary for the safe navigation of the entrance to Port Royal Bay.

Very respectfully, &c.,

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1876.

SIR: I inclose herewith, for the report and recommendation of the Light-House Board, a copy of a letter of the 20th instant from the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, in which he states that the selection of Port Royal as a rendezvous for the North Atlantic squadron renders it advisable to make the approaches thereto as safe as possible, and requests, in view of the discontinuance of the lights at Hilton Head since the war, that a suitable light be established at that point as necessary for the safe navigation of the entrance to Port Royal Bay.

By order.

I am, very respectfully,

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Assistant Secretary.

Professor JOSEPH HENRY, LL. D.,
Chairman Light-House Board.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, March 31, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of March 22, inclosing a copy of a communication from the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, requesting that the lights on Hilton Head, Port Royal Sound, South Carolina, be re-established.

In reply I beg leave to say that the subject was laid before the board at its meeting of March 28, when, after careful consideration, I was directed to state that while the board is of opinion that the re-establishment of these lights would be a benefit to commerce generally as well as to the Navy, still that the board can take no action looking to the establishment of a light on Hilton Head until an appropriation is made by Congress for that purpose.

It is roughly estimated—the board having made no careful examination of the location as yet—that it will require $50,000 to properly light Port Royal Sound.

Meantime, however, as it is essential to the safety of those vessels of our Navy frequenting those waters that they should be lighted immediately, the board will, upon receiving authority therefor from the Department, loan to the Navy Department lenses and accessories sufficient to enable it to erect and maintain temporarily the lights which it requires at the present time.

Very respectfully,

J. G. WALKER,
Naval Secretary.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th ultimo in relation to the re-establishment of the lights on Hilton Head, Port Royal Sound, South Carolina, and to transmit herewith, for your information, a copy of a letter of the 31st ultimo from the naval secretary of the Light-House Board, (the subject having been referred by this Department to the board for its attention,) in which it is stated that the re-establishment of these lights would be beneficial to commerce as well as to the Navy, but that no action can be taken in this direction until an appropriation for the purpose is made by Congress; and further, that in view of the needs of the vessels of the Navy frequenting those waters, the board will loan to the Navy Department the lenses and accessories necessary to enable it to temporarily establish the lights in that locality upon receiving authority from this Department.

I have accordingly to state that upon your signifying to this Department that it is the desire of the Navy Department to erect and maintain temporarily the lights at Hilton Head, Port Royal Sound, South Carolina, the Light-House Board will be authorized to loan the lenses and accessories required to carry the purpose into effect.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I hope this amendment will be adopted. This harbor of Port Royal is now one of the best on the Atlantic coast, and, according to the opinion of eminent engineers and other intelligent observers, it might at a comparatively small expense be made the very best port of entry on the American coast. I would like to enlist the sympathies of this committee for the old State of South Carolina in this regard. She is in a most dilapidated and forlorn condition; and, if we cannot restore her to her former place as an intellectual power in this Union, we may at least very greatly promote her interests in a material way. I have a tender regard for the dear old State and all its people. Port Royal is now the terminus of a railroad, and several of the most important railroad projects are tending in that direction. It is therefore eminently to the advantage of the whole country, and especially of the southern country, and more especially of the State of South Carolina, that this harbor should be improved, and the restoration of these head-lights is essential as a beginning at least of greater improvements. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina will be allowed to go into the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 581:

And the Light-House Board is authorized to make a survey for the location of a light or lights to guide past the shoals at and near Cherry Island Flats, Delaware River, and to report at the next session on the cost thereof.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all right. It involves no expense.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following amendment:

After line 561 insert the following:

For building a light-house at the mouth of the Nansemond River, in Virginia, $15,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not detain the committee by having the papers in this case read. If it had been before the committee in time, I suppose it would have been adopted. It is very much the same case as Port Royal. I ask that the papers relating to it may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The amendment was adopted.

The papers ordered to be printed in the RECORD in explanation of the amendment are as follows:

To the honorable the Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, citizens and business men engaged in trades and professions of various kinds, residents of the town of Suffolk, at the head of navigation on the Nansemond River, Virginia, respectfully ask your honorable body to make the necessary appropriation for the establishment of a light-house at the mouth of Nansemond River aforesaid.

This application is based on the following considerations:

1. That the shoals at and about the mouth of the river and the great width of the river at its mouth render entrance difficult and hazardous.

2. That on account of the increased and increasing trade on the river a large number of vesse's are constantly passing in and out notwithstanding the hazard and danger and difficulties, of which they should be relieved in their passage.

3. That our commerce is considerable, engaging the occupation of vessels of three hundred tons burden and drawing twelve feet of water.

4. That the average rise and fall of the tide is three and a half or four feet and that a large number of vessels arrive at and depart from Suffolk, the head of navigation, monthly; and a much larger number, carrying the produce of truckers and otherwise engaged, arrive at and depart from various points of importance below Suffolk on the river.

5. That Major F. H. Baker, light-house inspector, as the result of recent observation, is satisfied of the necessity for not only buoys in, but also for a light-house at, the mouth of Nansemond River.

Suffolk is a flourishing town on this river of two thousand inhabitants. The river empties into Hampton Roads on the south from Fort Monroe and at the mouth of James River.

Respectfully submitted.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 29, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor, referring to your letter of the 25th instant, addressed to the chairman of the Light-House Board, to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from the engineer secretary of the board, dated the 26th instant, stating, in reply to your inquiry, that the probable cost of establishing a light-station at the mouth of the Nansemond River, Virginia, would be $15,000.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN GOODE, Jr., M. C.,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, May 26, 1876.

SIR: Herewith inclosed I have the honor to transmit a copy of a letter, dated May 25, received at this Office from Hon. John Goode, jr., member of Congress, asking to be informed of the probable cost of establishing a light-house at the mouth of Nansemond River, Virginia.

In reply to this letter I beg leave to say that the probable cost of establishing a light-station at the mouth of the Nansemond River, Virginia, would be $15,000.

Very respectfully,

PETER C. HAINS,
Major of Engineers, United States Army,
Engineer Secretary Light-House Board.

The HON. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

Rock Island Arsenal: For a rolling-mill and forging-shop (shop F) for the armory at Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Illinois, $80,000, in addition to the unexpended balances of appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1874, which are hereby made available for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer the following amendment:

Amend by inserting after the words Rock Island arsenal, in line 633, the following: For shop G and iron-working and finishing shop, $75,000.

It is not necessary perhaps for me to detain the committee more than a moment by any additional remarks as to the appropriation for the Rock-Island arsenal. I desire, however, to say that, inasmuch as the people whom I represent upon this floor feel a very deep interest in the completion of this arsenal and in carrying on the work, I hardly feel justified in not at least saying something on the subject.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the committee have acted upon a mistaken idea in their refusal to make this appropriation. As I understand, it was done because the committee determined in the early part of this session that they would make no appropriations for any new work. Now the point that I wish to make and which I have heretofore made, both before the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee of the Whole House, is that this is not in any just sense a new work; it is the carrying on and completing of a national work which was begun some years ago. We are not building on Rock Island a large number of arsenals; we are building but one arsenal; all these buildings are necessary to complete the one arsenal, and I say that if this arsenal is to be completed, as I believe it ought to be completed and as I believe it is necessary to be for prudence and safety, now is the best time to do the work. There has not been a time when labor and material were cheaper than they are now for many years, and they are cheaper now than perhaps they will be some years hence. Then there is all the expensive machinery and other appliances for carrying on this work already on hand. There are eight hundred and sixty mechanics and laborers employed there who must be dismissed and turned out of employment if the work is stopped or cut down. This is a well-organized force. They have been educated; they were carefully selected and have had large experience. If you stop the work and allow them to be scattered, and let all the machinery go to ruin, and let all the material on hand be deteriorated if not lost, I say that it will be a great loss and a great expense to the Government.

I repeat that there never was a time when the work could be better done than now, and there never was a time when it would be of greater interest to the class of people who are much spoken of here that the work should be continued. When you talk about paralyzed industries, oppressed laborers, and a tax-burdened people, I fail to see wherein you mend the matter by adding to the sufferings of the people of the country by dismissing men who have been educated to a particular work after many years' experience, and when their labor is needed in carrying on necessary public works. I fail to see where is the economy, reform, or retrenchment in such a measure when we need the services of these mechanics and laborers.

Mr. HURLBUT. I yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. HENDERSON. I say that the effect of breaking up this organization now and discharging these laborers would be a great loss to the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said pretty much all I desire to say on this matter. There are many reasons why this work should go on.

In the first place, it can be done cheaper now than at any other time in all probability. In the next place, you have a force of workmen there and the material for carrying on the work, and, furthermore, it would be a matter of economy to commence the work now, because the large excavation required is necessary now to fill up and grade the sites of other shops.

As I said, we are not building a number of arsenals. We are building only one; and all these buildings are necessary. As an illustration, one is a store-house, one is a furnace, another a wood-working shop, another a rolling-mill, another a finishing-shop, and so on; and I believe that it is true economy to go on with the work and complete it; and I hope the committee will adopt this amendment. Continue these worthy mechanics and laborers now employed in this great national work, and go on and complete it, as prudence demands we should do.

Mr. RANDALL. I hold in my hand a printed communication from the Secretary of War, which contains a conclusive answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois and explains the reason why the Committee on Appropriations reduced this amount. The Secretary of War in his revision of the estimates, which the gentleman will remember, himself struck out the recommendation for this appropriation. I hope the recommendation of the Secretary of War will be concurred in and the amendment voted down.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the last word. I yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HENDERSON.]

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will recollect that time is so valuable.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do recollect and appreciate it fully. I do not want more time than is absolutely necessary. It is true that the late Secretary of War, General Belknap, upon the recommendation of the Chief of Ordnance, submitted to Congress an estimate of $200,000 for this shop. After Secretary Belknap resigned his position as Secretary of War and Judge Taft was appointed, the matter was submitted to him, and I take occasion to say that he only acted upon what he understood to be the well-known intention and determination of the Committee on Appropriations, expressed at the very beginning of this session, not to allow any new buildings to be commenced.

I hold in my hand an article from the Rock Island Argus of Saturday, May 20, 1876, a leading daily democratic paper of my district, upon this subject, to which I will now call the attention of the House.

The article is as follows:

WORK AT THE ARSENAL MUST GO ON.

In view of the recent action of Congress in cutting down the arsenal appropriation, the board of trade of this city held a meeting yesterday afternoon, and adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That Hon. Hiram Price is respectfully requested to visit Washington and use his best endeavors to secure such appropriations as will insure a vigorous prosecution of the work of building the Rock Island arsenal on the plan as originally designed.

"Resolved, That George A. French be appointed a committee to raise the necessary funds for the payment of the expenses of Mr. Price.

"Resolved, That the secretary forward to Mr. Price a copy of these resolutions."

This is a vital question to the people of this section of country and of immediate consequence to the commercial prosperity of the citizens of the "three cities."—Davenport Democrat.

It is hoped that Mr. Price will be able to convince Mr. TUFTS, the republican member of Congress from the Davenport district, and Mr. HENDERSON, the republican member from this district, and Mr. Taft, the republican Secretary of War, that what they have done is wrong, and that the sum agreed upon ought to be increased. But, inasmuch as the republican Secretary of War has reported in favor of the sum fixed and stated that it is sufficient for present uses, and inasmuch as our two republican Congressmen for the locality in which the arsenal is situated don't seem to be doing anything to change the course of the republican Secretary of War, it doesn't look as though Mr. Price's visit to Washington would amount to much. But, as he is already in Baltimore attending the Methodist conference, it can't cost the board of trade more than two or three dollars to pay his fare on to Washington to see what he can do. We hope he will be able to convince these republican officials that they haven't done their duty and that they will be able to increase the appropriation.

I call attention to that article. It is from a leading daily democratic paper published in the city of Rock Island, charging upon the Secretary of War a great wrong, that of reducing this estimate. I call the attention of my democratic friends on the other side of the House——

Mr. RANDALL. I differ entirely with the democratic editor. I think it is one of the feathers in the cap of the Secretary of War, which will stay by him through his life, I hope, that he remained in the War Department long enough to review the estimates of that Department and reduce them $5,600,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will my friend hear the conclusion of the remark I desired to make? that is, I call the attention of the democratic side of the House to this fact, in order that they may correct the error of the Secretary of War and do what is right in this matter.

Mr. RANDALL. If I were to chase up every newspaper paragraph, I would not have much else to do.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. HENDERSON; and upon a division there were—ayes 37, noes 55.

No further count being called for, the amendment was declared rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer another amendment, to insert after the words "Rock Island arsenal" these words:

For shop G, an iron-working and finishing shop, $50,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer another amendment, to strike out "$80,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$170,000." In addition to what I said on the first amendment which I proposed, I have to add only this: The sum of $170,000 was estimated both by General Belknap, when Secretary of War, and by Judge Taft, late Secretary of War, after a careful consideration of the subject, and in my judgment that amount is absolutely necessary for the completion of that shop, so as to make it useful to the Government. If the appropriation is not increased from $80,000 to $170,000, as no appropriation is made for new work, in my opinion, before the close of the present season, the work on the arsenal will have to stop entirely.

I do not think the sum proposed in this bill will enable them to go on with the work through the present season. I cannot state that positively, but such is my impression. Surely it will be the worst policy in the world for this Government to turn off these mechanics and laborers, and leave uncompleted, for the want of $90,000, a shop that has already cost several hundred thousand dollars, and leave it unfinished and entirely useless.

Furthermore, this arsenal will be very useful to the Government, and is now already of great benefit to it. I will read a brief extract from the report of the Chief of Ordnance, and then I will be done.

The Rock Island arsenal, in its present incompleted state, now supplies all the militia of most of the States and Territories drained by the great river and its tributaries, many of the fortresses that guard the coast-line of the Gulf of Mexico, and more than one-half of our Army, now scattered from the Mississippi to the Rocky Mountains and beyond. When completed and fully equipped as a manufacturing arsenal, its capacity will equal the supplying of all the armies that may be organized in the Mississippi Valley in any war of the greatest magnitude.

This arsenal, as I said, is already useful to the Government, already supplying, as it does, a large part of our Army. I believe this shop ought to be completed. If this organized force of laborers and mechanics at the Rock Island arsenal are to be thrown out of employment on a building that has cost so much and which is a necessary public work, before it is completed, I think it will be a great detriment to the Government and very far removed from a wise and just economy.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations deemed that the sum of $50,000 was adequate for this purpose; that we should go slowly in this case, as we have done in regard to other buildings. The truth is that a large sum of money has been expended on Rock Island arsenal, and there is probably an unexpended balance.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to inquire of the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HENDERSON,] upon which debate is exhausted.

The question was taken upon the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman save the time of the committee by sending up all his amendments to the Clerk, and they can be read one at a time?

Mr. FORT. The gentleman has a right to offer his amendment as he desires, without regard to saving the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair made the suggestion in order to save the time of the committee. Of course the gentleman will understand that the Chair had no intention of infringing upon the rights of his colleague.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to pay particular attention to the amendment I have just sent up.

The amendment of Mr. HENDERSON was to strike out the words "in addition to the unexpended balances of appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1874, which are hereby made available for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877," and to add to the paragraph the following:

And it is provided that the unexpended balances of appropriations for the purposes of the Rock Island arsenal for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, are hereby re-appropriated and made available, for the same purposes for which originally appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. RANDALL. Give us a statement of the unexpended balances. Why would that not be available anyhow?

Mr. HENDERSON. There is a letter before your committee which states exactly why the amount was not expended, that it was on account of high water which prevented the putting in of the machinery. That letter was before your committee, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WELLS] saw it and read it, and I suppose the attention of the committee was called to it. The balance unexpended, as I understand, is about $23,000.

Mr. RANDALL. This balance does not go into the Treasury under any law.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that it does.

Mr. RANDALL. Only the unexpended balances for 1873 and 1874 are covered into the Treasury at the end of this month.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Committee on Appropriations in the bill which they have reported say:

In addition to the unexpended balances of the appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1874, which are hereby made available for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. RANDALL. No balances are covered into the Treasury at the end of this fiscal year on the 30th of the present month except balances of appropriations for the year 1873-'74. Appropriations for subsequent years will not be turned in then under the law.

Mr. KASSON. These appropriations run for two years.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. And they are available for the same purposes for which they were appropriated?

Mr. RANDALL. Undoubtedly. It would be a violation of law for any executive officer to devote them to any other purpose. I think the amendment is not at all necessary.

Mr. HENDERSON. If it is not necessary, of course I do not desire it to be adopted. I withdraw it.

Mr. TUFTS. I move to amend by adding after the clause making appropriations for the Rock Island arsenal, the following:

For new machinery and shop-fixtures, $227,500.

I do not offer this amendment for the purpose of wasting the time of the House, though I admit that it looks almost hopeless; but I have worked too long and too hard at this matter to give it up without an effort to get at least this small amount. The estimates of appropriations for Rock Island arsenal were $659,000. The Committee on Appropriations went to Secretary Taft and requested him to cut down those estimates to the very last cent. He reduced them to $226,000, very much, I know, to the surprise at that time of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and to the indignation of the democratic organs in the vicinity of the arsenal. But the Committee on Appropriations paid no attention whatever to Secretary Taft's recommendation. They shut their eyes and sliced off of his recommendation $115,000, leaving but $111,000.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] has said that Philadelphia suffers as badly in her appropriations as any other locality. But I call attention to the fact that, while the estimates for that city have been cut down 50 per cent., there is in this case a reduction of more than 80 per cent. of the original estimates.

The appropriation of $27,500 which I now propose is not for any new building, but for placing the shafts and machinery in a building already completed, in order that the work may be done the more speedily and with less expense to the Government; and I understood and believe the members of the Committee on Appropriations understood that this appropriation was left in the bill, and its omission was never discovered until the bill was printed and laid on our desks at the commencement of this discussion. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not object to this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot answer for what other gentlemen of the committee may have understood, but I know that this appropriation was voted out; the record so shows.

Mr. TUFTS. Was it done by a full committee?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not at liberty to state what occurred in committee. The fact is that the Secretary of War reduced the estimates for Rock Island $370,000. There was afterward recommended by the Secretary about $220,000. We have given about $111,000.

Notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. TUFTS,] it is a fact that a greater percentage was stricken off from the estimates for Philadelphia than has been struck off here.

Mr. TUFTS. The percentage of reduction is not greater.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, there is a greater percentage of reduction.

Mr. TUFTS. You have only given us $111,000 when the estimate was $659,000.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; the estimate is for $230,000.

Mr. TUFTS. Let the gentleman look into his Book of Estimates, from which he took the Philadelphia estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. They were never corrected.

Mr. TUFTS. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars was estimated for Philadelphia.

Mr. RANDALL. The Architect still wants $750,000 for Philadelphia.

Mr. TUFTS. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars is appropriated for that city.

Mr. RANDALL. We have cut down the estimate for Philadelphia nearly 60 per cent.; and this estimate for Rock Island is cut down about 50 per cent.

Mr. TUFTS. The estimate was $659,000, and you have cut it down to $111,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The present Secretary of War did not pretend to defend the estimates of General Belknap.

Mr. TUFTS. Six hundred and fifty-nine thousand dollars is the estimate in the Book of Estimates for Rock Island, $111,000 is the appropriation. The same Book of Estimates gives Philadelphia $750,000, and the appropriation is $350,000. The gentleman takes for Philadelphia the estimate in the Book of Estimates, while for Rock Island he takes the report of the Secretary of War and attempts to mislead the House by statements he knows very well are not correct.

I repeat that the purpose of the amendment I offer is to put in shafting and machinery in order that a building which is already to be used in carrying on the work at the arsenal may be of use. If this amendment is not adopted the building must be closed; it cannot be used until an appropriation of this kind is made by some Congress that knows the difference between what my democratic friend on my right [Mr. PIPER] calls driveling, contemptible, parsimonious attempts at economy, for political effect, and true economy.

Mr. RANDALL. This appropriation is for new machinery, which the committee did not deem necessary.

Mr. TUFTS. It is for machinery that must be had in order to make the building of any use.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TUFTS, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 52, noes 72.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the care and preservation of the Rock Island bridge, $9,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read the following:

For improvement of the water-power and to carry out existing contracts with the Moline Water-Power Company, $157,350.

I do not offer this amendment for the purpose of making a record upon it.

I offer this amendment to the committee in good faith, believing, as I do, that honest, fair dealing on the part of the Government of the United States demands that the sum of money asked for in the amendment should be appropriated.

I wish to say when the work of building the Rock Island arsenal was determined upon, the Government of the United States thought proper to take possession of the entire water-power at Moline, one-half of which belonged to what is known as the Moline Water-Power Company.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to ask the gentleman whether any water-power has been used there in the arsenal?

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose it has. But, Mr. Chairman, that does not make any difference whether it has or has not. The Government of the United States entered into contracts authorized by Congress with the Moline Water-Power Company, by which the Government agreed to develop and maintain the water-power there. There is now a deposit which has been formed at the head of the pool and which obstructs the flow of water into it.

This has almost virtually destroyed the water-power in a time of low water. This was made the matter of a special communication or report of Colonel Flagler, commandant of the arsenal at Rock Island, to General Benét, Chief of Ordnance, and that report was referred to the then Secretary of War, General Belknap, in February last, by General Benét, with a letter recommending that this appropriation of $157,350 should be asked from Congress. General Belknap submitted these papers to the House, accompanied by a letter from himself also recommending that the appropriation should be made, under date of February 19 last, and the matter, with these letters and report, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. And that committee, after fully examining the subject, decided in favor of allowing the appropriation, and referred it to the Committee on Appropriations, with the recommendation that the amount of $157,350 be appropriated.

After the Committee on Military Affairs had done this I myself called the attention of Judge Taft, Secretary of War, to the subject, and, after examining the contracts made by the Government and the reports which had been made here by the proper officers, he recommended to the Committee on Appropriations to make this appropriation for the purpose of carrying out those contracts on the part of the Government. I believe that absolute good faith requires that the Government should go on and give the company the water they need by removing the deposits and improving the power. It does not make any difference as to the money expended. It does not make any difference whether the Government uses it or not. The Government agreed to develop and maintain this water-power, and it is not now maintained; and the Water Power Company and one of the most enterprising towns in Illinois are greatly injured because the Government fails to comply with its contracts. Notwithstanding the commandant of the arsenal, General Benét, (Chief of Ordnance,) General Belknap and Judge Taft, (late Secretaries of War,) have all recommended this appropriation, and notwithstanding the Committee on Military Affairs has recommended it as being necessary to carry out the contracts of the Government in good faith, still this Committee on Appropriations refuses to allow it.

Mr. HURLBUT. This question was submitted—as of right it ought to have been—to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee unanimously found certain facts. In the first place that there existed, prior to the occupation of Rock Island by the United States as an arsenal, a company controlling the water-power on the Illinois shore; and in the next place that the United States are bound by contract to maintain that power to these people there at Moline, the United States taking part of the labor that the Moline Water-Power Company had expended on it, and agreeing in return they would keep up that water-power.

We have had before us the reports of all the officers of the United States, and they say that this amount of money of $157,000 or $167,000 is absolutely necessary to carry out the contract long ago made by the United States, and which, if the United States do not carry out, they not only violate their plighted faith, but they imperil the prosperity of a large manufacturing town, which, relying upon this contract, has been built up for manufacturing purposes. The report of the Committee on Military Affairs on this question was unanimous. There was not any question about it in committee, and therefore, no doubt, independent of any other question, the honor of the country is plighted to make this payment to sustain this power partly for the benefit of the United States and partly for the benefit of the other riparian owners.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a controversy of some years' standing between the Government of the United States and the Moline Water-Power Company. It originally was a contract, I believe, by General Rodman and the War Department. That is the first point. We considered it a question in controversy. In the next place, in my judgment, so far as I am able to learn—I may be wrong in this, but I think not—the Government of the United States will substitute steam entirely for use in the Rock Island arsenal instead of water-power. Yes, sir; I am so informed, and so far as the use of water is concerned by the Government in connection with the Moline Water-Power Company at the Rock Island arsenal it will not be needed at all.

Mr. HURLBUT. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as he means to be fair, I know, hear me for one moment?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. HURLBUT. Rock Island lies in the middle of the Mississippi River. On the Iowa side is the main channel of the river, and on the Illinois side is what was known in the old times as the slough. By the action of the United States in cutting out a better channel on the Iowa side between Rock Island and the Iowa shore, they have reduced and broken down the water-power on the Illinois side.

Mr. RANDALL. This has been cut through the bed-rock. I am familiar with the subject, so far as an examination of the map is concerned, and so far as listening to gentlemen who appeared before the committee to furnish information in reference to this subject. I believe the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] appeared on two occasions before the Committee on Appropriations in conjunction with gentlemen representing this Moline Water-Power Company. And in many private interviews the gentleman impressed this on my mind and on the minds of members of the committee; so that we do understand the subject, I think. At least we endeavored by listening carefully to understand it. And we did not consider it wise for us to make an appropriation in this bill when there is a controversy of some years' standing.

If the considerations which have been presented had any weight why was this appropriation not made long ago? When we take into consideration the fact that as we are informed steam-power has been substituted altogether for water-power in that arsenal, we think that the whole water-power there can be handed over to the Moline Water-Power Company. The gentleman knows that the United States has already spent in connection with this water-power $695,000. I think there ought to be a stop put to expenditures in this direction, for I am convinced that so far as the use of water-power at the Rock Island arsenal is concerned it is a failure, and that steam will be substituted.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I wish to call attention to a remark of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TUFTS] in regard to the appropriations for the arsenal at Rock Island. The gentleman representing that district asked me what were the recommendations of the committee in regard to that arsenal. I took the Estimate Book out of my desk and showed him the item appropriating for shop F was $80,000; in another item of $10,000 for sewerage, building new roads, &c.; in another $9,000 for keeping the bridge in repair, and $27,500 for new machinery and shop-fixtures, which I find by the bill was stricken out when absent from the committee room. It was left, however, in my book which led me in an error, and instead of $22,000 for buildings, &c., the committee recommended $10,000. There was simply a misunderstanding about it, and I regret that my name was brought forward in connection with this matter. If I had been in my seat I would have corrected the gentleman at the time. It was simply a private conversation between the gentleman representing Rock Island district and myself, and I believed I was giving the actual facts and figures as they would appear in the bill when printed, it then being in the hands of the printer.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am responsible for the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. TUFTS.] After the chairman of the committee had told me it was left in by the order of the committee I made no allusion to it myself, and I omitted to state to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TUFTS] what the chairman [Mr. RANDALL] had said to me. I really believed in good faith that it was left in, as I was informed so by two members of the committee.

I want to say in as few words as I can that while there has been a controversy between the Government or the War Department and the Moline Water-Power Company, yet that controversy has been settled, at least so far as to obtain an acknowledgment that it is the duty of the Government to carry out this contract and develop and maintain the water-power, and that this appropriation is necessary for that purpose. It is entirely new to me that the War Department or the Ordnance Bureau intends to use steam instead of water-power; because in the very documents which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations the commandant at Rock Island expressly says that after the Government had expended so large an amount of money and built so great a water-power, he believed it would be unwise and not economical to leave it unfinished. And further he says:

It is also clear that the acts of Congress on this subject and the contracts made with the Moline Water-Power Company require that the work shall be done.

That is all I wish to say, except that if this was a matter between individuals instead of being a matter between the Government and the company, there is no doubt but an action could be maintained for damages.

Mr. RANDALL. If it was an equity case, there would not be a dollar due. The Government has spent nearly $700,000 in connection with this water-power. Now, this proposition is to cut a channel through this bed-rock, and I think the company ought to do it.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Government has undertaken it on its own motion and by its own contracts and agreements; and I tell the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] that it makes no difference what the amount of money expended has been or may be. What the company wants and what the company is entitled to is water, water-power. Without it their wheels are stopped and the enterprising manufacturing town of Moline suffers.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the paragraph at line 646, relating to lightning-rods at the Benicia arsenal.

Mr. HOLMAN. Strike that all out.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word. I do not know who is the meteorological observer there; but I have been informed that there has never been a thunder-storm or lightning in that region.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me read from the Book of Estimates:

The absence of all signs of electricity——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONGER. Not at present.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought you wanted an explanation of this.

Mr. CONGER. I am informed that there never has been any lightning known in that region except during last summer. I believe that under no former administration, and in the time of no former member of Congress, has lightning ever been known to be around Benicia. The lightning has only been there very lately in the time of the gentleman now representing that district.

Mr. LUTTRELL. There has been some crooked whisky there, I understand, that some of your republican officials know about.

Mr. RANDALL. I propose to treat this matter seriously.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman has any explanation why lightning-rods should be provided where there is no lightning, I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. RANDALL. I read from the Book of Estimates:

The absence of all signs of electricity in the atmosphere of this country, which has hitherto existed, has induced all persons to leave their buildings without lightning-rods. During the past summer, however, we have had three storms accompanied by lightning; and it is deemed advisable to adopt the usual precautions against the effects of lightning.

That is the recommendation of the Department.

Mr. CONGER. Well, if there was any lightning there last summer I did not know it.

Mr. RANDALL. There was all kinds of lightning, including political lightning.

Mr. CONGER. I never heard of there being any lightning there until last summer, when my friend who represents this Benicia district was elected.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I am merely sustaining the report of the Department.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Surveys of north and northwestern lakes and Mississippi River:

For continuing surveys of Lakes Erie and Ontario; determination of points in aid of State surveys and construction of maps; continuation of triangulation south from Chicago and east to Lake Erie; survey of the Mississippi River, and miscellaneous, $100,000.

Mr. CONGER. I see that the committee recommend an appropriation of only $100,000 for lake surveys. Now, the report of General Comstock, who is in charge of the lake surveys, is that $184,000 are necessary to complete the surveys of the lakes. They have now steamers and boats and crews and officers and all the material for finishing the survey of Lakes Erie and Ontario which are now on hand, and if the committee appropriate only $100,000 it will compel the keeping up of that force for another year at almost the same expense as this year, whereas if they would appropriate a proper amount the whole lake surveys could be completed this year. I repeat that the work can be done if we should make a proper appropriation for half of the expenses which will be incurred if it is postponed and continued for two years. That will require the keeping up of the steamers, the stations, of the boats, of the crews, and the retention of the services of all the scientific men engaged in these surveys.

The recommendation of the Book of Estimates is $184,000. I can see no propriety in making an enormous appropriation for the coast survey and leaving the survey of the inland lakes uncompleted. I move, therefore, that the appropriation be increased so that it shall be $150,000. The recommendation of the Department is $184,000, but on consultation with the officer who is engaged in this business I learned that it is probable that with an appropriation of $150,000 they may complete the surveys this year.

It is of vital importance to our lake navigation that these surveys should be completed and charts perfected and the shoals and rocks pointed out. We have not to-day in all the immense navigation of the lakes nautical charts of the lakes by which any pilot can pass from Ogdensburg to Chicago without danger of running on unmarked reefs and shoals. Every year there is a loss of American commerce on these lakes of over one hundred-fold more than the additional expense which would be incurred were this amendment adopted.

Now, I ask the committee to make an appropriation of $150,000, so that these surveys may be completed and finished and that our nautical charts may be corrected.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I have given this subject some consideration. I have had a conference with General Humphreys in regard to this appropriation, which, as the gentleman from Michigan correctly says, was recommended to be $180,000. I was advised by General Humphreys that the surveys of portions of Lakes Erie and Ontario have already been completed, and that an appropriation of $150,000 would be sufficient to continue the surveys during this season, and he believes that next winter the Engineer Department will be able to give a final estimate for these surveys. The committee believes that at that time they will be able to make an appropriation to complete the work, and they believe further that no more than $100,000 can be used between now and the 1st day of November, when this service ceases. In the appropriation bill of next year, which must be passed before the 4th of March, we can make an appropriation for the continuance of the surveys in the early spring. The members of the committee therefore deem this appropriation sufficient.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. In other words, you propose to put the appropriation into a deficiency bill.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. We propose to put it in a bill so that it shall be available on the 4th of March.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word. The proposition of the gentleman from Missouri does not meet at all the proposition I made. There are several steamers engaged in this coast survey.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. This appropriation is for the purpose of keeping up the surveys and continuing the work during this year.

Mr. CONGER. I know that; but the Book of Estimates shows that $184,000 will complete the work this summer. But if you do not make a sufficient appropriation, the men employed in this work will have to be dismissed and there will be further expense to the Government. The gentleman's economy consists in running this work through two years when it might be completed in one. The buildings and machinery will be left idle until next year, when the Department says that an increase of this appropriation to the amount of $50,000 will complete the whole work.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. General Humphreys satisfied the Committee on Appropriations that this appropriation would be sufficient.

Mr. CONGER. I am informed by General Comstock, who has charge of this work, and whose office is now in Detroit, in my State, and with whom I have had a conference on the subject, that the work can be completed this year if a sufficient appropriation be made. It is not in General Humphreys's department. I do not know why General Humphreys is referred to in connection with this matter. General Comstock is the chief of this survey, an independent work; and the gentleman might as well quote the opinion of General Hancock or any other officer of the Army as that of General Humphreys.

Now, in every interest of economy, I ask the House to increase this appropriation $50,000, and thus save $100,000 of unnecessary appropriations next year.

I make the assertion that it will be absolutely necessary to make that appropriation for the repair of boats and steamers which are already old in the service but can be used this year. I know whereof I speak. It may make a little increase in the footings of this bill, but unless this appropriation is made there will be required next year a deficiency or its equivalent in an appropriation of $100,000. I ask the committee to adopt this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. CONGER; and upon a division there were—ayes 48, noes 63.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted, and upon such an important matter as this I must insist upon a further count.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CONGER, and Mr. WELLS of Missouri were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 55, noes 83; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONGER. I must ask for a further count, which I will waive if I may have a vote in the House on this proposition.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I object to that.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman objects because it takes up so much time, I suppose. Then we will take up the time now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order that no quorum has voted?

Mr. CONGER. I do, unless we will be allowed to vote in the House on this proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. We cannot do that; it will take up half an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the tellers resuming their places and continuing the count?

Mr. FRANKLIN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Clerk will proceed to call the roll, no quorum having voted on the last count.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blaine, Bliss, Bradley, John Young Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, Campbell, Cason, Chapin, Clymer, Cochrane, Darrall, Eden, Egbert, Evans, Faulkner, Freeman, Frost, Garfield, Gibson, Goodin, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoge, Hooker, Hunton, Hurd, King, Lamar, Lapham, Lawrence, Levy, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, Maish, MacDougall, Milliken, Money, Mutchler, Nash, New, O'Brien, Parsons, Platt, Poppleton, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, James B. Reilly, Riddle, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Schumaker, Sheakley, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, Smalls, Stenger, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Teese, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Yeates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore resumed the chair, and Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and, finding itself without a quorum upon a vote by tellers, he had directed the roll to be called, and now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum having answered to their names upon a call of the roll, one hundred and ninety-three having responded, the Committee of the Whole will resume its session.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any manner by which we can keep these one hundred and ninety-three members in their seats for a while?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By a call of the House, perhaps.

Mr. RANDALL. I appeal to gentlemen to remain here for a short time, and we can finish the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, a quorum having appeared upon the call of the roll, the Committee of the Whole will at once resume its session.

Mr. CONGER. I have very often asked the question——

The SPEAKER pro tempore, [using his gavel.] The House is now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that mallet when I address the Chair. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule says that the Committee of the Whole must resume its session without further orders from the House.

The Committee of the Whole accordingly resumed its session, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] to increase the appropriation for surveys of northern and northwestern lakes and Mississippi River from $100,000 to $150,000.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 49, noes 99.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. CONGER called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered; there being 23 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the amendment of Mr. CONGER was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the portion relating to public buildings and grounds in and around Washington.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move an amendment to the paragraph relating to fountains in the public grounds.

The paragraph referred to was as follows:

For care of and repairs to fountains in the public grounds, $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amount in that paragraph should be $500, not $5,000. It is simply a typographical error, and I move that it be corrected.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire also to move an amendment to the paragraph relating to the statue of General Thomas.

The paragraph referred to was as follows:

For pedestal for the statue of General George H. Thomas, $25,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had intended to submit the question to some gentleman more representative of this memorial than I am as to who shall indicate the site in this city where the statue shall be located. I have thought that it would be proper to name the Secretary of War, and perhaps the chairmen of the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House. I will offer that amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Has not the site already been designated?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not aware that it has been; I think it has not been. I move to amend the paragraph by adding the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of War and the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives are hereby appointed a committee to select and designate such place upon the public grounds in Washington City which in their judgment would be most appropriate, where said monument shall be erected.

If any gentleman can suggest a better amendment I will cheerfully withdraw mine.

Mr. CONGER. I will only say that I had understood that the place had been already selected.

Mr. HOLMAN. The place has not been selected, and there is nothing in this paragraph as it now stands to indicate where the monument is to be erected, whether in this city or elsewhere.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was then agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. In the clause which provides for lighting the Capitol and Executive Mansion, &c., I move to amend by inserting after "Capitol" the words "the grounds about the same, including the Botanical Garden." This does not involve any additional expense.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend by inserting the following as a new paragraph:

For repairs and care of the telegraph to connect the Capitol with the Departments and the Government Printing Office, $500.

This has the concurrence of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to insert also the following as a new paragraph:

For continuing the improvement of reservation No. 3, $5,000.

This also has the concurrence of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONROE. I move to amend by inserting at the close of the section headed "miscellaneous the following:

That so much of the appropriation heretofore made for salaries of the United States and Mexican claims commission as may remain unexpended on the 30th day of June, 1876, as shall be necessary for the purpose may be used in payment of salaries of the agent, secretary, clerks, translators, and messengers at the rates now respectively allowed to them for a period not to exceed six months from the 1st day of July, 1876; and the unexpended balance for contingent expenses may be used for the contingent expenses of such commission for a like period; and that the amount which may remain unexpended on the 30th day of June, 1876, of the appropriation of the salary of the umpire, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose, may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State in acknowledgment of the service of the umpire.

Mr. Chairman, the time of the Mexican and United States claims commission will expire on the 30th of the present month. A treaty between the two nations is, however, pending in the Senate, where every one expects that it will be ratified. That treaty provides for extending the time of the commission for six months longer, until January 1, 1877. The reason for thus extending the time is that the umpire, Sir Edward Thornton, although he has been very industrious, faithful, and efficient in attending to his duties, has not been able to quite complete all the work before him, and may require two or three months longer to finish it. This will make it necessary for him to continue for some time the employment of clerks, translators, and messengers. This amendment simply re-appropriates unexpended balances of former appropriations to pay the salaries of these clerks, messengers, &c., so that this work may be completed.

There is a considerable number of claims still unadjudicated by the umpire. I am informed that American citizens are largely interested in having this work properly done.

This is a very small matter. No new appropriation from the Treasury is required. The amendment merely re-appropriates old balances. The work will probably be completed in the month of November.

I desire to add that the Secretary of State has earnestly recommended the adoption of this provision. The matter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who unanimously favored adding this amendment to the sundry civil bill, and I have this morning done myself the honor to speak with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] as well as my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] on this side of the House, all members of the Committee on Appropriations, and they consent, as I understand, to this amendment and will not offer any objection to it.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this subject was originally brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations by reference to them of a communication from the Secretary of State on this subject. The committee did not deem it within their province to decide as to the propriety of the re-appropriation; they therefore brought this subject back to the House and upon their motion it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who, I understand, have unanimously reported in favor of the proposition, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

While I do not consider that this is an appropriate place for such legislation, yet I believe the recommendation of the Secretary of State to be a wise one, and therefore interpose no objection, so far as I am individually concerned, to the insertion of the proposition. I think, however, it might more appropriately have been adopted as an independent proposition, especially as it relates to a presentation to a minister representing here a foreign country.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this proposition will not prevail. As I understand—and I have had occasion to investigate the matter, having constituents interested in this fund—the work of this commission has been in fact concluded for some time; and it does appear to me that the continuation of the services of this commission and providing a fund for the continued payment of clerks, &c., after the work of the commission has been in point of fact completed, is unnecessary.

The time of this commission has been extended time and again; and the payment of claimants who are deeply and vitally interested in this fund is deferred on account of these repeated extensions. It is now proposed, by granting this fund for the payment of clerks and other employés connected with this commission, to extend the time for six months longer. If that be done, it would be impossible for parties interested in the work of this commission to get their money during the present Congress. The commission in that case will not conclude its work till after the 1st day of January, 1877; and when that work is concluded the commission must make its report to Congress, which must be referred to the Committee of Claims and reported back; so that the probabilities are that these claims would not be acted on finally before March, 1877. Thus the practical effect of this unnecessary extension of time would be to carry the payment of these claims over to the Forty-fifth Congress. For one I believe that if Congress withholds this appropriation, which can inure only to the benefit of the employés and attachés of this commission, it will have the effect to conclude the work of the commission and give the benefit of their labors to the parties who are really interested.

Mr. MONROE. Mr. Chairman, I beg to say a word in explanation in regard to the points the gentleman over the way has mentioned. The gentleman misunderstands the condition of the work before the commission. I have made very careful inquiry in regard to the facts in this case, and I beg leave to assure the gentleman that so far will the adoption of this amendment be from cutting any of the claimants off from opportunity to recover what is justly due them that it is the only method of securing to a large number whose cases are nearly ready for adjudication an opportunity to recover what belongs to them. I have information——

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. With the gentleman's permission, I will state that my information is, and I got it pretty direct, that there are no cases before this commission which have not been adjudicated.

Mr. MONROE. That is certainly an error.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. I had it from the attorneys interested in the cases.

Mr. MONROE. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs had the authority of the Secretary of State for the fact that there is a considerable number of cases that the umpire cannot act upon before the 30th of June. That is all there is in it. Those cases must go without adjudication unless the time can be extended. The time is going to be extended by convention between the two countries at any rate. The question for the committee to decide is whether it will re-appropriate the small unexpended balances so that the necessary clerks and translators may be paid their salaries.

I am sure—and I think I know what the facts of the case are—and every member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is agreed on that matter, that there is a considerable number of American citizens who have large interests pending who will be utterly and finally cut off from recovering them unless they can have the necessary time and unless the necessary clerks and translators can be paid for the required work. I believe these to be the exact facts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment to come in at the end of this miscellaneous paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding in the usual manner 100,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1874 and 200,000 copies of the report of said Commissioner for the year 1875, $120,000—210,000 copies of the same for the use of the House, 70,000 for the use of the Senate, and 20,000 for distribution by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that amendment that it must go first to the Committee on Printing, under the law.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I do not wish to detain the House by occupying its time in a discussion of the proposition involved in that amendment; but I do wish to say, in response to the point of order, that this is a subject upon which the House has already taken action. On the 17th of December last a resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] and in the month of March, at the request of the Commissioner of Agriculture, I had the honor to introduce a similar resolution, both of which were referred to the Committee on Printing. The discussion of this bill has disclosed the fact that it is absolutely necessary an appropriation should be made. Otherwise the wish as expressed by the House in former resolutions cannot be carried out, and there is no more appropriate place than this miscellaneous paragraph at the end of which I have moved my amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to say a word on the point of order. There is no question but this is in conformity with law.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not make that point, but that under the law it must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I had the impression that this was provided for in other paragraphs, but having watched the progress of every line of the bill, I find that while the paragraph commencing in line 91 appropriates a large sum of money for printing, subsequent paragraphs designate how it shall be expended. The action of the House, as well as the law of the land, makes this in order so far as the point of order is concerned. After the Chair decides the point of order, I should like to say a word in favor of the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not understand the chairman of the committee objects to this.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that it should be referred to the Committee on Printing under the law.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. The Committee on Printing reported favorably on this proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. Not on this proposition.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. Yes, this indentical proposition.

Mr. DUNNELL. In favor of this identical number.

Mr. RANDALL. As to the number, but not as to this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this amendment a reproduction of the report of the Committee on Printing?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I desire to state again, that on the 10th of March the Committee on Printing in this House reported favorably upon the two propositions, the one submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota and the other submitted by myself. The first proposition was to print 200,000 volumes of the Agricultural Report for the year 1874. The proposition submitted by myself, coming from the Agriculture Committee, was to print 200,000 volumes of the report of 1875. The Committee on Printing reported favorably 100,000 for 1874 and 200,000 for 1875, and that is the proposition embodied in this amendment. It is in strict accordance with the report of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Let me suggest that the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is, as I understand his explanation, in accordance with the order of the House, and merely proposes to make an appropriation to carry out that order.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. Precisely.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. It seems to me, in so far as it is an appropriation in accordance with the order of the House, and recommended by the Committee on Printing, the point of order does not lie against it.

Mr. RANDALL. Has that become a law? Is it a resolution of both Houses?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire whether it is a joint resolution which has passed both Houses and been signed by the President?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. That is not according to my information. I do not know that it is necessary for the President to sign such a resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Printing have the right to report at any time, and may do so if the appropriation made in the preceding paragraph is not sufficient.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair inquired whether a joint resolution had passed both Houses of Congress and been signed by the President authorizing this expenditure. I would suggest to the Chair that there have not been joint resolutions to make all the provisions of this bill in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa misunderstood the Chair. The point the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] was making was that an appropriation had been made. The Chair inquired whether that bill, resolution, or action of Congress under which the appropriation had been made had passed both Houses.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The Chair misunderstood my suggestion. I stated not that an appropriation had been made, but that a resolution had passed the House ordering these copies to be printed, and that this it a proposition to make the appropriation necessary to carry out that order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois; but the point the Chair was making, by way of inquiry, was whether any appropriation had been made for this purpose.

Mr. RIDDLE. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to remark the other day that provision was made for the publication of these reports in the ninety-first line of this bill. If that is not so I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to see that a sufficient appropriation is made for the purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe the appropriations already made in this bill will be nearly sufficient, quite sufficient, I judge, to provide for the printing of these reports. I have not in anything I have stated here entered on any discussion of the merits of the question; I have merely made the point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will show us in what part of this bill provision is made for the printing of these reports, we have not another word to say. We merely want them printed.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Printing—I do not know whether he is here now or not—to say that there was in the general appropriation sufficient money to cover this. I will not assert that there is, because I do not know it; but I will say this, that if it is not so, then the Committee on Printing have the right to report at any time, and can report at any time a bill from their own committee. I do not wish to put it in here, and therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is sufficiently advised to rule on the point of order; but if the gentleman from Alabama desires to make any further remark on it, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I desire to state this, Mr. Chairman: The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the debate two or three days ago upon this bill stated, as I understood him distinctly, that it was necessary to make an appropriation if these reports were to be printed. Now these resolutions authorizing the printing have been indorsed by the committee and have already passed this House and are now in the hands of the Senate. If the Senate shall take favorable action on those resolutions the gentleman must see the dilemma in which we shall be placed.

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot see that we will be placed in any dilemma whatever; because I see very well that the Committee on Printing can come in.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. That will take a separate bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Why not?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The Committee on Printing cannot report an appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, they can.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. It is for you to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania has long since been exhausted, and the Chair will now rule on it.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he is willing we should take a vote for this proposition in the House, provided——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I merely desired to state what I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations proposed.

Mr. RANDALL. What I said was that if we find that there has not been sufficient money provided for this purpose, I would not retard the House in any way in my power as an individual or as chairman of the committee from making an appropriation. But it must be remembered that the Senate have not acted on this proposition at all.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair has already stated, debate on the point of order has been exhausted some time ago. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not withdraw the point of order, the Chair asks permission to rule upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will give his decision on the point of order as it has been raised, although the occupant of the chair would much have preferred that the question should have been decided by the committee. It is the judgment of the Chair that the point of order is well taken under the law, which provides that—

All motions to print extra copies of any bill, report, or other document shall be referred to the members of the Committee on Printing from the House in which the same may be made.

And that—

All propositions originating in either House for printing extra copies of public documents, the cost of which shall exceed $500, shall be by concurrent resolution; and all such resolutions shall, upon their transmission from either House, be immediately referred to the Committee on Printing of the House to which they are sent.

That excludes the amendment, and makes the order for this printing only competent by means of a concurrent resolution. The Chair holds that it is not in order as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to offer an amendment as a new paragraph, to come in after line 728.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to offer an amendment which I think will obviate the objection raised to the amendment which the Chair has ruled out of order.

Mr. GLOVER. Your amendment can just as well follow mine. My amendment is to add the following as an additional paragraph:

To pay Thomas M. Howard for carrying the United States mails on route No. 10471, in the State of Missouri, from the 1st of April to the 1st of November, in the year 1861, $111.63.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, that is certainly a private claim, which would be very proper before the Committee of Claims, but not as an item in an appropriation bill. It is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana make the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order.

Mr. GLOVER. I have consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations about this amendment and he has no objection to it. It is recognized by the Post-Office Department, and this amount has been due for fifteen years. I have here a letter from the Postmaster-General asking that the account be paid. I think there can be no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection except the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, there are thousands of these claims, and all of them that have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations have been sent to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. GLOVER. No; there are not thousands of claims of this kind. This is not one of the southern claims which the gentleman from Indiana has antagonized so strongly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know that all claims of this kind should be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I offer the following amendment:

For publishing such copies of the reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the years 1874 and 1875 as may be ordered by the House and Senate, $125,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the same point of order on that amendment as I made upon the other, that it must go to the Committee on Printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see the slightest difference, so far as the point of order is concerned, between this amendment and the one which the gentleman offered a few moments since.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. It seems to me that there is a very material difference. I understood the point of order made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to be that there had been no action on the part of the Senate and no law authorizing this printing.

Mr. RANDALL. No; I did not make that point. I did not want to go into a discussion of the merits at all. I made the absolute point that all such amendments as this must under the law go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The rule which the Chair read, and to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania alluded, is that propositions for printing of extra copies shall go to the Committee on Printing; but here is simply an appropriation for the publication of such copies as may be ordered by both Houses. If none are ordered, then of course no money will be expended. If there are any ordered, there would be authority to expend the money necessary to print them at present. A concurrent resolution of the House and the Senate is sufficient to order the printing, but not the expenditure of the money necessary to pay for that printing, and therefore it is necessary that an appropriation should be made for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and would remind the gentleman from Illinois that the rule referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on page 176, reads:

All propositions in either House of Congress for printing extra copies of documents, the cost of which exceeds $500, shall be by concurrent resolution, which shall, upon its transmission from either House, be immediately referred to the Committee on Printing of the House to which it is sent.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, rose.

Mr. RANDALL. Is the point of order debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not, but the Chair hopes that the committee will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. RANDALL. Time is so valuable.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The ground taken by the Chair is correct as to the printing of extra copies costing more than $500; but the appropriation of the money must be done in an appropriation bill. Now, we have had the decision of the House that they will order these extra copies to be printed by a concurrent resolution, and the only question now is whether we will appropriate the money necessary for that printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the question of order, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. With great deference to the opinion of the Chair, I desire to take an appeal from that decision.

The question was taken, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and on a division there were—ayes 72, nays 31.

No further count being insisted upon, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For labor and expenses of engraving and printing, namely: For labor, (by the day, piece, or contract,) including labor of workmen skilled in engraving, transferring, plate-printing, and other specialties necessary for carrying on the work of engraving and printing notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, the pay for such labor to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury at rates not exceeding the rates usually paid for such work; and for other expenses of engraving and printing notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States; for paper for notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, including mill expenses, boxing, and transportation; for materials other than paper required in the work of engraving and printing; for purchase of engravers' tools, dies, rolls, and plates, and for machinery and repairs of the same, and for expenses of operating macerating-machines for the destruction of the United States notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other obligations of the United States authorized to be destroyed, $813,000. And each of the employés recently furloughed and finally permanently discharged from service in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing shall receive one month's pay, for which purpose the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That said pay shall be given personally to said employés respectively only, and not to any agent claiming for them; And provided further, That in case of their restoration to employment in the Government's service, said month's pay shall be returned by them.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question. As I understand by the reading of the bill, it provides that those persons who were permanently discharged shall receive one month's pay. Why not apply that rule also to those who were discharged for two or three months? I know, of my own personal knowledge, many parties who were discharged for two or three months who suffered severely in consequence.

Mr. RANDALL. I am quite aware of that, but the committee considered this subject very carefully, and following the example set them by Congress heretofore, only made the appropriation of one month's pay to those permanently discharged. They felt that those who were furloughed were treated kindly by their re-appointment.

If we undertake to pay all the furloughed employés there would be an enormous sum of money required. The object of the committee was to give one month's pay to all who were permanently discharged to enable them to reach their homes.

Mr. KASSON. As preliminary to an amendment which I desire to offer, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] if any provision is made in this bill for paying the judgments of the Court of Claims?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has that particular subject in his care. I will say that so far as I understand the matter, subject to his correction if I am wrong, there is now unexpended of money heretofore appropriated a balance of about $600,000.

Mr. KASSON. Recollecting that we were assured that provision for this purpose would be made in this bill, it not having been made in the legislative appropriation bill, looking over this bill I found nothing—

Mr. RANDALL. There are two large claims.

Mr. KASSON. I find that there is remaining unpaid on the principal judgment of the court six hundred and thirty-three thousand and some odd dollars. Then there are additional judgments rendered and unpaid of about $45,000. The reason why the whole of the large judgment was not paid was that there was not money enough to pay it.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is now here and can explain that point.

Mr. KASSON. I have had handed to me by an officer of the court a statement upon which I have based my remarks. I move to amend by inserting as an independent paragraph at this point of this bill that which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read. It embraces the sum stated to me by an officer of the court as the amount required to pay existing judgments, and not to pay any judgments that may be rendered during the coming year, although we have usually made provision for such judgments.

The Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert as a new paragraph the following:

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, $678,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have before me a statement of the judgments rendered by the United States Court of Claims and not paid previous to May 19, 1876. A large portion of these judgments are appealed from to the Supreme Court of the United States. The judgment in favor of Marshall O. Roberts was affirmed by the Supreme Court. That has not been looked into, but it is not expected that an appropriation to pay that judgment will be required to be made at this session of Congress.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman says the judgment in favor of Marshall O. Roberts has not been looked into. It has been looked into by the highest court of the land, and affirmed by that court, and nearly $400,000 of it paid, paid as far as the appropriation would go.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was informed that no part of that judgment would be paid. Had it not been for such information from the Treasury Department the subject would have been brought to the attention of the House long since. This is the first intimation I have heard that any part of that judgment has been paid.

Mr. KASSON. The judgment was for something over a million dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the balance of that judgment should be paid at this time. The amount remaining in the Treasury on May 19, 1876, for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims was $586,707.12. The judgments of the Court of Claims, independent of those which have been appealed from, are very small in amount; I have not added up the figures. I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter from Mr. Conant, Acting Secretary of the Treasury. And I will also ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and not paid previous to May 19, 1876.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 16th instant, I inclose a statement of judgments which have been rendered by the Court of Claims but not paid, and to state that the following amounts remain to the credit of the appropriation for payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, namely:

For fiscal year ending June 30—
1874	$11,750 22
1876	398,369 02
Total	586,707 12

As there are no judgments unpaid dated prior to June 30, 1874, the balance of $11,750.22 for that year will be carried into the general Treasury June 30, 1876.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Acting Secretary.

* Pending on appeal to Supreme Court.
† Affirmed by Supreme Court October term, 1875.
‡ On mandate from Supreme Court.
§ In gold coin.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. KASSON. I move to increase the amount in the amendment by one dollar, for the purpose of making a further explanation. I hold in my hand a statement furnished by the clerk of the Court of Claims about three days ago, which I will read. It is as follows:

Amount remaining unpaid on the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Roberts case, $633,073.48.
Judgments of the Court of Claims of this term as yet unpaid, about $45,000.

He adds to the memorandum that some provision has always been made and should be made for judgments rendered during the next term. Knowing the desire of the Committee on Appropriations in respect to this bill, and feeling that it was a matter for their discretion, I have limited my amendment to the actual existing obligations of the United States by the judgments of its court, which it cannot repudiate, and which it would be wrong for it to postpone the payment of. I have included in my amendment the figures in the statement furnished by the clerk of the court, leaving off the fractions of thousands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose that $40,000 or $45,000 was the amount remaining unpaid of judgments upon which no appeal has been taken. I still desire information from the Treasury Department that any portion of the Roberts judgment has been paid.

Mr. KASSON. If no portion of that judgment has been paid then the amount in my amendment is still too small instead of too large.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unless the gentleman has an official communication from the Treasury Department that a part of the Roberts judgment has been paid, I still desire to communicate further with that Department upon that subject.

Mr. KASSON. Would the gentleman then object to an arrangement by which we may obtain the requisite verification, so that the proposition may be offered in the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. If no part of the Roberts judgment has been paid, then there is an ample sum in the Treasury—over $500,000—to be applied to the payment of judgments which may be hereafter rendered.

Mr. KASSON. But surely the gentleman must see at once that if it has not been paid we shall have to increase the appropriation named in my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the amendment until we can ascertain the facts.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman consent that it shall remain pending in order that we may ascertain the facts?

Mr. RANDALL. We expect to get through this bill to-day. I cannot agree to leave this matter pending. I hope that in the Roberts case nothing has been paid, because I would like to see a review of that case by some competent jurisdiction.

Mr. HOLMAN. We were assured that the judgment was not paid or any part of it; and it is not customary for the Treasury Department to pay a part of a judgment.

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman say that we are not bound to provide by law for carrying out a judgment which has been confirmed by the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not discuss that question now.

Mr. KASSON. I know nothing whatever of that particular case. I am simply acting as the organ of an officer of the court in proposing that provision to be made for discharging the obligations of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am satisfied that that judgment ought not to be paid until a very careful examination of the facts has been made.

Mr. KASSON. I hope we shall make provision for paying our debts.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. KASSON, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 41, noes not counted.

Mr. KASSON. In view of the importance of this question, do not the gentlemen of the committee think that they would be justified in looking into the matter and having it brought up in the House before this bill is disposed of?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will telegraph at once to the Department and let the gentleman know what course we propose to pursue.

Mr. KASSON. We ought not to repudiate the obligations of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not consent to anything that will allow the payment of any money on that claim.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend by striking out at the end of the pending paragraph the words "said month's pay shall be returned by them," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

One-half of said month's pay shall be deducted from the first month's wages after such restoration, and the remaining half of said month's pay shall be deducted from the second month's wages after such restoration.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

COAST SURVEY.

Survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts: For every purpose and object necessary for and incident to the continuation of the survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States and the Mississippi River to the head of ship navigation, with soundings and observations of deep-sea temperatures in the Gulf Stream and the Gulf of Mexico, and observations of currents along the same coasts, and the preparation, engraving, lithographing, and issuing of charts, the preparation and publication of the Coast Pilot and other results of the Coast Survey, the purchase of materials therefor, and including compensation of civilians engaged in the work, and pay and subsistence of engineers for the steamers engaged on those coasts, $325,000.

Mr. YOUNG. I move to amend by inserting after the word "navigation," in line 764, the following:

And for a survey of said river from Cairo to New Orleans, together with its various outlets to the Gulf, with the view of ascertaining the most effectual method of protecting the alluvial lands bordering upon its banks from overflow.

I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that there is no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Geodetic surveying, Coast Survey: For every purpose and object necessary for and incident to the continuation of the triangulation of the Coast Survey to form a connection between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States, and furnishing points for State surveys, including compensation of civilians engaged in the work, $50,000.

Mr. WHITE. I move to amend so as to make the appropriation for this purpose $75,000 instead of $50,000.

The Committee on Appropriations seems to have heard every person very patiently, and then with deliberation to have cut right and left without using even ordinary discretion. The amount which I propose is less than that recommended by the Superintendent of the Coast Survey. The Superintendent of the Coast Survey recommends that Congress appropriate $90,000 for the geodetic survey which is now in progress. A certain amount of work has already been done, but the efforts of the Superintendent are crippled. The appropriation is too small, and he cannot accomplish the service expected of him with the money we propose to give him.

Let me give an illustration of the importance of making ample appropriation for the completion of the geodetic survey. Last year a branch of the Coast Survey was sent into my State; and, in triangulating that portion of the continent lying in Western Virginia and Southeastern Kentucky, they found that Cumberland Gap, a very important fortification in the time of the war, was three miles out of its proper place. Now suppose that my resolution, to extend the slack-water navigation of the Kentucky River to the sea via the south fork of Kentucky River, Richland Creek, Cumberland River, Cumberland Gap, and the Hiawassee and Savannah Rivers, shall be adopted, and the canal-route shall be established, then, sir, all the lands lying along this route will be three miles out of place.

The result will be that foreigners who purchase those lands will be disappointed when they find them three miles removed from where they should be. The geodetic survey, going hand-in-hand with the geological surveys of the several States, will correctly ascertain and satisfactorily establish the true topography of the interior country.

This work should be hastened to completion, not merely for the sake of Americans and foreigners who shall invest in lands lying along this canal, but it should go on in the interest of science.

The triangulation of our country is an absolute necessity. The curvature of the earth is recognized by scientific men in this country and everywhere. The importance of this work cannot be overestimated in order to determine, not only the geography of the country, but it is of vast assistance to the Coast Survey and to the Signal Service. It has not been very long since the geography of the head-waters of the Missouri River in a very elegant pamphlet known as "Appleton's Picturesque America" was incorrectly mapped out on the wrong side of the Rocky Mountains, the Madison, Gallatin, and Jefferson being represented as flowing into the Columbia River, instead of into the Missouri River. It was a most egregious error. We laugh at Englishmen when they pretend that Michigan is in New England and Wyoming Territory in California, but when we come down to the facts we find that we ourselves in this enlightened country do not know within three miles of where Cumberland Gap is. It seems to me that a sufficient appropriation should be made to determine the geography and the topography of the country. Nothing can be more necessary. I hope that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say to the gentleman that when I get through with these amendments perhaps some of his objections will be obviated. If not I can only say that with this amendment the head of the Coast Survey is satisfied.

Mr. WHITE. Of course the Coast Survey will be satisfied, as they are compelled to be satisfied with whatever they can get.

Mr. WHITE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the following amendment, to come in after line 824:

For difference between the amount appropriated and the amount of rent for buildings Nos. 211 New Jersey avenue, south, and 215 South Capitol street, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, $3,600.

Mr. HOLMAN. The rent of this establishment is becoming very serious. It is becoming an immense department of itself, renting a large portion of the city. The last Congress tried to impose some restraint upon them in reference to rent, limiting the amount to be paid. In defiance of that they now come and ask us to appropriate the difference between the sum they wanted and the sum the last Congress appropriated. On that principle there is no use trying to limit establishments like this.

Mr. RANDALL. I only wish to say to this House this difference embraces——

Mr. HOLMAN. We struck this out of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I know we did in committee, but I am advised this is necessary under a contract by which the Government is bound. If the gentleman knows to the contrary, I will not press the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The contract may have been made, but the contract was not made in pursuance of authority, because the law is specific, that rent shall only be paid in pursuance of appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw it, as the gentleman does not think it is correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the amendment ought to be made.

Mr. RANDALL. I move after line 824 to add the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

To effect a transfer in the accounts of the Coast Survey appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and involving no expenditure of money from the Treasury, namely, from the item entitled "repairs of vessels," to the item entitled "survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coast," in said appropriations, $4,796.51.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALLING. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For photolithographing and printing the large connected land map of the United States and Territories, $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. That proposition is subject to the point of order, but I will not press it. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether this is to be the entire expense to the Government of this work?

Mr. WALLING. I wish to say to the gentleman from Indiana this is the entire expense proposed to be paid from the Treasury of the United States. This is a connected series of maps commenced by order of Congress in 1848 which may be used in the common form or in the large form. The object is to photolithograph this map to be sent to the public institutions of the country, and that surveyors may use it in making maps of various subdivisions of the United States. It indicates the various surveys of public lands, geographical and geological surveys, and is a map that ought to be preserved in all our public libraries. The appropriation made by the committee is sufficient to cover the photolithographing of five hundred copies. We first asked the Committee on Appropriations for $5,000, but the Committee on Public Lands have instructed me to say that we would be satisfied with $2,500 for this purpose. I trust the appropriation will be made. It is a matter of great importance to us.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I offer the following amendment:

Insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

That the sum of $302.40 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to Henry Cliff, Charles S. Reisinger, and Charles E. Diemar, for services rendered as folders for the month of February, 1874, to be divided equally between the three named gentlemen.

I have here a certificate from the gentlemen named saying that they served a full month in February, 1874, and asking their pay. I also have the certificate of the assistant clerk of the House of Representatives saying that they received no pay, and also that of Mr. Buxton, who was then Doorkeeper of the House, to the same effect. I ask that these certificates be read.

The certificates were read, as follows:

We, the undersigned, certify that we worked a full month in February, 1874, and were not paid therefor by the House of Representatives.

HENRY CLIFF.
CHARLES S. REISINGER.
CHAS. E. DIEMAR.

I certify that the above-named Henry Cliff, Charles S. Reisinger, and Charles E. Diemar, were not paid as folders during the month of February, 1874, as will appear by the Clerk's annual report, made to the House of Representatives December 11, 1874.

JOHN BAILEY,
Assistant Clerk, House of Representatives.
O. S. BUXTON,
Late Doorkeeper House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. I offer the following amendment:

After line 840, insert the following:

For the introduction of shad into the rivers Congaree and Wateree, in the State of South Carolina, $10,000.

Since the war the supply of shad in those rivers has been very much decreased. It has been a source of complaint among the people in my State, which has been brought to the attention of the executive of the State of South Carolina, and he wrote me a letter, not a long while since, in regard to this matter, asking that I should bring it to the attention of Congress. We ask for very little in that State. I do not know that any occasion has presented itself when we have asked anything at the hands of Congress in this particular. We have voted very liberally money for the purpose of having fish disseminated in our waters in different parts of the United States; but we have never asked at any time that an appropriation should be made for the benefit of the people of my State in this regard. I hope that this Congress will at this time see proper to make this appropriation, that we may also in South Carolina have our waters well supplied with food fish.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have appropriated very liberally for the propagation of food fishes, fully up to the estimates. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will not insist on this appropriation. The Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries will have no difficulty in supplying him with any quantity of fish-eggs.

Mr. RAINEY. I would not insist on this if it were not that in the paragraph in the bill an appropriation is only made for the introduction of shad into the waters of the Pacific States, the Gulf States, and the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. BLOUNT. They are putting these fishes into the southern rivers now.

Mr. HOLMAN. They go anywhere under this clause.

Mr. RAINEY. The paragraph reads—

For the introduction of shad into the waters of the Pacific States, the Gulf States, and the Mississippi Valley.

And I wish to have it distinctly understood that we have never had one fish put into the waters of the State of South Carolina. I want that brought to the attention of the House. I say that we have been too long neglected in that particular. It is a necessity with the people in my State that this appropriation should be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I can meet the views of the gentleman by moving to amend the text of the original proposition and inserting after the word "Pacific" the word "and Atlantic."

Mr. RAINEY. I accept the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I object to the amendment. It is good enough now.

Mr. RANDALL. Gentleman will recollect that the estimate was $47,500. We advanced $17,500; and the $30,000 in the paragraph is the balance of that estimate. I hope gentlemen will not interfere with South Carolina having this fish introduced into its rivers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph which it is proposed to amend.

The Clerk read as follows:

Propagation of food-fishes: For introduction of shad into the waters of the Pacific States, of the Gulf States, and of the Mississippi Valley, and of salmon, whitefish, and other useful food-fishes into the waters of the United States to which they are best adapted, $30,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by adding the words "and Atlantic" after the word "Pacific."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. I now withdraw my amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose, and the Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair,

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty obligations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WINDOM, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. RANSOM as conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. C. C. SNIFFEN, his private secretary, informed the House that the President had approved a bill of the following title:

An act (H. R. No. 1071) for the relief of Lieutenant James B. Sinclair, United States Army.

The message also announced that bills of the following titles having been received by the President on the 8th day of June, and not having been returned by him to the House within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, have become laws without his signature:

An act (H. R. No. 1992) granting an additional pension to Mary P. Abeel;

An act (H. R. No. 42) granting a pension to Francis Bernard;

An act (H. R. No. 2306) granting a pension to John McIntire;

An act (H. R. No. 2291) granting a pension to John H. Garrison; and

An act (H. R. No. 915) for the relief of F. M. Blount, of Chicago, Illinois.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

SIGNAL-OFFICE.

For expenses of the observation and report of storms by telegraph and signal for the benefit of commerce and agriculture throughout the United States; for manufacture, purchase, or repair of meteorological and other necessary instruments for telegraphing reports; for expenses of storm-signals, announcing probable approach and force of storms; for continuing the establishment and connection of stations at life-saving stations and light-houses; for instrument-shelters; for hire, furniture, and expenses of offices maintained for public use in cities or ports receiving reports; for river reports; for books, periodicals, newspapers, and stationery; and for incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, $300,000.

Mr. HANCOCK. I offer the following amendment:

After line 892 add the following:

Construction, maintenance, and repair of military telegraph lines: For completing the construction, maintenance, and use of military telegraph lines on the Indian and Mexican frontiers, and for the better protection of military posts and stations, for the better protection of immigration and the frontier settlements from depredations, especially in the State of Texas, the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and the Indian Territory, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875, $45,000.

Mr. HANCOCK. If that is satisfactory to the Committee on Appropriations I do not desire to speak on it.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir. I think that this had better go over for another year.

Mr. HANCOCK. I am not willing that it shall go over for another year, or for another day. I appeal to the sense of justice, as well as of humanity of the members of this committee whether it should go over.

These are the facts: At an expense of between two and three hundred thousand dollars we have within these Territories and the State of Texas constructed something over twenty-five hundred miles of military telegraph. The lines are not self-sustaining, by reason of the receipts of the different stations for messages sent by individuals, but a sufficient amount is received from that source to go a good ways toward paying the expenses of operating these military telegraph lines. They have been constructed on the recommendation of the military authorities, and their great utility is testified to by the military officers in command. They testify that they have been found immensely beneficial in carrying on military operations against the Indians. But recently we had an official report from General Hatch, in command in New Mexico, who says that by reason of having telegraph lines he could easily concentrate his forces and prevent the Indians from making depredations. General Ord, who is in command in Texas, speaks of the benefit derived there from this system by reason of being able to dispense with a great deal of dispatch duty, and ascertaining at once when depredations are committed upon the frontier of that State, a distance in the aggregate of nearly seventeen hundred miles. Now, while I do not wish to antagonize the spirit of economy, retrenchment, and reform, I do insist that no kind of economy, retrenchment, and reform would warrant such a policy as would dispense with the use of telegraph lines, such a valuable adjunct of the military operations in that country where it is very much needed.

The amount I propose is simply the estimate made by the officers who are charged with the duty of completing the construction of these lines, for let me state that there is a space of probably two hundred miles over which the lines have not yet been completed. If we are to do nothing more in this line, or if we are not to keep up this system, then the amount in the bill might be sufficient to operate the lines already constructed; but let me say to the House that the beneficial effects of these telegraph lines have given us better protection on the borders of Texas against Indian depredations than we have had since the day of annexation, and I hope that this appropriation will not be denied us now.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish for one moment to unite with my colleague in calling the attention of the committee to this subject. On the recommendation of the Secretary of War, sustained by the recommendation of General Sherman and General Sheridan and General Ord and other men connected with the military service in that country, on the 3d of June, 1874, the following act was passed:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to construct and operate a line of telegraph, beginning at or near the city of Denison, in Grayson County, Texas; thence by the nearest practicable route to Fort Sill, Indian Territory; thence to Fort Richardson, Texas; thence along the northern frontier line of settlements to Forts Griffin and Concho; thence to the Pecos River, at or near the mouth of Toyah Creek; thence to Fort Clarke, on Las Moras Creek; thence to Fort Duncan, on the Rio Grande; thence down the Rio Grande, via Fort McIntosh and Ringgold's Barracks, to Brownsville, so as to connect the military posts which are now, or may hereafter be, established on said line with the military headquarters of said district; and that the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

In pursuance of this policy, in 1874 $100,000 was appropriated for this purpose. The appropriation bill of 1875 provided—

For completing the construction and for maintenance and use of military telegraph lines on the Indian and Mexican frontiers, and for the connection of military posts and stations, for the better protection of immigration and the frontier settlements from depredations, especially in the State of Texas, the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the Indian Territory, $88,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay the expenses of operating and keeping in repair the said telegraph lines out of any money received for dispatches sent over said lines; any balance remaining after the payment of such expenses to be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt; the money received in any one fiscal year to be used only in payment for the expenses of that year.

Mr. RANDALL obtained the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I would ask if the House would not give me five minutes more to explain this matter, as I look on it as one of very great moment to our State.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no estimate for this expenditure.

Mr. REAGAN. O, the gentleman is mistaken. I hold here the estimates for this service.

Mr. HOLMAN. On what page of the Book of Estimates is it?

Mr. REAGAN. The estimate will be found at the bottom of page 152, and is as follows:

For the construction and continuing the construction, maintenance, and use of military telegraph lines on Indian and Mexican frontiers, and for the connection of military posts and stations, for the better protection of immigration and the frontier settlements from depredations, especially in the State of Texas, the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the Indian Territory, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875.

I should be very glad if the gentleman would allow me two or three minutes more time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes of my time.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to say as well as I can in that brief period that greater security has been given to the lives and property of the people upon the frontier since the construction of these telegraph lines than we have experienced on that frontier for the last twenty-odd years.

It will at once be seen how this was brought about. Heretofore, before these lines were established, the frontier posts were remote from each other and extended over a long frontier. The Indians could pass down between them, and the first that was known would be their striking the settlements and murdering and capturing the people and taking away their property. The value and importance of these lines of telegraph which have been established are fully realized and recognized by the Secretary of War and the General of the Army. A small force is needed for the protection of the operators, and they are able to communicate intelligence from any point when the Indians have passed the line at any given point. That fact is communicated to all the posts on the frontier and to military headquarters. This being done, pursuit is ordered as the Indians come in, and they are placed at that disadvantage. Formerly the pursuit was not made until the damage had been done, and then the troops pursued the Indians after the Indians had committed their depredations. This system places the Indians in the power of the military authorities and they realize that fact, and their realization of that fact gives great protection to the people.

Besides that, I desire the House to understand that this is a measure of economy worth hundreds of thousands and possibly millions to the Government by enabling a given number of troops to be so much more efficient and give so much more protection to the settlers than would be possible if they did not have means of telegraphic communication.

Mr. HOLMAN. After appropriating as we have $188,000 for this purpose, it seems a little strange that $45,000 more should be asked. There has been appropriated $188,000 for the purpose of establishing telegraph lines in the State of Texas: $100,000 year before last and $88,000 last year.

Mr. REAGAN. My colleague [Mr. HANCOCK] has explained that a portion of these lines have yet to be constructed. After these lines are completed it will require an additional appropriation for operators, chemicals, instruments, &c.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will it require $45,000 for that?

Mr. REAGAN. It has been explained by my colleague that a portion of these lines are not yet built.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has expired.

Mr. MILLS. I move to strike out the last word, in order to have an opportunity to state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that, when this proposition was reported to the House two years ago by the Committee on Indian Affairs, he will remember that the committee reported the sum of $200,000 as necessary for establishing this telegraph line. It was said by gentlemen on this floor that the line could be built for $100,000; and Mr. Giddings, who was then representing the State of Texas, on the Committee on Indian Affairs, consented to cut down the appropriation to $100,000, upon the assurance of gentlemen in the House that if that was not a sufficient amount to establish the telegraph line then an additional amount would be appropriated at a subsequent session of Congress. It turned out that the Committee on Indian Affairs was correct in their estimate, and that $100,000 was not a sufficient amount to accomplish the purpose. I hope the Committee of the Whole will adopt the amendment of my colleague [Mr. HANCOCK] and appropriate the additional amount now asked.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I beg leave to add a word or two to what has been said by my colleagues on this subject, and I desire especially the attention of the members of the Committee on Appropriations to the statement I propose to make. In the establishment of this telegraph line the stations are made at the military posts, a long distance apart.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the distance?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. In some cases it is a hundred miles, in others as much as one hundred and fifty miles. If this telegraph line is to be of use in defending the country or for protecting the people, there must be intermediate stations established. I will give to the House one or two instances of Indian depredations that took place before this line was established. Had the line then been in existence the Indians might have been captured or their depredations prevented.

In one instance the Indians from the Fort Sill reservation penetrated into the State over two hundred miles from their reservation until they reached densely-populated counties, and even into the streets of a county town. They committed their depredations in broad daylight, killed a number of persons, captured women and children, and a large number of horses, and escaped before their presence in the country was known to the military. Had there been a telegraphic line at that time and stations at points between Denison and Fort Richardson, a distance of over one hundred miles, the military could have been notified at Fort Sill and at Fort Richardson of the presence of the Indians in the country, and they could have been intercepted before they returned.

And so it is along the whole frontier. From Brownsville to Fort Davis, on the Rio Grande, the telegraph runs a distance of at least five hundred miles, and there should be not less than fifty stations between those two points. As it is there are but three or four. That line of five hundred miles extends up and down the Rio Grande, and is subjected to incursions by Mexican banditti and the Seminole Indians, who have taken refuge in Mexico. During this last month the Seminole Indians as well as the Mexican raiders have made incursions into Texas. If there were telegraph stations every fifteen or twenty miles along that line it would be impossible for them to come in, commit their depredations, and return without being intercepted by the military.

The observation made by my colleague [Mr. REAGAN] that this is a measure of economy is undoubtedly correct. If these telegraph stations were established and kept up, these marauders would be so continually intercepted, in consequence of information conveyed from point to point of their presence, that their depredations would cease, the people of Texas would be protected, their property preserved, and many hundreds of thousands of dollars saved to the Government which cannot now be saved unless you make this telegraphic line thoroughly effective.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK; and upon a division there were ayes 93, noes not counted.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope not.

Mr. HANCOCK. I desire to offer another amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer an amendment.

The motion that the committee rise was not agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK. In order to complete the amendment which has just been adopted I offer the following:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to detail from the enlisted force of the Army such number of men, not to exceed one hundred, as may be necessary to maintain and operate, under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer, the United States military telegraph lines in Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, California, and the Indian Territory.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that. It is just what I expected would be the result. That amendment will involve an expense of $200,000.

Mr. HANCOCK. It will not involve an expense of a single dollar; but as it seems to be objected to I will withdraw it.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following to come in as an additional paragraph:

To pay George W. Green, contestee, expenses in contested-election case of Green vs. Van Wyck, fourteenth district of New York, Forty-first Congress, $3,000.

Mr. PAGE. Was not that ruled out the other day on a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It was ruled out by the Chair, who at that time did not know that no points of order had been reserved upon this bill when it was committed to the Committee of the Whole. After that fact was ascertained the Chair held, and he was supported unanimously by the Committee of the Whole, that it would not have been ruled out of order had that fact been known at the time.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

Mr. CASWELL. I move to amend by increasing the appropriation for the Signal Office in the War Department from $300,000 to $400,000. I can give this House no new information upon this subject. We probably all understand the great importance of the Signal Service. The amendment proposed does not reach the amount recommended by the Superintendent. I had hoped that we might have a station established in the university at the capital of my State; and I had encouragement to that effect, provided the proper amount could be appropriated for maintaining the Signal Service. This is an institution that ought to be encouraged and strengthened rather than weakened. But I am told that if the bill should pass in its present form, nearly thirty of the present signal stations must be discontinued. Hence I move to amend to increase the appropriation to $400,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of costs and charges of State penitentiaries, for the care, clothing, maintenance, and medical attendance of United States military convicts confined in them, $40,000.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read the following:

For workshops for the United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth, $60,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. No point of order can lie against it. These buildings are now in progress.

Mr. RANDALL. My point of order is that this is an expenditure not provided for by law.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. It is contemplated by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. This military prison of the United States has been located at Fort Leavenworth. Formerly when soldiers were convicted of offenses they were confined—often with robbers and murderers—in the penitentiaries of the different States. Some years ago Congress provided for this military prison in which soldiers should not be confined with criminals. Appropriations have been made for this institution; and the buildings are now progressing.

The appropriation proposed in my amendment is required under estimates made by officers of the Army now detailed to superintend the completion of this prison. They have made this estimate for workshops, because at present men are confined in iron cells where their time cannot be occupied for the benefit of the public.

The law contemplates the completion of this building; and this appropriation is in accordance with the estimates and in pursuance of the law under which the institution has been established. I submit, therefore, that the point of order cannot lie. I say that the law contemplates the existence of this prison, and it is indispensable that these workshops should be completed.

Mr. RANDALL. In order to save time I withdraw my point of order. Let the committee decide on the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to, there being ayes 24, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Surveys for military defenses: For military surveys and reconnaissances by the engineer officers attached to the various headquarters of military divisions and departments, and for the construction and publication of maps for use of the War Department and the Army, the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, is hereby continued and made available for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read the words "this purpose," and inserting the words "said coast defenses."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For publication of the official records of the rebellion, both of the Union and confederate armies, $40,000; to be paid to persons only who are not otherwise employed by the Government: Provided, That hereafter no person in the employ of the Government of the United States, or of any department thereof, or of the District of Columbia, shall hold two places of honor, trust, emolument, or salary: And provided also, That no officer, clerk, or employé of Congress shall hold any other office of honor, trust, emolument, or salary while receiving pay from the Senate or House of Representatives.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the two provisos. I think their effect is much more comprehensive than was intended by the gentleman from Pennsylvania when they were framed. They would prevent any Army officer or other officer of the Government from holding any position of trust; for instance, in our benevolent institutions, where there are now many such officers. These provisions would even prevent a member of Congress from holding a position of honor in those institutions; they would even prevent the appointment of a member of Congress as a visitor to West Point or the Naval Academy. I think these provisions are much more comprehensive than they were intended to be by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I think there has been great abuse in the heaping of several offices upon one man.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] whether these provisions would not also prevent the appointment of members of Congress as regents of the Smithsonian Institution?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not.

Mr. FOSTER. If the provisos be limited to apply only to the appropriation made in this paragraph that will be well enough.

Mr. RANDALL. There are men known to hold four offices in this District.

Mr. STEELE. Certainly this cannot apply to members of Congress. They are not "in the employ of the Government of the United States."

Mr. RANDALL. My object is a plain one.

Mr. FOSTER. I know what the gentleman intends, but I think the language is much too comprehensive.

Mr. SEELYE. I suggest that the words "honor, trust" be struck out.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; let those words be struck out and the word "profit" inserted. Let the language be, "profit, emolument, or salary."

Mr. KASSON. I hardly think that will accomplish the object intended. Traveling expenses are allowed to visitors to West Point.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no profit in that.

Mr. KASSON. It is "emolument." Say, "to which salaries are attached."

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest permission be given to the gentleman to draw up a substitute for this provision.

Mr. RANDALL. To which salaries or profits may be attached.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us pass it over for the present, so the gentleman from Pennsylvania can arrange it.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to modify the provision so it will read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter no person in the employ of the Government of the United States, or of any department thereof, or of the District of Columbia, shall hold two places of profit, emolument, or salary: And provided also, That no officer, clerk, or employé of Congress shall hold any other office of profit, emolument, or salary while receiving pay from the Senate or House of Representatives.

Mr. FOSTER. I renew my motion to strike out these provisos.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question first recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to amend what is proposed to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER'S motion to strike out was disagreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move after line 929 to insert the following——

Mr. CONGER. Before that amendment is read I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that we have already provided in this bill for certain officers who may hold two offices and may have the salaries provided for in the District of Columbia under this bill. The provisions, then, which have just been passed are in violation of previous provisions on page 10.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to add the words, then, to the proviso "except as authorized by this act."

Mr. CONGER. But there are other laws beside this.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the only one applying to this District.

Mr. CONGER. The very bill we are acting upon provides for the holding of two offices by the same person, and these provisos are directly in violation of those preceding provisions of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to add the words "except as authorized by this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to insert after line 929 the following as a new paragraph:

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing the medical and surgical history of the war the unexpended balance of appropriation made by the act of June 8, 1872, and re-appropriated January 23, 1874, is hereby continued and rendered available, and the Surgeon-General is hereby authorized to continue on duty in his Office the acting assistant surgeons now employed on said history.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand the sum re-appropriated by this provision is about $20,000, and I presume there will be no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I move after line 929 to insert the following:

To authorize the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay Theodore T. Davidson for thirteen days' service as clerk of the Committee on Patents at $4 per day, $52.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that amendment should be inserted in a different place.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I move, then, that it be inserted in line 73.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so inserted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Support of National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers: For current expenses, including construction and repairs, namely, for Central branch, Eastern branch, Northwestern branch, Southern branch, and for out-door relief and incidental expenses, $118,733.44, in addition to the unexpended balance of former appropriations, which is hereby continued and made available for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to add the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

To aid in the completion of the soldier's monument at the Central branch of the National Military Home, $2,000.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I think there will be no objection by the committee to the acceptance of this amendment. This is a monument which has been commenced and partially built by the soldiers themselves out of their pension money, and it is located and situated on the property of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. We have now got down to the Interior Department, and I hope we will take a recess.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it due to the House to give it the choice of proceeding now with the balance of the bill, which will take an hour or probably a little more than an hour, or taking a recess.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Let us take a recess.

Mr. RANDALL. To test the sense of the committee whether we shall take a recess or go on with the bill, I make the motion that the committee now rise, and those who desire a recess will vote "aye," and those who wish to remain and finish the bill before adjourning will vote "no."

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly arose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to give notice that there will be a vote on this bill to-night, so gentlemen may come and thereby vote without being inconveniently disturbed if they do not come.

Mr. RUSK. How is that?

Mr. RANDALL. By a call of the House.

Mr. RUSK. I ask leave of absence. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the chairman if we finish this bill tonight whether he will have any objection to having an adjournment until Monday next?

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say to the House I think we had better have a session to-morrow. It may be of short duration, but it is absolutely indispensable. I do not think there ought to be an adjournment on account of the convention.

Mr. CONGER. I think not; but there are a great many members who have Department business, and we have not had a Saturday for a long time.

Mr. RANDALL. There is an important election, I may as well state, to take place to-morrow. The present Speaker pro tempore will be absent, and it will be necessary to elect a Speaker pro tempore in his stead, and we must meet for that purpose. We may agree there shall be no other business to-morrow except what I have stated.

Mr. RUSK. Let us go on now.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say that there is a good deal of unobjectionable business which can be disposed of during Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. And although a good many members will not be present, I think the public business is so pressing that there should not be an adjournment. There will be quite a number of enrolled bills. The conference committees are meeting and may be able to report. If there are any points of dispute where a record or a quorum is necessary, they can be postponed until later in the week.

THOMAS L. HOWARD.

Mr. GLOVER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3766) for the relief of Thomas L. Howard, of Lewis County, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3375) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and ask for a committee of conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. WHITTHORNE, and Mr. HALE.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was given as follows:

To Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, indefinitely.

To Mr. LEVY for ten days.

To Mr. HOSKINS for two weeks.

To Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, until July 3.

To Mr. HENDERSON for four days.

To Mr. GLOVER for fifteen days from Monday next.

To Mr. WOOD, of New York, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. SINNICKSON for five days on account of death in his family.

To Mr. HUBBELL until Monday from six o'clock this evening.

To Mr. WILLIS until July 6.

To Mr. LE MOYNE until July 6.

To Mr. LANDERS, of Connecticut, for ten days from Monday.

To Mr. MACDOUGALL for eight days.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at eight o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3375) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SARGENT, Mr. CRAGIN, and Mr. WITHERS as conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRINTING OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I offer the following resolution, and ask its adoption:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be, and they are hereby, authorized to print all the testimony taken by said committee touching all matters under investigation before said committee under the House resolution of January 14, 1876.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will not object if the committee will agree to strike out all hearsay. Otherwise I do. I have sat for six weeks almost every day on an investigating committee, and we agreed, if it should take four days a week, that everything in the shape of hearsay shall be stricken out before we report it.

Mr. CAULFIELD. There is nothing I think in the shape of hearsay evidence to be published under this resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman state on his responsibility that the evidence contains nothing in the shape of hearsay?

Mr. CAULFIELD. I cannot do that. There is a good deal of testimony in what is known as the Davenport case, and in regard to clerks, marshals, &c., throughout the States and Territories of the country.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman and his committee will arrange that all hearsay shall be stricken out I will not object. It is murder to bring up such things and print them as testimony.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Let me say this to the gentleman from Iowa: I do not remember all the vast amount of testimony that has been taken before the committee. But A B comes before the committee and says that C D knows a certain fact. C D is brought before the committee, and he confirms that statement. Does the gentleman want A B's testimony stricken out? Certainly not. I would not consent to anything of the kind.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Let it be printed, and then it can be taken for what it is worth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa insists on his objection, and the resolution is not before the House.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Let me understand the gentleman's position. Does he intend to prevent testimony taken before the committee from being published on a mere technical objection?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If only such evidence is printed as would be received in a court, I do not object to its being printed.

Mr. CAULFIELD. How can I give that assurance with such a vast amount of testimony taken?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then it is not fair to print it.

Mr. CAULFIELD. It is fair to print it; and if the gentleman then chooses to examine it and objects to any portion of it thereafter, he may do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution at this time?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I move to refer it to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the House that the Journal of yesterday shall now be read?

Mr. RANDALL. The Journal of yesterday ought to be read.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3767) to provide for paying certain moneys to the Pottawatomie Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. TERRY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) in relation to the managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that the following persons are appointed managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers: Colonel L. A. Harris, of Ohio; Major-General Richard Coulter, of Pennsylvania; Major-General STEPHEN A. HURLBUT, of Illinois, in the places of Hon. Lewis B. Gunckel, of Ohio; Major-General James S. Negley, of Pennsylvania, and Major-General John S. Cavender, of Missouri, whose terms expired on the 9th of June, 1876.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TERRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEAM FOG-SIGNAL AT FARALLON, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PIPER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3768) authorizing the construction of a steam fog-signal at the South Farallon Island, California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair) on the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment which has been adopted which relates to the pay of George W. Green, contestant, put in its appropriate place in the bill.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I offer the following amendment as an additional paragraph to come in after line 942:

For work necessary for the protection of the river bank at Fort Brown, in Texas, against the encroachment of the Rio Grande, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the proper officer of the Engineer Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have inserted in the RECORD the reasons for this appropriation.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I ask the Clerk to read a letter from the Secretary of the Interior which I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

I would respectfully call attention to the river bank in front of this depot. The danger from high water is very great. The different officers of the Quartermaster's Department stationed here for the past five or six years have done all that lay in their power, by the use of fascines, piles, (such as they could get,) rubbish, stones, &c., to protect the bank from washing away. Last season the buildings were in great danger, and in case of very high water this season may again be placed in jeopardy.

I think an appropriation should be asked for the special purpose of piling and filling in along the entire front of the depot buildings. The piles should be large and long, to reach the solid ground below the quicksand. Unless some action is taken for the protection of the bank, the public buildings and property will always be in danger during the season of freshets. The building occupied by Lieutenant Eskridge was very near being washed in last season during the high water; he had his furniture all packed ready for a move at any moment. The banks disappear very rapidly when they once begin to cut away.

These public buildings at this depot are too valuable and have cost too large an amount of money in their construction to risk their destruction, when a small appropriation would render them perfectly safe.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I can explain this whole matter in a few words. The Government buildings at Fort Brown are erected in a bend of the Rio Grande. The Rio Grande in many places changes its channel in times when the waters are high and cuts off bends sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other.

There is imminent danger that this bend upon which these Government buildings are situated will be cut off, unless some protective works are placed along its banks which will arrest the washing of the river. General Humphreys sent an engineer officer there, and his report and estimate have been made; he recommends an appropriation of $10,000 for these necessary works.

I saw the Quartermaster-General yesterday, and he told me that the buildings at this point now in use could not be replaced for less than $150,000; they are solid brick buildings, including a hospital, a commissary building, a building for the storage of quartermaster's stores, and solid barracks for the officers and soldiers at the post. He also stated that in all human probability that post would continue to be necessary and indeed would be permanent, inasmuch as it is situated on our national boundary; and he thinks that this small appropriation should be made to save the valuable property. The buildings are erected about the neck of the bend and about where the new channel would form in case the river would cut through, so that they are in danger of being utterly destroyed.

Mr. RANDALL. This amount would be enough to secure these buildings permanently?

Mr. SCHLEICHER. It would, according to the report.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say that there has been about $2,000,000 expended at Fort Brown and on the buildings mentioned by my colleague and on the national cemetery near it, and the waters of the river now threaten to cut through the bend of the river and through these buildings and cut off not only the fort, but also the national cemetery located there.

My information is that $2,000,000 have been expended there. There is another matter in relation to the position of the fort at this point. By the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo the channel of the Rio Grande is made the boundary line between the two Governments, and in case it should be cut off the question might arise as to the ownership of this property, and whether the boundary should follow the old channel or the new channel of the river. This appropriation is urged for the preservation of the fort and to save the proprietorship of the land on which it is situated from being disputed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following amendment:

To pay John Titus, late chief justice of Arizona Territory, $652.80, the balance of salary due him.

John Titus, commissioned as chief justice of Arizona Territory, expired April 17, 1874. His successor qualified July 6, 1874. He (Titus) was paid to expiration of commission, April 17, 1874, but not to the end of the time he was acting, July 6, 1874, for which no appropriation was made. He ought now to be paid at the rate of $3,000 per annum from April 17, 1874, to July 6, 1874—eighty days.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANNING. I offer the following amendment to come in after the last amendment adopted:

For every purpose necessary to the continuation of the geographical surveys of the Territories of the United States west of the one-hundredth meridian, under the War Department, for field and office work, and for the preparation, engraving, and printing the plates and atlas-sheets, $50,000.

I promised to offer this amendment, and I want to say just one word to the committee concerning it.

Mr. RANDALL. Before the gentleman begins I desire to reserve any point of order upon it.

Mr. BANNING. This amendment is intended to perpetuate the survey of Lieutenant Wheeler, which has been conducted for several years, and which is one of the best, if not the best, that we have. I see that $60,000 is given by the Committee on Appropriations for the Hayden survey and $30,000 for the Powell survey, while for some reason unknown to me the Wheeler survey is left out. Some members of the House know more what it is than I do myself; but I hope the appropriation may be made.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations were in some doubt whether they would make any appropriation at this time for any of these surveys, in view of the present condition of the Treasury. But finally they concluded to allow appropriations for those surveys that would not interfere with the regular duties of the Engineer Corps of the Army. After some consideration it was determined that the appropriations should be confined to the surveys of Messrs. Hayden and Powell.

Mr. BANNING. One word further. In keeping up this Wheeler survey we pay nothing to the officer more than he now receives; he is now an officer of the Army and under pay. In regard to the other surveys, we will be compelled to pay, and therefore it would be more economical to keep up this survey rather than the others.

Mr. RANDALL. I think there are one hundred and sixty people from civil life employed in the Engineer Corps, and we think they can very properly be dispensed with.

Mr. HURLBUT. I hope the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. BANNING] will be favorably considered by the House, for the reason that this work is part of the great system of topographical survey of our country. It has been elaborately prepared; nearly all of the cost and expenditure have been made to obtain the materials of the work, and it looks to be anything but economical to break it up at this time and throw it over.

Every dollar of the appropriations for this purpose that has been laid out on these three surveys has been more than repaid to this country long since. Discoveries have been made of valuable minerals, of lines of travel, of great commercial advantage to the entire country, which have led to the filling up of our Territories by settlements. As a matter of fact, through these surveys we are preparing the best possible guarantee against Indian hostilities on the frontier, by introducing a cordon of pioneer settlements, following in the wake of these surveys, to take up the good agricultural lands and the rich mining regions discovered so as to take that burden off the Government. I hope there will be no objection to sustaining not only this survey but the other surveys conducted under the War Department.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I hope this amendment will prevail. I had occasion to examine this subject as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. This survey of Major Wheeler is entirely different from the others; it is a geographical survey of the country, and useful as a guide to Army operations and for other purposes. I was not present when this bill was considered in full committee, and do not know why this appropriation was left out. I think this amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. WARREN. I move a pro forma amendment to strike out the last word. The gentlemen upon the Committee on Appropiations will bear me witness that I have supported their efforts to reduce expenditures on almost every occasion. I feel constrained, however, to vote for this amendment. I do it with reluctance, seeing that they oppose it, and I wish they might withdraw their objection and allow it to pass.

I think it is known to every man who takes an interest in the progress of the scientific survey of our western country that the maps of the Wheeler expedition are the most valuable maps of this country that have ever been produced. It so happened—and that is my excuse for troubling the House for a moment—that as I came up here to-night I fell in with an old friend of mine, who is well known to gentlemen from Chicago and whose name is regarded with great respect in the whole country. We fell into conversation in reference to this very matter. He communicated to me this fact, which I deemed it important to state to the House; the most eminent geographer in the world—I think his name is Petermann, of Germany, though I may not have the name correctly—is now preparing an atlas covering all the countries of the world, one that will be the most elaborate and perfect of the kind that has ever been produced. This gentleman stated to me to-night that Petermann uses Wheeler's maps as his authority, and as the best maps of the portion of the United States to which they apply that have ever been made.

It seems to me that as a Congress we can do no better work for the whole people of the country than to provide them with the most accurate knowledge of all the facts connected with the western portions of our country. If we ever return to a state of prosperity, as we hope to do, we expect an immigration to this country greater than ever before. Those who may come here ought to be able to find out the positive facts, the last bottom facts, in regard to the country, in order that they may know where are the best lands for them to settle upon, that they may avoid the sterile hills of New England and be able to find most readily the valuable agricultural and timber lands of the West.

It seems to me that, considering how very small this appropriation is, how vast the results that have been produced, we should make the greatest mistake in the world if we stopped the course of investigation which has been pursued of late years and which has been so very valuable, much more so, considering the amount of money expended, than the results of any other expenditure in which we have engaged.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have had occasion to examine the results of the work of Lieutenant Wheeler, and I am satisfied that it should be continued. He has in his employ quite a number of scientific gentlemen whose services must of course be lost to the Government if this work be abandoned. Besides that, he has many valuable instruments which have been constructed especially for this work under the direction of the Department here. From all my information upon this subject, I believe that the amount here proposed should be appropriated. Last year when $120,000 was asked for, a subcommittee to whom the matter was referred reported to the main committee in favor of appropriating $50,000. It seems to me this amount ought now to be appropriated, as it will be large enough to continue the work and preserve the present corps of skilled men until such time as we can afford to be more liberal.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BANNING, there were—ayes 69, noes 43.

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it in order now to move to strike out $50,000 and insert $30,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The result of the vote has not been announced.

Mr RANDALL. Thirty thousand dollars is the same amount which we give Professor Powell. If this be not assented to, I must resist the amendment and ask a vote upon it in the House.

Mr. BANNING. I will accept $30,000.

Several MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. RANDALL. Then we shall have a vote upon it in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BANNING were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported ayes 81, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall ask a vote in the House upon this amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I move to amend by inserting the following, as an additional paragraph, after line 942:

For workshops for the military prison, $30,000.

I want to appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. RANDALL. Why not make it $130,000? [Laughter.]

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. The estimate was $120,000. I wish to make a statement on this subject to which the chairman of the committee has not before listened.

Here are some seven hundred military prisoners confined in cells of bar-iron six feet by ten. In the construction of the prison it was the design that the prisoners should be worked. This amendment provides the means of working them. In behalf of economy, in behalf of morals, I appeal to gentlemen to adopt the amendment. I have fixed the very smallest amount that can possibly meet the necessities of the case. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not antagonize the proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall ask to have it voted down; that is all.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Very well; I have done my duty.

Mr. RANDALL. We have already made an appropriation for this prison.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I move to amend by inserting the following as a new paragraph:

Black Hills survey, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the expenses of the survey of the Black Hills country under Professor W. P. Jenney, including the expenses incident to the preparation of the final report.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to inquire whether this is to meet expenditures already made, or at least indebtedness assumed? We ought to pay our bills, but I do not think that survey should be continued.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I ask the Clerk to read a letter on this subject from the Secretary of the Interior.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 14, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of report, dated the 13th instant, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the subject of the survey of the so-called Black Hills by Professor Walter P. Jenney, engineer of mines, &c., under direction of this Department, dated March 26, 1875.

As the country known as the Black Hills is within the area reserved to the Sioux Indians by treaty stipulation, and any invasion of it by unauthorized parties might have occasioned serious difficulty with these warlike tribes, it seemed not only expedient, but highly necessary, in view of the excited state of the country consequent upon the statements in circulation through the medium of the press and otherwise, that the truth or falsity of the reports relative to the mineral wealth of that region should be ascertained in order that, in the event of required legislation, the subject might be understandingly presented to Congress for its early action.

The work of the survey has been thoroughly executed, and its necessity amply demonstrated, but no fund exists applicable to the payment of the expenses incident thereto. I therefore respectfully present an estimate of appropriation for $25,000, submitted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the purpose named, together with the copies of correspondence noted in his report, before referred to, and earnestly recommend the subject to the favorable consideration of Congress.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. CHANDLER, Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, under the authority of the President this survey was undertaken. The Secretary of the Interior was of opinion that the beneficial object (the Indian fund) could be used to defray the expenses of the expedition. After as much as $11,000 of that fund had been so expended, the Second Auditor refused longer to certify the accounts of the expedition to the Second Comptroller, upon the ground that this work was in the nature of an inquiry or commission, and that there must be a special provision of law to pay for it. Since that time, the 3d of December last, the expenses of the expedition have amounted to $14,000 more. The work has been completed, and this is a proposition to appropriate $25,000; $11,000 for the purpose of making up the amount which has been withdrawn from the beneficial object, (the Indian fund,) and $14,000 to pay the balance of the expense incurred in the expedition which has never been settled from any quarter.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has there been any authority for the survey at all—any legal authority for anything that has been done?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, without looking into the question, whether there was any authority of law, certainly, after contracts have been made and the survey performed, the work ought to be paid for.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. The Secretary of the Interior very properly states in that communication to the House that there is no fund applicable to the payment of this claim, and I suppose the House is well informed that this service was rendered, if rendered at all—and I presume it was—in violation of law. The Secretary of the Interior, who authorized this survey to be made, did it in the face of positive law.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. Point to the law.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a general law prohibiting it.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a law prohibiting any head of Department entering into contract on the part of the Government, unless appropriation is made for that purpose. But there is another provision of the statute going further than that intending to prevent heads of Departments incurring against the Government pecuniary liabilities, unless by authority of the law-making power.

This survey, as gentlemen well informed on the subject well know, traveled over the very track of surveys for which the Government had already paid. If it is thought proper, when the head of a Department assumes to himself powers not possessed by him under the law of the land, to enter upon contracts; if it is thought proper to appropriate money to carry such a contract into effect, here then is a proper case for the exercise of such discretion on the part of Congress.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the section to which I presume he alludes. It is section 3681 of the Revised Statutes, enacted August 26, 1842, which provides that no accounting or disbursing officer of the Government shall allow or pay any account or charge whatever growing out of or in any way connected with any commission or inquiry until a special appropriation shall be made by law. It does not prohibit the making of any inquiry.

Mr. HOLMAN. Our statutes hedge round in every direction the public Treasury against this kind of assault. When the gentleman from the State of Kansas proposed, in the interest of a local industry, an appropriation of money for the purpose of erecting certain buildings for workshops, and that was voted down in the interest of economy, and yet these vast sums are voted for purposes not demanded by the public service, certainly the country must look with astonishment at such proceeding, and will demand that Congress shall carry out some of the pledges of retrenchment so freely made of late years.

These measures we are now voting on are those to which the doctrine of retrenchment could well be applied. If the Secretary of the Interior has made a contract with a citizen and a liability of this amount has been incurred, Congress may well consider whether they should appropriate money to meet such demand upon the Treasury. Let it at least do it with some condemnation of the act by which the law has been violated in the making of such a contract. For myself, I do not think this appropriation should be made.

As long as Congress goes on year after year appropriating money for every such work when there is plausible ground presented for the appropriation, violations of law which reach the public Treasury will of course occur and the citizen will not inquire carefully into the powers of the heads of Departments to enter into contracts which seek to bind the Government.

It is possible, sir, we shall be in a condition when this claim shall be paid, at least to the amount of $11,000, but for one, I do not propose in a case like this to appropriate money, at least without protest, without a mild censure of that kind of defiance of law constantly displayed by which unlawfully the funds of this nation and the revenue of the people are squandered.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I do not care how much censure the gentleman from Indiana or this House may pass upon the Secretary of the Interior who entered into this contract by which citizens of this country, in no way responsible, have been induced to spend their time and their money in the performance of the service they have rendered, and the money they have expended from their own pockets in performing a duty they were contracted with and asked to perform on behalf of this Government.

These gentleman who are interested in this matter were not applicants for this business. They did not come to Congress log-rolling for an appropriation. This gentleman was connected with Columbia College, in New York, and the Interior Department, desiring to have a survey of this country made, sought his services. And in that connection I beg to assure my friend from Indiana that he is mistaken when he says that country had ever been surveyed before. There never had been a survey of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. No portion of it?

Mr. STEELE. No portion of it. The only survey of that country that ever had been made was by Warren, and entirely to the south of this region, and the survey by Maynadier & Reynolds, entirely to the north of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have been assured that Professor Hayden surveyed a portion of the very ground over which this survey was made. I have been so assured.

Mr. STEELE. He never went over this ground. Now the Secretary of the Interior sent to Professor Barnard, the president of Columbia College, and requested him to designate a man to do the work, which he did. He came on and did the work, and he has expended his own money in doing it.

The Secretary of the Interior perhaps was to blame in not knowing what the law was. But if the Secretary of the Interior did not know what the law was, do you expect to hold the private citizen responsible for not knowing what the law was? He came on here; he went out there; he has performed this duty. And not only did the Secretary of the Interior not know that this was the law, but your auditing officers in the Treasury did not know it was the law until $9,000 had been paid. Now there is only to be paid thirteen or fourteen thousand dollars of this amount. Part of the money has actually been expended. But because it was irregularly expended it is necessary to make an appropriation to imburse the Treasury for the money that has gone out of it. This survey was done economically and cheaply. More work was done for the amount of money expended than ever was done by any surveying party that went out under the auspices of the United States Government. It is a just claim, and I hope this Congress will do these young men, who are in no way to blame for the irregularity of the Department, the justice of paying them the money which is justly due them.

Mr. FORT. I do not wish to make any speech, but, having been a member of the committee which investigated this matter somewhat, I desire simply to state a few facts as I have learned them. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says that this expenditure of money was made without authority of law. I shall state what I understand to be the fact; and I think it comes within the ordinary rules of the law. The Administration, if you please, had in contemplation the acquiring of this very territory from the Indian tribes by treaty, and under the treaty-making power it was proper to make this expenditure to ascertain what the property was worth which the treaty proposed to acquire. In pursuance of that, as has been stated, they called in the services of scientific men to make a geological exploration, a scientific investigation of this country, in order to advise, if you please, the treaty-making power what the true value of this country was.

Now, I think, sir, after that had been done, and these parties having been called upon to render the service, and having rendered it in good faith, having been called by officers of the Government, and, as I claim, by the authority of the law, it is our duty to pay them. It has been stated that this money is expended already. That is true, as I understand it, except it may be that some of the party who accompanied the survey have not yet been paid. But the services are rendered, and this is due either to those who have advanced the money or to those who have advanced their services. I think as a matter of good faith we ought to pay this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$25,000" and inserting "$14,000."

Mr. FORT. That will not do.

Mr. RANDALL. I will state my reason for offering this amendment. I condemn entirely this expenditure of money without authority of law. But there is a strong equity in the claim that the persons who were engaged in this service ought to be paid. They have, as I understand, been paid $11,000 out of the beneficiary Indian fund, which Secretary Delano used to that extent in violation of law for the purposes I have stated. The balance which is due to the parties who performed the labor and the duty in connection with this survey is $14,000; and I should recommend that that amount should be paid. But I do not think that we should augment, because of the act of Secretary Delano, performed without law, this appropriation. I am desirous and have always been desirous that these people should be paid. But this goes a little beyond what is due to them, and therefore I offer the amendment, and I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL] will accept it. It pays what is due to those who have an equitable claim and who supposed they were employed under due authority of law.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word.

I am a little surprised, Mr. Chairman, at the zeal of my friend from Indiana in attacking the present Secretary of the Interior in the manner he did.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did he make this contract?

Mr. CONGER. There is no reason for it in the world, and yet the gentleman mentions him by name.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did the present Secretary of the Interior make the contract?

Mr. CONGER. Not the present Secretary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not mention his name.

Mr. RANDALL. I mentioned the name of the Secretary who I understood made the contract.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Michigan must know I said the Secretary of the Interior stated there was no money with which to pay this claim, for the simple reason that the service was not performed according to law.

Mr. RANDALL. This contract was made by Mr. Delano.

Mr. CONGER. I decline to have all this taken out of my time.

The present Secretary of the Interior, finding that there had been this expenditure, and finding that the men had rendered this service, reports, as he should, to the Speaker of this House the facts, as any honorable gentleman should do, and calls the attention of the House to the fact that there is no appropriation for this service. But the contract was made long before he came into office. It was made under another Secretary, and the gentleman from Indiana should have known it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not do it.

Mr. CONGER. He should not have made this personal charge.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will not do me that injustice.

Mr. CONGER. Half of my time has been used up by these interruptions.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the fault of the Chair, for the Chair has made every effort to secure the gentleman from Michigan in his rights.

Mr. CONGER. I trust the Chair will do me the justice to extend my time so as to make up for these interruptions.

The present Secretary of the Interior cannot be charged with any wrong.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Michigan knows that there is no charge made against the present Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CONGER. And his letter is in accordance with law, calling the attention of the House to the fact that no such appropriation had been made and that such an appropriation ought to be made, and as every gentleman here of good, sound, honest judgment will admit should be made. Now we know that this service was rendered without authority of law; the Executive of the Government at the demand of thousands and thousands of the citizens of the country endeavored to negotiate for this Black Hills region of country. Gentlemen cannot have forgotten that there was not a paper throughout the length and breadth of the land but what wanted the Black Hills country taken full possession of; hundreds and thousands flocked to the Black Hills, immigration companies were formed against law and in spite of law, and they passed right through the military lines going to the Black Hills country in pursuit of gold, and the military force was not strong enough to restrain them from violating treaty obligations of the Government.

There was a time when the Government ought to have made proper preparations for a treaty to get possession of these hills. The Government failed to do that, and the energy of our citizens led them to force their way through the military lines for the purpose of taking possession of these lands To open these lands to the American people was what the Executive was trying to do in obedience to the universal demand of the whole American people, and in furtherance of that an investigation was necessary.

I defy gentlemen to find any case where previous to the annexation or purchasing of territory by the United States, in the case of Louisiana and Florida, there was not a large amount of money expended without authority of law preparatory to the treaties of annexation being made. The history of countries shows that; and the gentleman from Indiana, with his grand knowledge on all matters of governmental affairs, ought to know it, and not look to a humble member like myself to enlighten him on the subject.

Mr. CONGER. I had some one or two words more which I wanted to say, and which I should have had time to have said if I had not been subjected to so many interruptions.

Mr. SINGLETON. I think there are very grave objections to the amendment offered. In the first place, I understand that the Black Hills country was set apart for the benefit of the Indians. It was ascertained, or believed to have been ascertained, that gold had been found in that Territory, which made its acquisition very desirable. I undertake to say, from the history of the expedition, that when the Secretary of the Interior sent it out it was done as a matter of speculation; that this surveying expedition might spy out the rich gold regions and valuable placers, and when the negotiations for its cession had been successfully carried out the Secretary and his friends might avail themselves of the knowledge thus acquired, and take possession of these valuable parts of said territory.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman will allow me a suggestion. At the very time the expedition was sent out the Government was proposing to negotiate a treaty for the acquisition of this country, and this expedition was sent out there in order that the Government might have some knowledge of the value of the country they were going to negotiate for.

Mr. SINGLETON. The Government never asked for any such information. It was done at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior in order that he and his friends might ascertain how valuable the property there should prove to be and then use that knowledge for their own personal benefit. The thing was conceived in fraud, and executed in defiance of law, and now we are asked to indorse the fraud and pay the expenses of the expedition.

Now, the objections which I make to this amendment are these. In the first place, the expedition had no business in that territory, any more than it would have in the country of any foreign power. It belonged to the Indians, and they should have been permitted to enjoy the advantages of this discovery of gold, if there be gold there.

Again, we ought not to encourage these unlawful acts on the part of Government officials, of sending expeditions to explore regions of the country at vast expense, when under treaty-laws that country belongs to the Indians. If you vote this appropriation and establish this precedent, who can tell what the head of this or other Departments of the Government will do in the future, relying on the fact that all he has to do is to present his account for the expenses incurred in such expedition and that Congress, subservient to his purposes, will approve it? I repeat the statement, that I believe the whole thing was begun in fraud, and certainly carried on without authority of law, which high-handed acts ought not to be encouraged. For these reasons I oppose the amendment.

Mr. SEELYE. I join in all the mild protests, as they have been termed, against any unwarranted use of power by any Department of the Government; but I desire to call attention to two points which we should not ignore. The first is that the statute which it is supposed has been infringed is so obscure that the Second Auditor and the Second Comptroller of the Treasury paid $10,000 for the expenses of this expedition out of a fund which it was supposed was in the Treasury for such a purpose. The second point is that here is an important work quite desirable to have done, which has been done very well and quite economically, and for which payment certainly ought to be made; and as I understand the gentleman who offered the amendment is willing to accept the amendment of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I trust that as so amended it will receive the vote of the committee.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I will accept the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and modify my amendment so as to appropriate the sum of $14,000 to pay the balance due on account of the expedition.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not like the word "balance" exactly; it should be to pay the amount in full.

Mr. STEELE. I have an amendment to the amendment which I think will reach the object in view. It is to add to the amendment the following:

None of said money thus appropriated shall be used to re-imburse the Indian fund heretofore used for the purpose of those surveys.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I accept that amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was then adopted.

Mr. WALLING. I desire to offer an amendment changing the phraseology of the clause relating to the survey of the Colorado of the West and its tributaries. That clause now reads as follows:

For completing the survey of the Colorado of the West and its tributaries, by Professor J. W. Powell, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $30,000.

I move to change the phraseology of the first part of the clause so that it will read: "For the continuance of the geographical and geological survey of the Rocky Mountain region, by J. W. Powell," &c.

Mr. RANDALL. Put in the word "completion" instead of "continuance."

Mr. REAGAN. What is the reason for this change of phraseology?

Mr. WALLING. In order that the survey may be continued beyond the Colorado region and embrace the whole Rocky Mountain region.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend so that it will read: "For completing the survey," &c., which are the words used in the last appropriation of $25,000. I hope there will be no change of the phraseology of this paragraph. Let us some time or another bring these surveys to a close.

Mr. WALLING. The amendment is one from the committee itself, handed to me by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. What committee?

Mr. WALLING. Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. WALLING. I am not; it was handed to me by Mr. RANDALL, himself, within the last three minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend must allow me to know whether this is an amendment of the committee or not. It is only a suggestion of the chairman.

Mr. RANDALL. It was given to me in the handwriting of the clerk of the committee, and I suppose it was given to him by Mr. Powell himself.

Mr. WALLING. I said "the chairman of the committee." I do not go any further than that.

Mr. REAGAN. There ought to be some satisfactory reason given for changing the language of this paragraph. As it now stands there is some identification of the region to be surveyed; "the Colorado of the West and its tributaries." I cannot understand why this phraseology should be changed. The Colorado is a great river extending from Utah down into and through Arizona.

Mr. WALLING. I am willing to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and to substitute the word "completion" for "continuance," if that will carry through the amendment. It will then read:

For the completion of the geographical and geological survey of the Rocky Mountain region by J. W. Powell, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $30,000.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the vote is taken, allow me to say one word more. As the paragraph now stands it reads:

For completing the survey of the Colorado of the West and its tributaries, by Professor J. W. Powell, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $30,000.

The identity of this survey was given by the Department in its estimates, and by the Committee on Appropriations in reporting this paragraph. By the amendment which is proposed that identity is left out, and we are furnished with no reason for the change. The amendment appears to come here in the handwriting of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, but by whose inspiration or for what purpose or for what reason does not seem to be apparent to any one. As the paragraph was reported it contains an identification of the survey, and I trust it may stand.

Mr. RANDALL. I can tell the gentleman now about the amendment. The clerk of the committee informs me that Mr. Powell gave it to him and he brought it to me. I supposed that he brought it to me by authority.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. WALLING, as modified, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

Surveys of public lands:

For survey of the public lands and private land claims, $200,000: Provided, That the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended in such surveys as the public interest may require, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and at such rates as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, not exceeding the rate herein authorized: Provided, That no lands shall be surveyed under this appropriation except, first, those adapted to agriculture without artificial irrigation; second, irrigable lands or such as can be redeemed and for which there is sufficient accessible water for the reclamation and cultivation of the same not otherwise utilized or claimed; third, timber lands bearing timber of commercial value; fourth, coal lands containing coal of commercial value; fifth, exterior boundary of town sites; sixth, private land claims. The cost of such surveys shall not exceed $10 per mile for standard lines, $7 for township and $6 for section lines, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow for the survey of standard lines in heavily timbered land a sum not exceeding $12 a mile.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the last sentence, commencing, "The cost of such surveys shall not exceed," &c., and inserting in lieu thereof that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveying the public lands in California, at rates not exceeding $15 per linear mile for standard lines, $14 for township, and $12 for section lines, and for heavily timbered mountain lands at augmented rates, not exceeding $18 per linear mile for standard, $16 for township, and $14 for sectional lines, $70,000.

Mr. WALLING. I move to amend the paragraph by adding the following:

Provided, That the starting point for such surveys may be established by triangulation.

The reason for that amendment is that under the present law of surveys the initial point is to be on the standard line. This paragraph provides for surveying only that portion of the public lands that may be utilized to some advantage, and in order that only those lands may be properly surveyed this amendment is necessary.

Mr. PATTERSON. I hope that this amendment will not be adopted. It would destroy the whole existing system of Government surveys in the United States—a comprehensive system which has been the established law of the land for so many years. Instead of having a system of surveys under which as soon as the owner of the land or the person desiring to find it reads the paper he may go upon it knowing that it is the land he seeks, you will have nothing at all except a pile of rocks or something of that kind in the mountains or plains, without any initial or starting point. I hope that no such principle as that proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] will be tolerated for a single moment in connection with the survey of the public lands.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call attention for a moment to the provision of this paragraph. It is provided that the cost of these surveys shall not exceed $10 a mile for standard lines. I wish to call attention to the prices of surveying as fixed here and to ask members of the committee to allow their minds to revert to the prices established by law in the several States from which they come. If they will do this, they will remember that the average cost for surveying is about $3 a mile. What additional expense may be necessary in surveying what are termed "standard lines" I am not able to say.

Mr. PAGE. To what amendment is the gentleman from Texas speaking?

Mr. REAGAN. To the amendment of the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.]

Mr. PAGE. As the introducer of that amendment I claim the right to be heard upon it.

Mr. REAGAN. My speaking will not prevent the gentleman's being heard.

It seems to me that the price allowed in this bill for surveying is nearly twice what ought to be allowed. Then the amendment of the gentleman from California greatly increases that amount. By his amendment it would be $48 a section for the running of sections of land. It must be pretty fair land out in the plains or among the mountains that is worth $48 a section, besides all the other expenses connected with surveying these lands and bringing them into market.

As soon as the amendment offered by the gentleman from California is acted on, I shall, if it be not adopted, move to reduce the amount of compensation provided in the bill for surveying. I think it is extravagant and unreasonable, unsustained by our experience anywhere in this country. I speak from some personal knowledge, having been at one time for several years a practical surveyor. Why should the cost of surveying in California be more than anywhere else?

Mr. PAGE. The amount proposed in my amendment is the same that was appropriated last year.

Mr. REAGAN. The cost of labor and living is to-day no higher in California than in any other city in this Union, certainly not higher than in many of our western Territories.

Mr. PAGE. The amendment which I have offered proposes to appropriate $70,000 for surveying public lands in California, the same amount that was appropriated last year. The Committee on Appropriations have this year made an entire change in the manner of appropriating for the survey of the public lands. Instead of dividing the amount among the several States and Territories where the public lands exist, the committee have grouped it all together and made an appropriation of $200,000 where last year there was appropriated $684,000 for this purpose. My amendment contains all the provisions for the survey of township lines and town sites and for sectionizing that were contained in the law of the last Congress.

One word in reference to the amount proposed to be appropriated this year by the Committee on Appropriations for the survey of the public lands. If it is the object that this money shall be distributed pro rata among the different States, I presume that California would probably get $12,000 or $15,000. The report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for 1875 gives the amount of unsurveyed public lands in California as 79,000,000 acres. The amount paid into the Treasury of the United States from cash sales of the public lands in that State for the year ending June 30, 1875, was $656,003.27, more than as much again as was received from the remaining States and Territories united, the whole amount being $1,378,850.47. Therefore I am surprised that the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] whom I have always believed to be a friend of the settlers, and in favor, as he says, of giving "land to the landless and homes to the homeless," should have failed this year to secure an appropriation sufficient for the survey of public lands in California, whereby the money in the Treasury of the United States may be so largely increased.

But, sir, I have heard it said that the public lands have already been surveyed far in excess of settlement. That is not true. There are not fifty thousand acres of surveyed public lands in California to-day that are suitable for agricultural purposes. I defy contradiction of this statement. The provision of this bill specifying the kinds of land that shall be surveyed is very proper, and I hope it will be adopted; but to stop the survey of the public lands in California, to take away the inducements to immigration which our people so much desire, to refuse to throw into market those seventy-nine million acres of unsurveyed public lands—to deny the people the chance to purchase them and pay their money into the Treasury of the United States would be a most disastrous mistake.

On this question I speak for California. Other gentlemen on this floor have perhaps the same right to ask to have the appropriation increased for their localities; but I say that, California having paid into the Treasury in cash during the last fiscal year for public lands more by one-half than all the remaining States and Territories, it is no more than right that California should have a liberal appropriation for the survey of its lands.

Mr. PIPER. I will take the floor, and yield my time to my colleague, [Mr. PAGE.]

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, the committee provide that the cost of such surveys shall not exceed $10 per mile for standard lines, $7 for township, and $6 for section lines, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow for the survey of standard lines in heavily timbered land a sum not exceeding $12 per mile.

Now, it is very well understood I believe by the Committee on Public Lands at least, and should be by the Committee on Appropriations, that it costs almost a third more to survey these lands in the State of California than it does in any other State, at least, and much more than it does in many of the Territories. In the heavy-timber lands of California the means of traveling are expensive and the cost is great in getting provisions there, and it is well understood that labor is at least 25 per cent. higher in California in gold than labor on the Atlantic coast in greenbacks. Therefore I say it would be an act of injustice, and would render invalid and of no account this appropriation proposed by this committee should this proviso stand.

There are to-day, Mr. Chairman, in California some of the most beautiful timber lands on the continent of America. They have not been surveyed, and year by year they are being despoiled of their most valuable timber. Millions and millions of feet of lumber are cut off the public lands along the line of the Central Pacific Railroad and other localities, and the Government does not receive one single dollar therefor. Every man, under the laws of the United States, who trespasses upon those lands and cuts a stick of timber on the unsurveyed lands of the United States is liable to be indicted as a trespasser, and many of them are indicted in my own State and taken from the interior to San Francisco at heavy expense. I ask whether it is fair? I appeal to the judgment of the members of this House and ask them, with these facts in view which cannot be controverted, whether it is just and whether this appropriation of $200,000, to be divided between sixteen States and Territories, is sufficient to survey the public lands and throw them open to homestead and pre-emption entry?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WALLING. Mr. Chairman, the statements of the gentleman from California would perhaps mislead the House unless they are controverted. The Committee on Public Lands have agreed unanimously to this amount as all that is necessary for the survey of the public lands for the present year. It is $70,000 more than was expended in any one year prior to the war for four years, at a time when there was a rapid settlement of the public lands. The surveys in the last five or six years, sir, have gone on in inverse ratio to the amount of valuable land we have had left. As they approach the arid regions they have increased the surveys until, I have been told, millions of acres have been surveyed which can never be settled and which are not desirable for settlement; that in the State of California alone there are over twenty-one millions of acres of surveyed lands unoccupied.

Mr. PAGE. What class of lands? Will the gentleman please state?

Mr. WALLING. Does the gentleman from California wish to be understood before this House as desiring the survey of millions of acres of the public lands which cannot be occupied?

Mr. PAGE. Most assuredly not.

Mr. WALLING. Has he not stated that California has over 21,000,000 acres of surveyed lands, 50,000 acres of which only are fit for occupation?

Mr. PAGE. I did not say there were 21,000,000 acres of surveyed lands unoccupied in California, but what I intended to say was there are not 50,000 acres surveyed which are fit for agricultural purposes.

Mr. WALLING. I have a table, prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which I desire to have read at the Clerk's desk and printed as part of my remarks, in regard to these public-land surveys. There were $680,000 appropriated last year for surveys of the public lands. This year's estimates made to this House amounted to $1,200,000 and the estimates for the next year to over $1,300,000; yet to-day there are 160,000,000 acres of surveyed lands unoccupied. In the Territory of the gentleman who addressed the House a short time ago the surveys have gone on in the arid regions, which cannot by any possibility be settled for years, and thousands, amounting almost to millions, of acres have been surveyed there.

This money is to be expended for the survey of the lands which the public interest may require. If the public interest requires it to be expended in the State of California, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to so expend it.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Do you say that there are 21,000,000 acres of surveyed and unsettled lands in California?

Mr. WALLING. Unoccupied, so far as the records of the Land Office show.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Do I understand you to say there are only 50,000 acres that are fit for settlement?

Mr. WALLING. Your colleague said that.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Do I understand my colleague to say that?

Mr. PAGE. I do not know what you understand.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Do I understand that of the 21,000,000 acres of land now surveyed only 50,000 are fit for settlement?

Mr. PAGE. I made the statement twice, and I think my colleague can understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] has expired.

Mr. WALLING. I ask that the tables to which I refer, showing the areas of the land surveyed and unoccupied, be printed as part of my remarks.

There was no objection.

The tables are as follows:

Mr. MAGINNIS rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to closing debate on this paragraph, otherwise I must move that the committee rise for that purpose.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I desire to be heard on this question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well. After the gentleman from Montana has spoken, I shall ask that debate on this paragraph close.

Mr. PATTERSON. I most assuredly object to debate closing on this paragraph. There are too many interests at stake.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I want to say to this House that I am particularly wonder-struck at the power of humbug and successful log-rolling when ingeniously presented and industriously followed up. This House has just voted $145,000—which the gentleman from Ohio wished to increase—chiefly for the purpose of taking photographs and sticking pins through bugs. The House has voted that sum for the geological survey, for gentlemen who roam all over the Territories and make wonderful and startling new discoveries of interesting places discovered long before they went there; and whose chief business seems to be to take up the names of the historic old romantic landmarks of the country and to bestow on those mountains and ranges the names of the parties belonging to their expedition. This House has just now, on the recommendation of the gentleman from Ohio, voted $145,000 for this fanciful sort of work; and yet you only propose to give only $200,000 for the benefit of the actual settlers of sixteen States and Territories.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, there are surveys made in those Territories in places that are not occupied, but there are hundreds of places where there are settlers calling for surveys of public lands in order to obtain titles to their homes. And why should we be asked to break down our ancient system of surveys, so long and so well established, and to introduce an untried system, except it be to still further perpetuate the doings of those gentlemen who successfully tickle the ear of the House, and who by judicious distribution of pictures and patronage manage to make many and enthusiastic friends.

I have no reason to find fault with these geological surveys or these gentlemen who go out there and take photographs of our beautiful scenery. What I object to sometimes is the fact that they come back apparently with the assumption that they own that scenery, and made, or at least discovered the country in which we dwell. It advertises the country, however, and that is all well enough. But, I say, when the interests of the actual settlers of sixteen States and Territories are on the one hand, and this fanciful work of making photographs and handsomely-colored maps on the other, this House makes a mistake when it discriminates in favor of the fanciful and throws the practical work to one side. I do not urge the too rapid extension of surveys. When carried too far in advance of settlements the monuments perish and the surveys are lost. But there are in Montana, portions of the Yellowstone Valley, the Deer Lodge Valley, and the Beaverhead Valley, quite thickly settled, where the surveys need to be extended, and I certainly think that the needs of these settlers should appeal more loudly to Congress than other considerations. With the restrictions placed on surveys in this bill, and what I fear may prove to be the inadequate prices allowed for the work, any appropriation you may make must certainly be well expended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph may cease.

Mr. PATTERSON. On that I desire to say one word. I wish to offer an amendment, and I wish to be heard a moment upon it. It goes to the very gist of the whole paragraph and is of the utmost importance.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the committee shall rise I will move that debate be closed in five minutes, to allow the gentleman from Colorado to be heard. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HOOKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph be closed in five minutes.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the gentleman will make it ten minutes. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think five minutes will be sufficient. I will yield that time to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The motion to limit debate to five minutes was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. LANE. I desire to offer an amendment, to which I believe there will be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order now. An amendment to an amendment is now pending. But, if there be no objection, the Clerk will read the amendment which the gentleman from Oregon desires to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 973 strike out "$12" and insert "$14;" so that it will read: "may allow for the survey of standard lines in heavily-timbered land a sum not exceeding $14 per mile."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WALLING.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 973 the following:
Provided, That the starting-point for such surveys may be established by triangulation.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee now, but I trust the question on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will be postponed till the debate is through. I desire to speak to an amendment of my own.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is proper. The Committee on Appropriations make no objections to it.

Mr. PAGE. I have an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order first to take a vote on an amendment to perfect the paragraph which it is proposed to strike out. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WALLING.]

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 26, noes 41.

So (further count not being demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understood that debate was to close in five minutes, and those five minutes were to be given to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Such was the order of the House, that debate should close in five minutes.

Mr. PATTERSON. If that is so, I desire to occupy five minutes, but I do not desire to take the time of other gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot control that. The gentleman from Colorado was recognized, and could have proceeded if he had desired to do so.

Mr. BUCKNER. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations agrees to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I want to say one word, and it is that, from my knowledge of the character of the timber country on the Pacific slope, these surveys cannot be run for less than $14 per mile, and, in my opinion, not less than $16 per mile; but, on conferring with the Committee on Appropriations, I have consented to make my amendment $14 per mile instead of $16; but I doubted whether it would be accepted by the committee at $14.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not competent for the gentleman from Colorado to object; he was awarded the floor and declined to occupy it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Do I understand that objection cannot be made to the offering of this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a matter that requires unanimous consent. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "ten" in line 968, and insert the word "six" in its place.
Strike out the word "seven" in line 969, and insert in its place the word "five."
Strike out the word "six" in line 970, and insert in its place the word "four."
And strike out of line 973 the word "twelve," and insert in its place the word "six."

The question was taken on Mr. REAGAN'S amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is not properly an amendment to the amendment, but rather a substitute for it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 952 and 953 the following words: "For survey of the public lands and private land claims, $200,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"For surveying the public lands in the States of Louisiana and Florida, $15,000; in the State of Minnesota, $20,000; in the Territory of Dakota, $20,000; in the Territory of Montana, $30,000; in the State of Nebraska, $45,000; in the Territory of Colorado, $40,000; in the Territory of Idaho, $20,000; in the Territory of New Mexico, $25,000; in the Territory of Arizona, $12,000; in the State of California, $10,000; in the State of Oregon, $30,000; in the Territory of Washington, $20,000; in the Territory of Utah, $20,000; in the State of Nevada, $20,000; in the Territory of Wyoming, $25,000; in all $382,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Two and a half minutes remain of the time allowed by the House for debate.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask unanimous consent to occupy five minutes.

Objection was made.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, the first pernicious legislation that the amendment seeks to remedy is that of voting a sum in gross for the purpose of public surveys. As the clause now reads it provides the sum of $200,000 for public surveys in sixteen States and Territories, and this amount is to be distributed at the will and option of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and of the Secretary of the Interior.

I desire to ask the question what State or Territory will get its due proportion, and how it is to be determined how much shall be given to Dakota, to California, to Wyoming, or any other State or Territory upon which public surveys are carried on? It will be the smoothest-talking member from a State or Territory, the one who can bring the strongest influence to bear on the Commissioner or on the Secretary of the Interior. These men have no means of knowing the wants or necessities of the States or Territories so far as the public surveys are concerned. They cannot determine them either from maps or from the reports of the surveyors-general of the land districts; and so far as future disbursements of money for surveys are concerned it depends upon the influence, whether by voice, by money, or by friends, or by any other of the numerous ways by which influence is brought to bear, where this money shall be distributed. Perhaps my Territory may not receive a dollar; perhaps the State of California may not receive a dollar; perhaps the whole amount will be expended where it is not at all needed; and this is in direct opposition to the rule which has prevailed in the Department for many years in reference to the distribution of money for public surveys. Congress has always stated in what particular States and Territories the money shall be expended.

Now a word in reference to the amount of the appropriation. The amount of the appropriation proposed by the bill is $200,000. If that amount be distributed equally, it will give $12,000 to each land district, a mere bagatelle, just about sufficient to put a survey party on its feet. One year ago the amount appropriated for this purpose was $800,000 and the estimates of the Department this year amount, I believe, to $820,000 for public surveys. Last year the appropriation was distributed in accordance with the recommendations made by the Department among the different States and Territories.

Now, it is absolutely necessary that this should be done. Gentlemen from the older States, gentlemen from Florida, gentlemen from Louisiana, which contains thousands of acres of swamp land, cannot stand up, and I presume will not, and say that with millions and millions of acres in the Western States and Territories that are still unsurveyed we shall have no more than the paltry sum of $12,000 for each land district for the purpose of prosecuting our surveys. The gentleman from Ohio well said that in some of the Territories the surveys heretofore have been on barren lands. This is not the fault of the settler. In my Territory, in the Territory of Wyoming, in the State of California, and in other States and Territories, in the beautiful valleys, the parks, the river bottoms, where the settlers desire to go, many thousand acres of land are yet unsurveyed, and they are obliged to pass them by, simply because they could not make entry of them or purchase them, for want of surveys. And when Congress says that they shall not be allowed to obtain a home in these Western States and Territories because Congress refuses to appropriate the money to survey the lands and bring them into market, it seems to me it is a direct blow against the settler whoever he may be.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are 160,000,000 acres of surveyed lands not yet sold.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

The question was then taken on the substitute offered by Mr. PATTERSON for the amendment of Mr. LANE; and upon a division there were—ayes 35, noes 63.

No further count being called for, the amendment was declared to be rejected.

The question was next taken on the amendment of Mr. LANE; and on a division there were—ayes 41, noes 52.

No further count being called for, the amendment was declared to be rejected.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. PAGE, which was to strike out the following:

The cost of such surveys shall not exceed $10 per mile for standard lines, $7 for township, and $6 for section lines, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow for the survey of standard lines in heavily timbered land a sum not exceeding $12 per mile.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

For surveying the public lands in California, at rates not exceeding $15 per linear mile for standard lines, $14 for township, and $12 for section lines, and for heavily timbered mountain lands at augmented rates, not exceeding $18 per linear mile for standard, $16 for township, and $14 for section lines, $70,000.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out the words "third, timber lands bearing timber of commercial value."

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to make a single statement.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The amendment of Mr. DUNNELL was not agreed to.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I desire to move an amendment which will not increase the amount of appropriations a single dollar.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to any debate.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move to amend by inserting after "$200,000" these words:

And this sum shall be equally distributed between the different States and Territories.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to which I think the Committee on Appropriations will have no objection. It is to insert after the words "sixth, private land claims," these words:

Seventh, mineral lands containing gold or silver veins or lodes, and claims usually called placers.

This simply permits such mineral lands to be surveyed.

Mr. PAGE. Is that amendment open to debate?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not; by order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph has been closed.

Mr. PAGE. Then I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. RANDALL. We will do that.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to amend by inserting in the last part of the paragraph, after the words "standard lines in heavily timbered land," the words, "and mountain districts."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

That the land offices at Chillicothe, Ohio; Indianapolis, Indiana; Springfield, Illinois; and the office of the recorder of land titles of the State of Missouri are hereby abolished; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer to the States respectively aforesaid such of the transcripts, documents, and records of the offices aforesaid as may not be required for use of the United States, and as the States respectively in which said offices are situated may desire to preserve; and the office of the surveyor-general of Kansas is hereby abolished.

Mr. NEAL. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the words "Chillicothe, Ohio." No part of the district that I represent has ever asked or received any favors at the hands of the General Government. All that we now ask is that we shall be permitted to retain this, the last remaining land office in the State of Ohio.

Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS. How did you get this land office?

Mr. NEAL. We had it in the early history of our State, when we had thousands and tens of thousands of acres of the public lands at the disposal of the General Government. Every other land office within the limits of our State has been abolished, until all have been consolidated, and this is the sole remaining land office in Ohio.

Had it not been that points of order were not reserved upon this bill, I think I could demonstrate clearly and conclusively to the House that this provision of the bill does not come within the rule providing for a change in existing law under the pretense of economy or of reducing the expenditures of the Government. The sole cost of continuing and perpetuating this land office consists, I believe, of the little sum of $1,000 per annum, $500 of which is paid to the receiver, and $500 to the register of the land office. According to the last annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, this office at Chillicothe was more than self-sustaining, the receipts of the office during the year ending June 30, 1875, being about $360 more than the outlay.

Besides, I have here a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in response to an inquiry submitted to him a few weeks ago by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and a copy of which was furnished me on yesterday in response to a similar inquiry, in which he states that it is not best for the public interest to discontinue this office; on the contrary, he insists that the office ought to be continued.

Again, if there is any necessity for discontinuing or abolishing this office, the Secretary of the Interior now has ample power, under section 2249 of the Revised Statutes, to discontinue it, because that section authorizes him to discontinue this office or any similar office whenever in his opinion the public convenience requires that it shall be discontinued. And, on the contrary, it empowers and authorizes him to keep up and continue any of these offices when, in his opinion, the public interest requires that they shall be continued.

I hope, then, that the members of this Committee of the Whole will agree to my amendment, which does not impair or affect this bill in any of its provisions, but simply strikes out the two words I have indicated and leaves this particular land office in existence as it now is.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that no discrimination will be made; that these useless offices will be abolished, and the records turned over to the States.

Mr. CONGER. In view of the action of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and other gentlemen upon the democratic side of this House, and their professions for long years here in favor of the settlers and of keeping the public lands of the United States devoted solely for the benefit of the settlers, I desire to contrast those professions with the policy now inaugurated of cutting off surveys, discontinuing land offices, and leaving unsurveyed the better portions of the country where settlers might go and select homesteads. Were it not that the action of this House bears so heavily upon immigrants to this country and our own citizens removing from the East to the West in search of homes; were it not that the natural effect of this measure is to shut out from homesteads for years to come many citizens now desiring to go from portions of the Union where they can find no labor, nothing upon which to procure a living, and to seek a home in the far West where at least they can live, I should feel rejoiced at the action of the democrats in this House, for if any party ever committed political harikari, if ever any party took the most direct steps toward suicide as a political organization, this is a measure of that kind; for in my judgment it will meet the condemnation of all people who desire to settle in the West. I ask the gentlemen who have been loudest heretofore in their professions of friendship for the landless and the homeless to compare their professions with this simple bill. Simple? Ay, simple to the utmost degree of simplicity.

Sir, I have desired to enter my protest against this cutting down of the surveys, against this attempt to circumscribe within the narrowest possible limits the places where immigrants may go and find homes. Having said this much and having I think called up the record of the gentleman from Indiana and contrasted it with his professions on every occasion heretofore, I leave the subject for his contemplation and that of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, truth is a very valuable commodity in all the relations of life, and especially valuable where words are uttered in this Congress and go to the whole people of the country. No man has proposed in this bill any measure or policy unfriendly to the actual settler. Every provision in this bill is designed to protect the rights of the actual settler. One hundred and sixty millions of acres of land have been surveyed and are still undisposed of; an area six times as large as the great State in which I live. By these surveys there has been opened for speculators an opportunity of seizing the valuable lands of this Government; a movement in the interests of cupidity and speculation at the expense of the actual settler.

A gentleman who has aided in voting away 200,000,000 acres of the most valuable lands of this Government to a body of corporations cannot well undertake to lecture any member on this floor as to his duty toward the actual settler.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] moves to strike out "Chillicothe." Gentlemen must, I presume, understand that the land offices at Chillicothe, Indianapolis, and Springfield cost from $2,500 to $3,000 a year; that the public lands in those States are exhausted; that the records there are simply copies from those of the General Land Office, and that this bill proposes for convenience to turn over those records to the State authorities and to save the salaries of register and receiver, office rent, and contingencies.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. NEAL, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 44, noes not counted.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the remark of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes it proper for me to say that in 1852, in 1854, and in 1856 almost the entire appropriations to which the gentleman has referred as having been voted to corporations were voted by the democracy, in a democratic Congress, of which I believe the gentleman from Indiana was himself a member.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was not a member then.

Mr. CONGER. Perhaps not as long ago as that. The gentleman refers to me as one who has assisted in voting away these millions of acres. Sir, I never voted an acre of land for railroads, whatever may be my judgment about the propriety of it. But, sir, the gentleman in his sixteen years' service was a member of this House when a considerable portion of these lands was voted to railroads. Does his record show that he ever opposed it until late years?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; from the beginning, from the first bill.

Mr. CONGER. I will not venture to dispute the gentleman's statement, for his conduct has been so uniform in opposing all measures before Congress that I venture to assume he is right in his assertion. But, sir, those great appropriations to which he has referred were made by a democratic Congress; yes, and his idol, Stephen A. Douglas, was the leader and manager of the movement.

What is it that makes the gentleman rise in his place to-night and say that truth is such a valuable thing? Has he for the first time in his life discovered there is such a thing as truth and he considers it valuable on account of his new discovery? Has it just broken on his vision? What application does he mean to make of it?

I charge the gentleman and his party, and I wish it put on record—and it has never been denied and cannot be—that the vast amount of appropriation of millions of acres to railroad corporations, to that kind of corporation to which he alludes sneeringly, was made by the democracy of the country of their own free will, and it is too late now, if there was anything wrong in it, to taunt this side of the House with that appropriation. Let the gentleman nourish that truth which he has discovered lately to be so valuable and parade the semblance of falsehood before the country as he has done to-night.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I am justified in saying the truth is valuable when gentlemen remember that prior to the year 1862 all the domain which had been granted was granted to the States and not an acre to corporations. It was granted to the States. Portions of it were afterward applied, as in Illinois and in the States south of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, to corporations. Altogether it did not reach even 20,000 acres. I go beyond the gentleman as to the true amount. The great grant at that time, the Illinois grant, was inside of 4,000,000 acres.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman from Indiana say there was never an acre granted to the corporations; that it was all granted to the States?

Mr. HOLMAN. Never an acre was granted to corporations, but it was granted to the States prior to 1862.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman make a distinction between a corporation and the States?

Mr. HOLMAN. The grants were made to the States. Never until subsequently were grants made to corporations. The great grants running up to 212,000,000 acres were made since the period to which the gentleman refers, since the year 1860. Grants prior to that time were trivial in comparison with the enormous empires of land granted since that time. Without consuming my time, I ask debate cease and the next paragraph be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to state a fact in connection with what has been done in regard to the cost of surveys. The economical estimate of surveys this year of the Land Office, with 161,000,000 acres surveyed, is $895,000,000. The estimate made in connection with the Committee on Public Lands by the Appropriation Committee, shows that $200,000 is sufficient. The committee, therefore, have saved nearly $700,000, which was proposed to be practically wasted under the estimate of the General Land Office.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Do you expect to survey as much land with $200,000 as with $800,000?

Mr. RANDALL. I say there are 161,000,000 acres now surveyed and not occupied.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Exactly, and you do not propose to have any more surveyed?

Mr. RANDALL. That is the manner in which we are helping the settlers in this country by saving the public money.

Mr. PAGE. The Treasury has received three-quarters of a million dollars during the last year from the State of California as the proceeds of the sales of public lands.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I will occupy the time of the House but for one moment, not to engage in debate, but to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that after the word "abolished," in line 990, the words "from and after the 30th day of September next," or some other period, should be inserted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. KASSON. Then I move that amendment, to insert the words "from and after the 30th day of September next" after the word "abolished," in line 990, and also in line 997; so the paragraph will then read:

That the land officers at Chillicothe, Ohio; Indianapolis, Indiana; Springfield, Illinois, and the office of the recorder of land titles of the State of Missouri are hereby abolished from and after the 30th day of September next; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer to the States, respectively, aforesaid such of the transcripts, documents, and records of the offices aforesaid as may not be required for use of the United States, and as the States, respectively, in which said offices are situated may desire to preserve; and the office of the surveyor-general of Kansas is hereby abolished from and after the 30th day of September next.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the various paragraphs under the heading "surveyors-general and their clerks" will be read through with the understanding that each one of the paragraphs will be open to amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE. I move, in line 1030, to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$2,700," which is a reduction of 10 per cent., the amount of reduction applied to all others; and to strike out "$8,000" for clerks and to insert "$10,000;" so the paragraph will read:

For surveyor general of California, $2,700; and for the clerks in his office, $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Question.

Mr. PAGE. Not yet; do not be in a hurry.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the reduction of the surveyor-general's salary 10 per cent., as they have reduced all other salaries, his present salary being $3,000, would make it $2,700. The appropriations for the last three years for the surveyor-general's office in California have been placed at $20,000.

Now I do not suppose that the House will pass this amendment. I am not asking for this with the expectation that they are going to permit it to be passed. There is not a man on this side of the House who has ever secured an amendment to any appropriation bill this session unless it has been consented to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Indiana. But, sir, I expect that another body will review some of these things. I expect that they are patriotic and sensible enough to do justice where justice should be done.

I rose for the purpose of sending to the Clerk's desk a letter from the General Land Office in reference to this matter, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1876.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, asking the views of this office upon the subject of a proposed reduction of the appropriation for compensation of the clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of California from $20,000 to $8,000, by the House Committee on Appropriations.

In reply, I have the honor to state that, should the committee carry out their intention, there is no doubt but what the public interests will suffer greatly. It is not only the labor attached to the returns made of public surveys, private claims, and Indian reservations that must be taken into consideration, but the office is greatly in arrears in many matters that are of great importance, which should be brought up as quickly as possible. But slow progress has been made in the latter respect, owing to the fact that the current work engages the time of the present force almost constantly.

Upon the organization of the office in 1853, the sum appropriated for clerical service was $11,000; but as business increased, with no corresponding increase of force, the work of the office year after year fell into arrears, until at last this office was compelled during the fiscal year 1872 to ask an increase of appropriation of $15,000 for this branch of the service. Upon explanations being made, the sum estimated for was granted, and at a subsequent period, namely, 1874 and 1875, when estimating for a still larger sum, ($20,000,) the public interests demanding it, said amount was appropriated. And as there are as valid reasons now as then for submitting a like estimate for the coming fiscal year, this office is firmly of the opinion that no reduction should be made; on the contrary, an increase of money and force would facilitate public business very much.

Very respectfully,

U. J. BAXTER,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. H. F. PAGE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. PAGE. I have only one word more to say. I do not expect to change the decision of the caucus of the majority of this House. On this bill, and other bills, this side of the House must quietly and patiently submit to the will of the majority expressed in caucus and on the floor of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. There never has been any caucus on any appropriation bill.

Mr. PAGE. Or any other bill?

Mr. RANDALL. The Senate had a caucus.

Mr. PAGE. How did you happen to change your programme in reference to the clerks of this House?

Mr. RANDALL. We never did change it.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; you did change that after the caucus.

Mr. RANDALL. Never in the world. We never had a caucus in regard to it, and the gentleman should not stand up and say what is not true.

Mr. PAGE. I do not suppose all the democratic members were in the caucus——

Mr. RANDALL. Nor any of them.

Mr. PAGE. But at least the majority of them were.

Mr. RANDALL. You know better. There is not a syllable of truth in that statement.

The amendment of Mr. PAGE was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "dollars," in line 1021, insert the following:

And the surveyor-general of Colorado, under the directions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, may be authorized to cause necessary public surveys to be made on lands containing gold and silver veins and lodes and placer claims.

In the first place, I desire to state to the committee that this does not provide for the appropriation of a single dollar. The very basis of the prosperity and wealth of Colorado are these mining interests. Before the prospector can obtain a title to mining property he must see that his mine is surveyed, and under the express provisions of the statute law that survey must be connected with the public surveys of the country.

We have just brought into market the most valuable mining property in the southwestern part of our Territory. There are no public surveys within perhaps fifty miles of many of the most valuable mines in that section of country. Under the law the miner is compelled to pay out of his own pocket for the survey of his mines, and under the provisions of this bill he will be compelled not only to procure the lines of his mine to be run, but will also be compelled to have the lines run by a surveyor from ten to forty or fifty miles, that he may connect his mine with the public surveys. It will cost him instead of $25 or $30, as it ought to cost, perhaps $1,000, $1,500, or $2,000. In other words, as the law stands it is an absolute prohibition upon the mine-owner from obtaining a patent or title to his mine or any interest in it whatever.

Now, all this amendment asks is, that under the directions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, if he should deem it fitting and proper, some of the money appropriated for the public surveys may be used for the purpose of running standard lines to the neighborhood of the mining region of the Territory. Is that asking too much? I do not know whether the Committee on Appropriations will agree to that. The member of the committee from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] said the truth was valuable. I desire to speak some words of truth in order that it may go upon the record, not expecting that the committee will agree to any change whatever or to any more tender policy toward the Territories than they have practiced heretofore. There are eight members of the Committee on Appropriations in whose States there were public buildings for which estimates were made. In those eight States represented upon the committee the estimates for public buildings were $2,160,000. They allowed to those eight States represented on the committee $1,141,000, or a little over one-half of the estimates.

The estimates for public buildings in the States not represented upon the committee were $4,502,000. The committee allowed to those States because they were not represented on the committee $1,218,000, or about one-fourth of the estimates of the Department.

Now that may be justice; there may not have been, and I know there was not, a caucus of the democratic members of the House in reference to these appropriations, but it looks as if there might have been a caucus of the members of the committee in reference to them.

Mr. ATKINS. That is untrue.

Mr. PATTERSON. Here are the facts and the figures.

Mr. ATKINS. I say it is false.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE. I desire to know whether it is in order that one member shall say to another that his remarks are untrue? I ask that the words be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that that cannot be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of having the words taken down.

The question was taken, and the committee refused to rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask that all debate upon the pending paragraph be closed.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. PATTERSON'S amendment; and on a division there were ayes 28, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment: In line 1009, I move to strike out the words "$1,800" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "$2,500;" so that it will read:

For surveyor-general of Minnesota, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $3,000.

There are many things in this appropriation bill referring to the public lands which meet my approval. I believe that we have appropriated a much larger sum of money in years past for the survey of the public lands than was needed, and I have said to members of the Committee on Appropriations that I believed there could be retrenchment and a saving of money in this direction at the present time, and while I represent a western land State, I am very free to say that we may appropriate no more than is in this bill with a very good reason for the present year.

I do not believe that a single State or a single Territory will suffer practically by this reduction. I am free to say that we have agricultural surveyed lands in all the Territories and all the States at the present time more than will be taken up during the year to come, and I had desired to offer an amendment striking out that subdivision of the lands which might be surveyed as pertains to the timber lands. I desired to say at that time that for the last three or four years a most terrible plunder of the timber lands of the country has been going on and the money which we appropriated last year and which ought to have been expended almost wholly in the survey of agricultural and mineral lands was almost entirely used in the survey of timber lands.

These timber lands were covered over by land-warrants and agricultural-college scrip, so that it sent out of our possession a vast area of the timber lands of the country. I was told by a gentleman the other day, from the Territory of Washington, that two men in California owned 175,000 acres of timber lands in the Territories on the Pacific coast. They got those lands by scrip. The Government never got a dollar for those lands.

Now, there is a bill pending before the Committee on Public Lands upon this subject, and the committee have agreed to report some bill to protect our remaining timber lands and make them a source of revenue to the Government. The fact is, as the gentleman from California will admit, that a very small fraction of the money that has come into the Treasury from California has come in from timber lands; and representing as I do a western State, I am willing that this bill shall go through. I think that no State and no Territory will lose by it.

One word more in relation to my amendment, which I had forgotten, and gentlemen will excuse me. My amendment is that the salary of the surveyor-general of Minnesota shall be put on a par with the salaries of the surveyors-general of the other States and Territories. This bill gives to the surveyor-general of Minnesota $1,800 a year, and it gives to the surveyor-general of Idaho $2,500, and to that of Nevada $2,500. Now, experience will show that the surveyor-general of Minnesota during the next year must have more work to do than either of these other officers. I think, therefore, that my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. JACOBS. Allow me to say that the gentleman from Minnesota is incorrect in his statement in regard to Washington Territory. In Washington Territory the surveys have never extended into the timber lands at all. There are about twelve or thirteen thousand people living in Eastern Washington, and those people are compelled to trespass on the timber lands in that section of the country in order to live. The surveys have never been extended into the timber lands in that section of the country. Two or three years ago an enterprise was started to build a railroad from the city of Walla Walla to the Columbia River, a distance of thirty-three miles. An application was made to the Government of the United States to allow the company to go upon the public lands to get timber for the purpose of building that railroad. That request was denied and the timber could not be taken without costing $26 in gold coin a ton to convey it from the city of Walla Walla to the Columbia River. What was the consequence? The proprietors of that railroad went into the mountains and cut the timber on the public lands and rafted it down to the Columbia River. As soon as that timber was in the Columbia River the agents of the Government seized it and delayed the completion of that railroad for two years, while the people of that section of the country were paying for the transportation of their grain and other agricultural products $12 in gold per ton in order to have it carried a distance of thirty-three miles to the Columbia River. Yet this Congress refuses to make an appropriation for the purpose of extending the surveys into the timbered lands of Washington Territory, and the agents of the Government are prosecuting the citizens of that Territory for trespassing upon those timber lands when it is impossible for them to exist in that section without so trespassing.

The amendment of Mr. DUNNELL was not agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a motion to this effect, to strike out in all these paragraphs the words relating to the offices of surveyors-general and the salaries respectively attached thereto, and to insert a provision to the effect that their duties shall be performed hereafter by the Secretary of the Interior through surveyors sent out by him to make such surveys in the several States and Territories as may be deemed necessary.

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman offer that as an amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. KASSON. Then I make the point of order upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. It is in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. KASSON. How?

Mr. RANDALL. It abolishes various offices. I believe there are no duties which the surveyors-general perform in the States and Territories that cannot be performed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior at the central Land Office in this city.

Mr. KASSON. But you propose by your amendment to send out other officers. I think the gentleman had better not make this change. In view of the great many changes of existing law contained in this bill, I would suggest that it is not worth while to attempt to make such a change as this.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question presented by this amendment is exactly the same as that which was presented in the proposition to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department. It is impossible to tell what system must be by legislation substituted in place of the old one, and you cannot tell with any certainty which system would be the most expensive. The case presented is exactly the same; and therefore I hold that the Chair would have to rule, as was ruled then, that this amendment is not in order.

I do not think that this attempt should be made, after this subject has been studied during this whole session, although most of the gentlemen who have examined it think that these surveyors-general can be dispensed with. The trouble is in adopting a system to take the place of the present one which will be more economical and as efficient. That has not been secured after all this time of consideration.

I therefore submit that the proposition to transfer these duties from the local offices to the Interior Department of this Government may or may not entail expenses as great as those now incurred.

Mr. RANDALL. As the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] on the point of order has spoken to the merits of the proposition, I merely want to say in reply what induced me to offer this amendment.

Since this bill has been printed I have learned that the Committee on Appropriations, or a majority of the members of that committee, favor the vacation or abolition of these offices of surveyors-general. I have learned in addition, after conference with various gentlemen whose business and position would enable them to know exactly whether these officers are necessary or not, that they are of opinion, almost without any dissent, that there is no occasion for these offices. Nor is there any occasion whatever for the clerks in these offices. All the duties which are performed by the surveyors-general can be performed by the central office here in the Interior Department; and officers can be sent out as occasion requires within the limit which we provide here, that is of $200 of expenditure.

Mr. KASSON. Where did the gentleman get that information?

Mr. RANDALL. From various members of Congress.

Mr. PAGE. It was not the result of any caucus?

Mr. KASSON. I desire to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he is through.

Mr. RANDALL. One word on the point of order. This amendment abolishes various offices which are now kept up at great expense, and the salary attached to each office. I propose in my amendment first to abolish the office and then strike out the salaries attached respectively thereto in this bill. And upon the face of my amendment it is a retrenchment, which brings it within the prescribed letter and spirit of the rule.

Mr. KASSON. I should not have spoken on the merits of the proposition in discussing the point of order, except for what gentlemen on the other side have said, and which renders it proper that I should say a word or two in the same direction. I beg the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to this point; he is not personally familiar as we western men are with the conduct of business in the public land office.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not pretend to speak except upon full conference with those familiar with the subject.

Mr. KASSON. I regret the gentleman has quoted the opinions of individual members of the Committee on Public Lands, which opinions have never had official expression in this House during this long session. I venture to say the gentleman will find few western men who will accept this proposition as safe for the public interests; and for the plain reason that for years, I might almost say from the foundation of the Government, certainly from the foundation of the present system of surveying the public lands, all our land laws have been interwoven with the system of local surveyor-generals' offices. The laws require numerous papers to be filed, numerous certificates to be made there, and an attempt to change the law by a simple provision of this sort abolishing the offices, without going through the Revised Statutes and modifying the duties imposed upon other persons, which duties are interwoven with the existence of these surveyors-generals' offices, must produce inextricable confusion in the administration of your land laws.

I say this much upon the merits of the proposition, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania has raised that question, and not because I suppose it in order to discuss the merits. But what I have said I know as a western man with experience in western lands; and all gentlemen about me know it also. If this proposition be adopted, we introduce a confusion of duties which are now systematized in connection with these offices; confusion which we cannot afterward correct except by a great deal of troublesome legislation.

As to the point of order, it does not appear that the sending out of special officers by the Secretary of the Interior will not be equally expensive with the present system, or more expensive.

Mr. McDILL. I want to say one word in reference to a remark made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. If I understood him aright, he said that the Committee on Public Lands had had under consideration——

Mr. RANDALL. I said I had conferred with members of the Committee on Public Lands; and believed that they favored this proposition.

Mr. LANE. As one member of that committee, I believe that the majority of the committee do favor it.

Mr. McDILL. What may be the individual views of the members of the Committee on Public Lands I do not know. There may be a majority in favor of this measure.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all I undertook to say.

Mr. McDILL. That is all I wanted to bring out. I wish to say, however, for myself that I think there has never been any formal action in the committee upon this matter. I believe there has been an informal discussion; but I felt, for one, that it was too grave a matter to propose to abolish the office of surveyor-general without a great deal more investigation than I had any opportunity of making. I simply wanted to know whether there had been any action in the Committee on Public Lands on this subject, and I am glad to know from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that there has been none.

Mr. WALLING. That statement is correct. There was informal talk in the committee, but no action.

Mr. RANDALL. It seems there was a little more action in the Committee on Public Lands than I represented. There has been an informal discussion, which I did not allege.

Mr. McDILL. An informal discussion, but no vote and no resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. A word on this point of order. I think that the object of this amendment may be accomplished without establishing a dangerous precedent on the point of order, by striking out all of the bill from line 998 to 1085, embracing the various clauses in relation to surveyors-general, their clerks, and the expenses of their offices. When these clauses have been struck out, then a proposition would be in order to make some other provision for this object. But, as the proposition now stands, it seems to me the point of order is well taken, because it does not affirmatively appear upon the face of the amendment itself that it will retrench expenditures, for the Secretary of the Interior may expend under the arrangement proposed as much or more money than is now appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that debate will close on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say that it is not clear, under the modified rule now existing, whether this amendment is liable to the point of order or not. The rule does not stop with the requirement that the amendment shall appear to retrench. The rule reads:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

In the judgment of the Chair the probabilities are that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have the effect of retrenchment in the abolition of fixed and determined salaries, and the substitution of such temporary employment as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior might be found necessary. But in view of the doubt resting upon the question of order and in deference to the ruling of the permanent Speaker of this House upon a proposition that was certainly, to say the least, as little liable to the point of order now raised as the one under consideration, the Chair feels impelled to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SPRINGER. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I now move to strike out from line 998 down to and including line 1085, being all the clauses in relation to surveyors-general, their clerks, &c.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will not propose so radical a measure at so late an hour as this.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that this is liable to the same point of order, no matter in what form the legislation may be proposed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist on my amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. KASSON. Let the amendment be reduced to writing so we may know precisely what it is, and that the point of order may be clearly made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do trust the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that an amendment, whether by striking out or inserting, by adding or diminishing, which changes existing law is equally liable to the point of order. The Chair has already ruled that a direct change by striking out and inserting is liable to the point of order. Now here is a proposition by striking out a portion of this bill to change existing law, and I claim it is equally liable to the point of order, that you cannot reach by evasion, by subterfuge, a change of law which you cannot reach directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order, and he doubts not the gentleman from Michigan will see the difference when his attention is called to the rule. The Chair cannot sustain the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I rise to a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Two points of order cannot be pending at the same time. The Chair will first rule on the point of order presented by the gentleman from Michigan. The rule does not say no amendment shall be in order which changes existing law; but the rule says:

> No provision in such appropriation bill nor amendment thereto changing existing law, shall be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is certainly germane to the subject-matter of the bill. It certainly does retrench expenditures, though it is liable to the criticism of changing existing law. The Chair overrules the point of order raised, and rules the amendment in order.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I rise to the point of order that this proposes to go back and includes paragraphs which have been already passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding was by unanimous consent that there should be no prejudice to amendments by the Clerk reading continuously to the close under the heading of "surveyors-general and their clerks."

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope I may be allowed to say one word on that amendment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I move, in line 1071, to strike out $3,000 and insert $3,600; so it will read:

> For surveyor-general for the Territory of Utah, $2,500, and for the clerks in his office, $3,600.

The effect of that amendment will be to equalize their pay with the other Territories. The amendment has been submitted to the committee, and they are not opposed to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I move to add the following:

> That the sums of money appropriated by this bill for surveys of public lands shall be distributed equally between the different western States and Territories for the surveying of the public lands in which estimates have been submitted to Congress.

I should like to say a single word in reference to this amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I raise the point of order to that amendment as already having been once voted down.

Mr. STEELE. No; it is a different amendment, in different language. I will say, for the information of the Chair, that I placed it in different language to avoid the point of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say this, that this will not increase the amount of expenditures at all. It is very evident to every gentleman here that the $200,000 which by this bill are to be expended in surveys of the public lands cannot succeed in surveying any large quantity of lands. The only surveys which can be made with such an amount of money in the fifteen or sixteen States and Territories needing surveys will be the small amount of land occupied by actual settlers who demand surveys, in order that they may be able to separate and segregate their claims. I appeal to the House to provide some way in which these settlers, who have no influence in these Departments, may be enabled to have the necessary surveys made. I want to know what hope I will have, representing a Territory, to get an acre of land surveyed in my Territory, if I have to go to the General Land Office and fight fourteen Senators and Representatives behind them for a division of this appropriation and the share of this money which ought to go to the credit of Wyoming to make necessary surveys. I do not want any more than the fair share of this appropriation which should go to my Territory. I wish to say there are in all these Territories, as every gentleman knows, large areas of land which have been surveyed which will not be settled for years. There are also settlements upon lands which never have been surveyed, and the survey of which is demanded by the necessities of the settlers. There is a large settlement in the Sweetwater country in Wyoming, where there are no surveys and where great difficulty is being experienced by the settlers in consequence. This is one instance of the great necessity for immediate surveys in some instances. And I hope the committee will adopt the pending amendment, which will allow these deserving settlers to obtain a survey of their homes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I think this matter should be left to the discretion of the proper officer. We have to trust somebody. I wish to direct attention to a remarkable fact in reference to New Mexico. I suppose it is indicative of the condition of affairs in the various Territories, but perhaps not to the same extent.

There were surveyed in 1875 in New Mexico 723,906 acres, and there were two hundred and six acres sold.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman will allow me——

Many MEMBERS. "Vote!" "Vote!"

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. STEELE. I move to strike out the last word in order to say a word in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is that in the Territory of New Mexico all the old settlements are situated upon Mexican land grants, the title to which does not come from the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. Then you certainly justify us in cutting off this appropriation.

Mr. STEELE. No, sir; I do not justify the Committee on Appropriations in denying to actual settlers upon the public lands the right that the policy of the Government and the public land laws guarantee to them, the right to have their homesteads surveyed, in order that they may be secure in their homes and improvements.

Mr. RANDALL. As I have stated, last year there were over seven hundred thousand acres surveyed in New Mexico, and there were only two hundred acres sold.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I object. Debate on the amendment has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana rises to oppose the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I rise to say a word in favor of the committee. Certainly the Committee on Appropriations has not been and cannot be charged with being guided by any political considerations in preparing their bills, for the blows they have struck in these appropriation bills have as often been directed at their own political friends as at their opponents. As my friend from Wyoming has stated, the Congress heretofore has divided the amount appropriated for surveys between the different States and Territories, and we wish the same course may be followed. We do not ask the committee again to add a single dollar to the amount they propose to appropriate by the bill. But we do ask the friends of the Territories to give us some protection against the influence of powerful State delegations, and I want to know what chance four or five Delegates will have when they go to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, recently appointed through political influence, and have to contend against fourteen republican Senators, who will want this money expended where it will do most good for themselves?

Now, whether we are to have little or much for our surveys, I prefer that the amount shall be settled right here, so that we will know what is coming to each of us. I have no fear for my Territory if it can stand on its merits, but I had rather not be compelled to struggle in the Departments for our portion. Let us have a division of the appropriation right here.

Mr. HOLMAN. Until recently all the appropriations were made in gross, as provided in this bill, so that they might be expended where the true interests of the country require.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The question being taken on Mr. STEELE's amendment, there were—ayes 54, noes 69.

So (further count not being demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the following amendment:

Add to the paragraph these words:

And the said money appropriated for surveys may also be used to survey lands containing gold and silver veins, and lodes and placer claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law provides that now.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to say that the gentleman from Indiana is mistaken about that being the law. The difficulty is that the money that is appropriated in this bill is required specifically to be appropriated for six different purposes, and is not permitted to be used for the purpose of surveying gold or silver mining lands, not one dollar of it. And consequently no matter what I may have said to hurt the feelings of any member of the committee——

Mr. FORT. O, it does not hurt them.

Mr. PATTERSON. My people and the people of the other mining States and Territories should not suffer on that account.

I say now that by the language used in the bill not one dollar of this money that is appropriated can be used for the benefit of the miner, I care not whether he is in California, Montana, Colorado, Utah, or any of the other mining States and Territories.

Mr. LANE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANE. I wish to ask the gentleman whether at the present time the mineral lands are surveyed at the expense of the Government?

Mr. PATTERSON. No, sir. Of course private parties must pay for their surveys.

Mr. PAGE. They are not compelled to do so under existing law.

Mr. PATTERSON. But under the law whenever they survey they must connect that survey with the public surveys; and if they are not lines in the neighborhood, the miners are compelled to run their own lines perhaps for fifty miles to find the line of the public surveys.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The question being taken on Mr. PATTERSON's amendment, the Chairman stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have done the best I could. I do not ask a further count.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that debate on this paragraph close.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the last section, as follows:

EXPENSES OF THE COLLECTION OF REVENUE FROM SALES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public money, at ninety four land offices, $365,483.21.

For incidental expenses of the land offices, $40,175.

For expenses of depositing money received from the sale of public lands, $13,000.

To meet expenses of suppressing depredations upon timber on the public lands, $5,000.

Mr. PAGE. I move to strike out the last two lines, namely:

To meet expenses of suppressing depredations upon timber on the public lands, $5,000.

There is no law for the sale of these timber lands, and I think it unjust to make appropriations for this purpose.

Mr. RUSK. This is to protect them.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; it is to bring men before United States courts and to convict them for cutting upon land which the Government refuses to sell, or makes no provision for selling.

Mr. DE BOLT. Mr. Chairman, I had occasion to refer to this matter when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration. The evidence taken before one of the committees of this House shows clearly that the amounts of money heretofore appropriated to prevent depredations on the Government timber lands have been used alone for political purposes, the encouragement of idleness, and the corruption of elections.

The evidence further shows that none of the agents appointed to guard the timber live within fifty miles of it, and some as far as one hundred and fifty miles distant; that none of them have ever visited said lands, nor even know where they are situated; that not one of them has ever performed any service under their appointment except draw their pay. They are informed at the time of their appointment that they will have nothing to do. Sir, if it is necessary to guard the Government timber, it ought to be done under different regulations than exist at present in order to prevent the application of the public moneys to such purposes. Let us stop these leaks and apply the money properly.

The question was taken on Mr. PAGE's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. I offer the following amendment to come in after line 1097, "for surveying, appraising, advertising, and other expenses preliminary to the sale of the United States arsenal property at Dearbonville, Michigan, under the act of March 3, 1875, $1,000."

I believe that the Committee on Appropriations will assent to that amendment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. RANDALL. Do not make a speech upon it.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment to come in as an additional section:

From and after the 1st of July, 1876, the salary and compensation of all officers and employés provided for in this act shall be the same, respectively fixed for said officers and employés herein, and no more, and all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HURLBUT. I offer an amendment in relation to Ellis Island. There was an amendment adopted by the committee, which is defective in form, and I desire that it be amended. I send it to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the amendment in reference to Norfolk, after line 499, strike out all after the words "Navy Department," and substitute the following:

And the Secretary of the Navy, in case the public service may warrant it, may, and he is hereby authorized to, remove the magazine on Ellis Island, and in case of such removal is authorized to sell or remove all the public property on said island.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I desire to offer an amendment in line 476 to correct a typographical error. The word "remodelling" is inserted instead of "removing," and I move to strike out the word "remodelling" and insert "removing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKS. In line 969 I desire to offer an amendment, as follows:

Insert after the word "lines" the following:

And the starting point for said surveys may be established by triangulation.

Something very similar to this amendment has been introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WALLING.] The committee will perceive in a moment that the surveys in the Territories where perhaps there is only one acre out of ten thousand that is cultivable or arable lands or subject to cultivation by irrigation, that it will be very expensive to get starting-points by establishing standard lines. But if these starting-points may be established by the scientific means of triangulation, the fruitful valleys may be easily got at and the surveys of such lands as the settlers desire for cultivation and the establishment of homes may be made readily and inexpensively. I do not propose to detain the committee further, but hope that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. PATTERSON. I make the point of order that that amendment is not in order, as it relates to a clause of the bill which has been passed, and it is not in order to go back.

Mr. KASSON. I ask that the amendment be again reported. If the amendment is right, I hope there will be no objection to it.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. KASSON. It is simply a permission, and I think it is right.

Mr. PATTERSON. I object to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the amendment is not in order, being objected to on account of its referring to a paragraph which has already been passed in the bill, and, under the rule, the Chair holds that it is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. PAGE. Pending that motion I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KASSON. Pending the demand for the previous question I desire, according to agreement, to enter a motion to strike out the proviso on page 15 of the bill, to which unanimous consent was given in the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not intend, if the previous question be sustained, to vary from anything which was agreed upon in the committee, that a vote should be taken in the House.

Mr. KASSON. But as a matter of form it is necessary that I should enter my motion to strike out that proviso before the previous question be sustained.

Mr. CONGER. I gave notice in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union that on three amendments I should call for a separate vote and call the yeas and nays upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. When those amendments are reached the gentleman will have that right.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the previous question be sustained, and then gentlemen can, as the amendments come up in their order, ask for separate votes upon them.

Mr. KASSON. Before that is done I wish simply to enter the motion to strike out the proviso on page 15, for which consent was given in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman need not do that; of course I will agree in the House to all that was agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KASSON. I know that; but as a matter of form I must make the motion before the previous question is seconded.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is right.

Mr. KASSON. Then I move to strike out the following proviso on page 15 of the bill:

Provided, That all of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections, and deputy and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections, are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. PAGE. I now insist upon my motion to adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The previous question was then seconded and the main question ordered upon the bill and amendments as reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask that the amendments be read, and those upon which no separate vote is asked shall be considered as adopted.

Mr. THORNBURGH, (at eleven o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the gentlemen on the other side are prepared to indicate the amendments upon which they desire to have separate votes.

Mr. CONGER. There are three amendments in regard to which I gave notice that I should ask separate votes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments in their order.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand from the Clerk that he has a memorandum of the several amendments in their order in regard to which notice was given in Committee of the Whole that a separate vote would be asked in the House. If there is no objection, I would ask that all the other amendments be considered as agreed to.

Mr. HURLBUT. I cannot consent to that. There is one amendment made by the Committee of the Whole at the bottom of page 15 upon which under the rules of the House we have a right to ask a separate vote. The amendment was offered in Committee of the Whole by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. CANDLER.]

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment was voted down in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I have it here marked as having been adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is no record of such an amendment having been adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOOKER. I insist that the amendments be read in order under the rule, and a separate vote if desired can be taken upon any one as it is read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole; which, without a division were adopted by the House, except as follows:

The amendment moved by Mr. KASSON, upon which he asked for a separate vote, was to strike out of the bill the following:

Provided, That all of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections, and deputy and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections, are hereby repealed.

Mr. KASSON. Upon agreeing to that amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 57, nays 93, not voting 140; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, John H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Blair, William R. Brown, Cannon, Caswell, Conger, Crounse, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Fort, Foster, Frost, Goodin, Hendee, Henderson, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Kasson, Kehr, Kimball, Leavenworth, Lynch, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Nortoh, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Plaisted, Potter, Rainey, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Smalls, Strait, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, White, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, William B. Burchard, Burleigh, Campbell, Cason, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cox, Crapo, Danford, Darrall, Douglas, Durand, Eden, Egbert, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Finley, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. YEATES, is confined to his room to-day by sickness; if here he would vote "no."

Mr. BOONE. My colleague, Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky, is absent by leave of the House on account of sickness.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I am paired upon all political matters, and this appears to be one, with my colleague, Mr. VAN VORHES, who is absent by leave of the House. If present Mr. VAN VORHES would vote "ay," and I would vote "no." I desire also to state that my colleague, Mr. HURD, is absent by leave of the House, and if present would vote "no."

Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. My colleague, Mr. PARSONS, is absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. WARREN. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CRAPO, who if present would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I was requested by Mr. HATCHER, of Missouri, to state that he was too unwell to attend the session of the House to-night.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am paired with Mr. MACDOUGALL, of New York, who if here, I presume, would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. HAYMOND. I am paired with Mr. HOGE, of North Carolina, who, if he were here, would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. CUTLER. My colleagues, Mr. HARDENBERGH and Mr. ROSS, are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, who, if here, would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. KASSON. I desire to state that Mr. GARFIELD is absent in Ohio; if here he would vote "ay."

Mr. FOSTER. My colleagues, Mr. LAWRENCE and Mr. MONROE, are absent by leave of the House; if present they would vote "ay."

Mr. WILLARD. My colleague, Mr. BRADLEY, is absent by leave of the House. If here he would vote "ay."

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleagues, Mr. KELLEY and Mr. WOOD, are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. PLAISTED. My colleagues, Mr. BLAINE and Mr. FRYE, are absent, sick. If present they would vote "ay."

Mr. MORGAN. On all political questions—and this appears to be considered such—I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. PLATT. If he were present he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My colleague, Mr. PRATT, is absent on a committee of the House. If here he would vote "ay."

Mr. DANFORD. On all political questions (and this seems to be one) I am paired with the gentleman from Delaware, Mr. WILLIAMS. If he were present he would vote "no," and I should vote "ay."

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WALKER, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. HOSKINS, are absent by leave of the House, and are paired on political questions. The gentleman from New York if here would vote "ay," and I presume the gentleman from Virginia would vote "no."

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CLYMER. If here he would vote "no," and I should vote "ay."

Mr. DOBBINS. My colleague, Mr. SINNICKSON, who is absent, would, if here, vote "ay."

Mr. LYNCH. My colleague from Mississippi, Mr. WELLS, is unavoidably absent. If present he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. WALLACE, who is necessarily absent. If here he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

Mr. MACKEY, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. FREEMAN, on all political questions, and I am advised that this is a political question. If Mr. FREEMAN were present he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no." I desire also to state that the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. EVANS, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. J. H. BAGLEY.

Mr. GUNTER. My colleague, Mr. GAUSE, who is absent on account of sickness would, if present, vote "no."

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleagues, Mr. KELLEY and Mr. FREEMAN, are absent on important business. If here they would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the amendments.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. SCHLEICHER,] appropriating $10,000 for the protection of the banks of the Rio Grande against overflow, be modified so that the money shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with all other appropriations, instead of under the direction of the Engineer of the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection to that.

There being no objection, the amendment was modified accordingly.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask unanimous consent to amend the provision in regard to surveys of the public lands by inserting in line 969, after the words "the cost of such surveys shall not exceed $10 per mile for standard lines," the following:

And the starting-point for said surveys may be established by triangulation.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

The following amendment, upon which a separate vote was asked by Mr. REAGAN and Mr. HOLMAN, was read:

Add to the provision in regard to payment of interest on 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia the following:

And in case there shall not be a sufficient sum of said revenues in the Treasury of the United States at such time as said interest may be due, then the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to pay said interest, and the same shall be re-imbursed to the Treasury of the United States from time to time as said revenues may be paid into said Treasury until the whole amount shall have been refunded.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 11, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair a sufficient number has not voted for ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAND. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 103, noes 27.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has a quorum voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. REAGAN. In accordance with notice already given and in pursuance of the agreement, I am entitled, as I understand, to have a vote of the House by yeas and nays. There are some of us who wish to record our protest against this proposition.

Mr. HURLBUT. I understand that the gentleman from Texas, having the right under the consent given to demand the yeas and nays, does so.

Mr. REAGAN. I do.

Mr. HURLBUT. In that case I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes 40, noes 100.

Mr. REAGAN. There seems to be some apprehension that a quorum may not be present. All I desire is that members who are here shall record themselves on the question. I will raise no objection upon the absence of a quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. But if it appear on a call of the yeas and nays that there is no quorum present, the House might not be able to proceed with business.

Mr. REAGAN. I will be satisfied with the announcement of the vote, though a quorum may not be present. I demand the yeas and nays. If gentlemen choose to deprive me of my rights in this matter I must submit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to taking a vote by yeas and nays on this question?

Objection was made.

Mr. SPARKS. Let us have a vote.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman perhaps is entitled to the yeas and nays by the agreement made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair.) The gentleman from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. My point of order is this: The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in calling for the yeas and nays, is out of order for the reason that the yeas and nays have been refused, and tellers have been refused, and on the vote the amendment was very largely adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. By agreement in Committee of the Whole, the yeas and nays were to be allowed in the House; and I ask, by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays be allowed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No, I object.

Mr. RANDALL. It was agreed there should be a yea and nay vote in the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. There was no such agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The Chair does not understand it is competent for the committee by any action it may take to bind the House. When the point was reserved in the committee to demand a vote by yeas and nays in the House it could not bind the House in the event of the refusal by less than one-fifth of a quorum to vote for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit in good faith, as unanimous consent seemed to have been given in Committee of the Whole to have the yeas and nays, that they will not be refused in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appreciates the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and if there be no objection, the yeas and nays will be considered as having been ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the yeas and nays be called. There is a quorum here. I offered the proposition, and should like to put myself on record in favor of it.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Unless the record of the debates show that such was the agreement in committee, I do not think the yeas and nays should be ordered. When it is agreed in committee that gentlemen shall have a vote in the House, that simply means that they shall have a right to take the yeas and nays if they can get them by one-fifth of those present voting in favor of the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. The same arrangement was made as to the other amendments on which your side desire a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This debate is not in order. The point of order has been ruled on by the Chair.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order, and it is this: There was a vote taken on this proposition and no quorum voted, and therefore I am entitled to tellers under the rule.

A MEMBER. The vote was largely in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair was not in the chair at the time the vote was taken to which the gentleman refers, and he is not officially informed of the absence of a quorum. The former occupant of the chair had announced the result and declared the amendment carried. The Chair appreciates the fairness of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If it were understood by unanimous consent that on the amendments on which a separate vote was asked the yeas and nays should be taken in the House, it would seem to be fair that that agreement should be carried out.

Mr. RANDALL. It seems to me the House ought to execute any agreement made by the committee in good faith.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, having made the point of order. Under the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I am willing to agree that the yeas and nays shall be called, if such was really the understanding in committee.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I ask for the reading of what took place in committee. If that was agreed to I do not object; but certainly I have not any recollection of having heard it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to, and the Clerk will proceed to read the next amendment, on which a separate vote was asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following:
For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, $25,000.

Mr. CONGER. I gave notice that I should call for a separate vote on that amendment, and demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me ask for a division in the first place. I do not think that should be stricken out.

Mr. CONGER. I think it is essential and vital, and I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. Take a division first.

Mr. CONGER. O, no; let us have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A sufficient number have not voted for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FOSTER. Tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist on his demand for tellers on the yeas and nays?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not.

The House divided; and there were ayes 19, noes not counted.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the amendment be again read, as I do not think it is understood by the House.

The amendment was again read.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 73.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand tellers. The House is making a mistake in striking this out.

Mr. RANDALL. That is in the nature of debate, and debate is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CONGER and Mr. CANDLER were appointed.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 66.

Mr. PAGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHITE. We will stay here until daylight before this is allowed to pass.

Cries of "Order!"

Mr. RANDALL. The yeas and nays have been refused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In common fairness, as gentlemen state they did not understand when the yeas and nays were refused what was the question before the House, the Chair will again put the question on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 81, not voting 134; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Banning, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Hamilton, Hancock, Hendee, Henderson, Holman, Hopkins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Kasson, Kehr, Kimball, Franklin Landers, Lane, Leavenworth, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Morgan, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Payne, Pierce, Plaisted, Potter, Rainey, Rea, John Reilly, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Tarbox, Thompson, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Waldron, Erastus Wells, White, Whiting, Wigginton, Willard, Andrew Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodburn—81.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blaine, Bliss, Bradley, John Young Brown, Buckner, Burleigh, Campbell, Cason, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cox, Crapo, Danford, Darrall, Douglas, Eames, Eden, Egbert, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Finley, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hurd, Joyce, Kelley, Ketcham, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Le Moyne, Levy, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, MacDougall, McMahon, Money, Monroe, Morrison, Mutchler, Nash, New, O'Brien, Odell, Parsons, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Platt, Poppleton, Powell, Pratt, Purman, James B. Reilly, John Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schumaker, Sheakley, Sinnickson, Slemons, Southard, Spencer, Stenger, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Teese, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—134.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. VAN VORHES. If he were present he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. MAISH. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. POWELL, was here to-night, but had to leave some time since on account of indisposition.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CLYMER, on political questions. I understand this is not a political question, and I vote "no."

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am paired with Mr. MACDOUGALL, of New York. If he were here I should vote "ay," and he would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was as follows:

In line 365 strike out $25,000 and insert $10,000; so that it will read:
For payment of the necessary expenses incurred in defending suits against the Secretary of the Treasury or his agents for the seizure of captured or abandoned property, and for the examination of witnesses in claims against the United States pending in any Department and for the defense of the United States in the Court of Claims, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, $10,000.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to state to the House that I was under a misapprehension in offering that amendment. I desire that the House will restore the amount to $25,000, which was reduced in the committee to $10,000.

There was no objection, and the amount was made $25,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 458, strike out $200,000 and insert $300,000, so that it will read, "Custom-house and post office, Cincinnati, Ohio: for continuation of building $300,000."

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment was not adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The record is that no quorum voting, it was agreed that there should be a vote in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment was lost in committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that any gentleman objects to taking the sense of the House upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment was not agreed to. It was merely allowed that an amendment of that sort should be offered in the House.

Mr. BANNING. That is true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What the gentleman from Pennsylvania states is in the remembrance of the Chair. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that as a compromise the amount be made $250,000.

Mr. BANNING. Say $275,000.

Mr. ATKINS. I call for a division on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment.

Objection was made.

Mr. BANNING. The gentleman from Pennsylvania agrees to $250,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the modification suggested by the gentleman from Ohio?

Objection was made.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 31, noes 99.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk commenced to read the next amendment.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to going back.

Mr. BANNING. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays is made too late.

Mr. RANDALL. The Clerk had commenced to read the next amendment.

Mr. BANNING. I rose to call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman did not address the Chair in time. It is not the fault of the Chair.

Mr. BANNING. I know it is not the fault of the Chair. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who made a fair offer in the committee and will not stand by it now.

Mr. RANDALL. I have stood by all that I offered in the committee.

The Clerk read the next amendment on which a separate vote was asked, as follows:

In line 553 strike out "$120,000" and insert "$150,000;" so that it will read:
Lighting and buoyage of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers: For maintenance of lights on the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri Rivers, and such buoys as may be necessary, $150,000.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 64, noes 63.

Mr. WHITE. Has a quorum voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. NEAL and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 75.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays; I desire to see how these gentlemen from the Mississippi Valley vote upon this question.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and on a division there were—ayes 28, noes 89.

So (one-fifth having voted in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 70, not voting 135; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Atkins, John H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Blair, Bland, Bright, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, William P. So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. SCALES said: I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. YEATES, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. MAISH. I desire to say that upon this question I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. LE MOYNE.] If he were present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. WADDELL, is absent on account of the death of his wife.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. NEAL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is but one amendment remaining undisposed of.

Mr. NEAL. Then I withdraw my motion.

The last amendment upon which a separate vote was asked was then read, as follows:

After line 942 insert as follows:
For every purpose necessary to the continuation of the geographical survey of the territory of the United States west of the one hundredth meridian under the War Department, for field and office work, and for the preparation, engraving, and printing of plates and atlas sheets, $50,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that by unanimous consent the amount of this appropriation be made the same as the sum appropriated for Professor Powell's survey. The amount of this appropriation is very large [Loud cries of "Object."]

Mr. BANNING. I object to any argument being offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Indiana that debate is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I shall ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The question was put on ordering the yeas and nays; and on a division there were—ayes 23, noes 96; one-fifth not voting therefor.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that, inasmuch as no quorum voted, we are entitled to tellers.

Mr. BANNING. There is evidently a misunderstanding about this matter. [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state that debate is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I make the point of order that we are entitled to tellers, as no quorum voted. [Cries of "Regular order."]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is entitled to tellers.

Mr. CONGER. What was the announcement as to the vote on the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state for the information of the gentleman from Michigan that the amendment was carried by the first vote. No quorum having voted on the last count, the Chair in the exercise of his discretion will order tellers, and appoint Mr. RANDALL and Mr. BANNING to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 34, noes 97.

So (one-fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COOK, (at two o'clock and five minutes a. m., Saturday.) As no quorum has voted, I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the amendment moved by Mr. BANNING and reported from the Committee of the Whole, and there were—yeas 72, nays 77, not voting 140; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, John H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Bland, Horatio C. Burchard, John H. Caldwell, Cannon, Caswell, Conger, Cook, Crounse, Culberson, Davy, Denison, Dunnell, Ellis, Franklin, Goodin, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hartridge, Hendee, Henderson, Hubbell, Hyman, Kasson, Kehr, Kimball, Franklin Landers, Lane, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Morgan, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Potter, Rainey, Reagan, John Reilly, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Sayler, Schleicher, Smalls, A. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blaine, Bliss, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—140.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being upon the passage of the bill, upon a division there were—ayes 105, noes 44.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. Pending that motion I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. RANDALL. We must have a session to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. Allow me to make a proposition. If the session for to-morrow is for the purpose of electing a Speaker pro tempore——

Mr. RANDALL. It is necessary to meet to-morrow for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MORRISON was granted leave of absence for one week.

Mr. PLAISTED was granted leave of absence for ten days from Monday next on account of important business.

Mr. HARRISON was granted indefinite leave of absence on account of important business.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. PAGE, that when the House adjourn it be to meet on Monday next; and it was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was then agreed to; and accordingly (at two o'clock and thirty minutes a. m., Saturday, June 24,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of Elizabeth Barrett, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. McFARLAND: The petition of Peter Meeks, late a private in Company I, Eighth Tennessee Infantry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REAGAN: The petition of citizens of Eastern and Northeastern Texas, against the removal of the place of holding Federal courts from Tyler to Dallas, in said State, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SEELYE: Memorial of the Seminole Nation of Indians, against any legislation looking to the establishment of a territorial government for the Indian country.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 24, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, for the information of the Committee on Appropriations, a letter of the Quartermaster-General stating the effect of the amendment adopted by the House of Representatives to the paragraph in the Army appropriation bill "for transportation of the Army," and recommending the restoration of the original phraseology; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Quartermaster-General recommending that the appropriation "for incidental expenses" for the year ending June 30, 1877, be so amended as to provide that the reasonable funeral expenses of an officer of the Army dying in the service may be paid by the Treasury Department on the approval of the Secretary of War; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Mrs. Mary Walsh, praying to be allowed a pension on account of services rendered by her husband, Redmond Walsh, late of Company H, Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Gardiner G. Hubbard, on behalf of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, now known as the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, praying damages by reason of the failure of title to certain lands in Kansas patented to the company by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALCORN. I present the petition of John Kethley, of Scott County, Mississippi, who was a soldier in the war of 1812, now very old and indigent. He prays that he may be allowed compensation for certain property taken and appropriated by the United States troops during the late war. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALCORN. I also present the petition of Jesse McKay, of Scott County, Mississippi, who likewise served as a soldier in the war of 1812. He states that he is very old, blind, and poor, and that he lost a large amount of property, which was taken and appropriated by United States troops during the late war, by General Sherman. He prays compensation. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the memorial of the New York committee for the prevention of licensed prostitution, signed by Mrs. Abby Hopper Gibbons, president, and other officers and members, praying that Congress may enact no law to authorize the board of health to license prostitution in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY presented the petition of Elias B. Bell, of Hillsdale County, Michigan, praying for the correction of his record as a soldier by removing the charge of desertion therefrom; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOOTH presented the memorial of a committee appointed at a public meeting held at San Benito, San Benito County, California, on the 27th of May, 1876, in favor of an amendment to the act of Congress granting a land subsidy to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONKLING. I have a petition to present, which I have been withholding for the appearance in his seat of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs; but as I see a very eminent member of that committee, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] before me, I should like to have his attention. I beg to present this petition in his hearing and to ask his attention to it.

I present the petition of Admiral Charles Wilkes, who as the Senator and other Senators know is very ill in this city now. It is a sworn petition, in which he says that thirteen years ago, when he was in command of the West Indian squadron, a paymaster, whom he names and who is now dead, paid for him a mess-bill amounting to $350; that ten days afterward he repaid it to him, which he remembers distinctly. The Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, having no power to dispense with the formal voucher, and finding none, charges that $350 to him, Admiral Wilkes, in the phrase of the Department, "checks his account" to that amount. The admiral's means are too slender to enable him, without great inconvenience, to submit to that check. This petition, if it is to be believed, establishes the injustice of the check; and I present it, moving its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs—I suppose it should go there—in the hope that that committee may offer an amendment to an appropriation bill, or report a bill in the customary form, directing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to allow Admiral Wilkes this sum.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to the Senator from New York that the petition ought to go to the Committee on Claims. It is not a matter that the Committee on Naval Affairs have any special jurisdiction over. The fact that these were naval officers does not put this claim on a different footing. It does not depend upon any construction of the laws in relation to the Navy. I think the petition ought to go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING. It is of course a matter of no consequence to me to which committee it goes. I think, however, my friend from California on reflection will find that, according to the usage of the Senate, and indeed according to reasoning too, this being not a claim but a mere matter of accounting in respect of the affairs of two naval officers, it ought rather to go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I make no resistance, however, if the Senator from California has a choice, except that we all know the Committee on Claims is a heavily burdened committee. This relief ought to be granted at once if it is to be done at all, and perhaps for convenience the petition had better go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, if there be no objection. It is so referred.

AGRICULTURAL REPORTS FOR 1874 AND 1875.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 100,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1874; 20,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 80,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Congressional Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print 200,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1875; 43,750 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 131,250 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 25,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. ANTHONY. We report these resolutions without recommendation, and refer their consideration to the Senate. The committee were not able to agree, and as unquestionably their report upon either resolution in any form would meet with opposition in the Senate, it was thought best to refer the whole subject to the Senate and let the resolutions go upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be placed upon the Calendar.

ABERT'S REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print 10,000 copies of the report of J. T. Abert, have instructed me to report back the same with an amendment, substituting "1,500" for "10,000;" and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That 1,500 extra copies of the report of J. T. Abert, engineer, on the survey of a line to connect the waters of the Cape Fear and Neuse Rivers and for a connection by water between Norfolk and Cape Fear River, be printed for the use of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, to report it back with sundry amendments. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill for consideration on Monday next.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. DORSEY. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3411) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue, to report it with an amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the bill on the same subject passed by the Senate, and which I believe is familiar to all Senators. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WEST. Is it necessary to read it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I take it if that is the identical bill which we passed in the Senate it is hardly worth while to read it. I should like to ask the Senator who has charge of the measure what is the difference between the two bills, so that we may understand it.

Mr. DORSEY. The differences are so great that I can hardly answer the Senator in a short time. They are different bills entirely.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the Senator desires to have the substitute agreed to in order to send the whole matter to a committee of conference?

Mr. DORSEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is hardly worth while, then, to read the whole bill that passed the Senate. If anything is to be read, it ought to be the House bill.

Mr. INGALLS I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment of the committee be dispensed with.

Mr. HAMLIN. I should like to hear the bill. It will go to a committee of conference and the Senate will never have heard the bill read.

Mr. WEST. The amendment is the bill which passed the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I make no objection in that case. I thought it was a new bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. If anything is to be read it ought to be the House bill, and not the Senate amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the reading of the amendment is dispensed with. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia as a substitute for the House bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. MERRIMON. Has this bill been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been referred and reported, and an amendment agreed upon by way of substitute, being the Senate bill already passed.

Mr. MERRIMON. The reason I mention it is that a very respectable citizen of this city came to see me about the subject this morning. He manifestly thought the bill would go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and he made two or three important suggestions, as I thought.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported this morning from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and considered by unanimous consent, and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. It strikes me that the course pursued now is a very common one. The Senate passed a bill on the same subject, and sent it to the House. The House, instead of taking up that bill and amending it, send to us a bill of their own. It is manifest that unless the two Houses are brought together by a conference, or in some other mode, they cannot pass a bill upon the subject. Therefore the course now suggested, that we pass our bill as an amendment to the House bill so as to bring the two Houses to a conference, is the only way to reach a result.

Mr. MERRIMON. My only object was to have an opportunity to present to the committee the suggestions which were made to me by the highly respectable citizen to whom I have referred, which I thought well entitled to consideration. I should certainly have objected to the consideration of the bill this morning, but my attention was diverted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that the Senator himself is a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am a member of the committee, but was not present when the bill was considered by them.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator being a member of that committee he would naturally be appointed a member of the committee of conference, although that is a matter for the Chair. He will therefore have an opportunity in conference to present his suggestion, and the only way in which the differences between the two Houses can be harmonized is by a conference.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not feel at liberty to object now, as my attention was not attracted when unanimous consent was asked to consider the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I will say that this bill was considered by the committee at the last meeting. The Senator from North Carolina was not present. The object is to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, so as to throw the matter into a conference committee.

Mr. MERRIMON. The matter I referred to was brought to my attention just before the Senate met to-day. I thought the objection raised was a serious one, and I promised the gentleman that I would bring it to the attention of the committee when the bill should be considered. I do not feel at liberty now to move to reconsider in order to present my suggestion. The matter may be settled in the committee of conference.

Mr. WEST. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to object now to the passage of the bill as amended by the Senate?

Mr. MERRIMON. I take it, it is not competent to interpose an objection now when the bill is on its passage.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator says he does not object, but that a conference can probably settle it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

TIME FOR FILING BOUNTY CLAIMS.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call up House bill No. 525. If it produces any discussion whatever, I shall not press it now. I have been urged very frequently to call it up. It was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and, after a slight discussion, withdrawn at that time.

The bill (H. R. No. 525) to extend the time for filing claims for additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1868, which expired by limitation on January 30, 1875, until July 1, 1880, was, by unanimous consent, considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN KLAMATH INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. KELLY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1316.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1316) to adjust the claims of the owners of lands within the limits of the Klamath Indian reservation, in the State of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment in line 5, after the word "scrip," to insert "for quantities of land not less than one section;" and, in line 12, to strike out the words "the subdivision" and insert "one section, as;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to issue scrip, for quantities of land not less than one section, to the legal owners of the land granted to the State of Oregon by act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, to aid in the construction of a wagon-road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of the State, authorizing them to select and locate, of the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands of the United States, not mineral, and in tracts not less than one section, as provided for in the United States land laws, and, if unsurveyed when taken, then to conform when surveyed to the general system of the United States land surveys, a quantity of land equal in amount to the lands within the limits of said grant embraced in the Klamath Indian reservation, designated and set apart by the Commissioner of the General Land Office as lands in place, and likewise any indemnity lands within the limits of said reservation that have been selected and approved to the State of Oregon under the provisions of said act; the quantity of said lands to be ascertained by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. And the said Commissioner shall issue patents for the lands so selected: Provided, That no scrip nor patents shall issue as hereinbefore provided until the owners of the lands embraced in said reservation shall execute and deliver to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a deed conveying to the United States all their right, title, and interest to the same: Provided further, That no scrip issued in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall be located upon other than the public lands lying within the said State of Oregon.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, the House of Representatives passed this bill some months ago, and before its passage the Committee on Public Lands thoroughly examined the case and made a report upon it; it is Report No. 183 of the House of Representatives of the present session of Congress. After passing that body the bill came to the Senate, was referred to our Committee on Public Lands and thoroughly examined there, but no written report was made to accompany the bill, inasmuch as the House report fully set forth all the facts. Briefly stated they are these: On the 2d day of July, 1864, the Congress of the United States granted to the State of Oregon certain lands; that is, three sections on each side of a road from Eugene City, in Western Oregon, to the eastern boundary of the State. The road was constructed by the company to whom the lands were granted by the State of Oregon at an expense of between $200,000 and $300,000. After the road was constructed and approved, the United States, through its superintendent of Indian affairs, located upon the lands the Klamath Indian reservation. The road had been constructed, the governor had approved it in accordance with the law of Congress, and the lands had been patented to the State or to the company that constructed the road, or at least the greater portion of them, amounting to 103,000 acres. As soon as the company was about to take possession of its lands the Indians threatened disturbance, the same Indians with whom we had trouble at the time of the Modoc war. These lands lie near the boundary between California and Oregon. The Indians, as I said, threatened to drive off the owners of the lands if they should assert their rights. The State was about to protect its citizens in their rights, when the superintendent of Indian affairs asked that the further assertion of their rights be postponed until Congress should take action in the matter.

At the last session of Congress they applied for payment for these lands. The Committee on Public Lands thought it was unwise to grant payment in money and rather suggested that other lands should be given in lieu of them. In accordance with that suggestion, at an early day in this session a bill to that effect was introduced into the House, passed that body, and now is before us. If it is desired, the report can be read with the appendages to it; the letter of Governor Grover, of Oregon, to Secretary Chandler, also the request of Commissioner Burdett, and the request of L. S. Dyar, United States Indian agent—two letters of Mr. Dyar, asking that this be done—the recommendation of E. P. Smith, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated February 8, 1875, asking the same thing, and another from Mr. Smith dated January 7, 1875, besides letters from a number of other citizens asking that it be done. Indeed this is the only way it seems to me by which this conflict or controversy with the Klamath Indians can be settled. It simply is to allow the men who constructed the road to take other lands in lieu of those which had been patented to the company, they transferring to the United States for the benefit of this reservation the lands which have been patented to them, and the other lands being transferred only upon the patented lands being receded to the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read, Mr. President.

Mr. KELLY. I will send the report to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report made by Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Public Lands in the House of Representatives, on the 25th of February:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1316) to adjust the claims of the owners of lands within the limits of the Klamath Indian reservation, in the State of Oregon, report as follows:

The Congress of the United States, by an act approved July 2, 1864, granted to the State of Oregon certain lands to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of said State. Said grant embraced the odd sections within the limits of three miles on each side of said road. Subsequently, October 24, 1864, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon designated the Oregon Central Military Wagon-Road Company as the company to receive the grant and construct the said road. In January, 1870, the road, being wholly completed, was accepted by the governor of Oregon, Hon. George L. Woods, and duly certified as constructed throughout its entire length.

In February, 1870, a treaty with the Klamath Indians was ratified, which treaty set apart a large tract of land as the Klamath Indian reservation. Said reservation embraced within its limits 130 377 acres of land which, under the act of July 2, 1864, legally inured to the said road company. The particular section of road which runs through the reservation was accepted according to law by the governor of the State as early as 1866, four years prior to the ratification of the treaty referred to.

Until recently the Indians seem not to have been aware of the existence of any adverse claim to any portion of the lands embraced within the reservation. They have, however, come to realize this fact, and are growing somewhat restive in the consideration thereof. The proprietors of the grant, in order to avoid trouble with the Indians and to secure a settlement of this matter, have indicated a willingness to forego their claim to lands within the limits of said reservation, provided the Government will permit them to locate an equal number of acres elsewhere in said State of Oregon.

The Sprague River Valley, in which these disputed lands are situate, is one of the richest and most fertile tracts within said grant, and it is scarcely possible that the company could be the gainer by the change from those to any other unoccupied lands in that State. They have paid taxes upon said lands, and in many instances have patents therefor. It is quite clear that the company, or its assigns, have rights which should be regarded by the General Government. If their rights under the act making the grant are strictly enforced, a serious conflict with the Indians is inevitable. To prevent the possibility of such a calamity, and to secure fair and equitable adjustment in the premises, this measure is urged to a favorable consideration. It will be observed that there is a provision in this bill that no scrip or patents to lands elsewhere in the State shall be given in lieu of the lands within the reservation until the proprietors of said grant shall execute and deliver to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a deed conveying to the United States all their right and title to the said lands. The accompanying exhibits, petitions, and communications of an official character fully sustain the view of the matter taken by the committee.

The committee report the following amendment, to wit: Add to said bill the following: "Provided further, That no scrip issued in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall be located upon other than the public lands lying within the said State of Oregon." The committee recommend the adoption of said amendment and the passage of said bill.

STATE OF OREGON, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Salem, October 22, 1875.

SIR: By act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, certain public lands were granted to the State of Oregon "to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of said State." By an act of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, approved October 24, 1864, this grant was conferred by the State upon the Oregon Central Military Road Company. The road contemplated by said act of Congress has been completed, and, by my predecessor, was examined and certified as constructed and completed throughout its entire length, according to the terms of the grant, on January 12, 1870. The treaty with the Klamath Indians, of 1864, was ratified February 17, 1870. (16 Statutes, page 707.) The line of the wagon-road passes through Klamath Lake Basin and the Klamath Indian reservation, as established subsequent to the listing of the wagon-road lands to the State for the use of said wagon-road company, embraces 130,377 acres of said lands belonging to the wagon-road company.

The Klamath Indian reservation was finally confirmed as such without notifying the Indians for whose use it was set apart that any portion of it was at that time the property of said wagon-road company. The entire wagon-road grant has been transferred by sale to a number of prominent capitalists, chiefly of the State of California, as I understand, without notice that the Klamath Indians claimed to hold the lands of the grant listed to the State within said reservation, as belonging to them by virtue of the treaty.

The wagon road company and their successors in interest have paid taxes upon said reservation lands from the time when they were segregated to said company. The present owners now desire to dispose of these lands to settlers; and persons are ready to become purchasers. But the Klamath Indians, lately discovering that said company claimed these lands by virtue of the grant mentioned, resist the claim and threaten to resist the occupancy of any portion of their reservation by settlers.

I am informed that the owners of this grant are willing to take a money indemnity or lieu lands on any just basis, for the surrender of all these lands falling within said reservation.

I desire to make special presentation of this fact, that the Klamath Indians occupy the same region of country which was the home of Captain Jack and his band of less than a hundred warriors, whose hostility cost the General Government and this State so many lives and so much money, and to urge upon the attention of your Department the vital importance of early action on the part of the General Government in adjusting this matter. From my experience of nearly twenty-five years upon the Pacific borders, I do not hesitate to say that if this question of title to lands within the Klamath reservation remains for any considerable period unadjusted the most serious Indian hostilities will occur, disastrous to the settlements in Southern Oregon and Northern California, as well as expense to the General Government in an amount far exceeding any cost of present settlement of the matter.

Could the reservation be vacated and the Klamath Indians be removed to other lands, I presume it would be the most satisfactory solution of the question, as far as the owners of these lands are concerned; but if this cannot be done, it would appear but common justice and fair dealing that other lands of equal value be given in release of these or that a fair money compensation be made for the same.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. F. GROVER,
Governor of Oregon.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Sacramento, California, January 28, 1876.

SIR: I am informed that by an act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, certain lands were granted to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of the State, and that by an act of the Legislature of Oregon approved October 24, 1864, this grant was conferred on the Oregon Central Military Road Company. I am further informed that the proposed military road was completed according to the terms of the act of Congress making a grant of land in aid of the construction thereof, and the lands granted were listed to the State; also, that at a date subsequent to the transfer of these lands to the State of Oregon, a treaty was ratified with the Klamath and other Indians, by which a portion of the lands already donated for the purpose above named was set apart for an Indian reservation.

The Oregon Central Military Road Company, on which the grant was conferred by the State of Oregon, has since sold the land to other parties, and it is now owned by a company of capitalists, most of whom, as I am informed, are citizens of this State. The portion of it embraced within the Klamath Indian reservation, about 130,000 acres, they are unable to make use of for purposes of settlement and cultivation, though, as I am informed, they pay taxes on it annually under the laws of Oregon, for State and county purposes. Holding title to this land from the Federal Government and paying taxes on it under the laws of the State, they naturally desire to obtain possession of it, so that they may use it, or, failing in this, that they may receive the value of the land, either in cash or in other lands elsewhere, and I think in this respect their desires are only just and reasonable, and are entitled to consideration from the Government.

There are other considerations, growing out of the relation of the reservation Indians to these lands, which make it a matter of very great importance that the rights of these parties should be adjusted on some satisfactory basis at as early a day as possible.

The Indians on the reservation are jealous and warlike, and if they come to understand that citizens have a title to a portion of the land embraced in their reservation, and which they have heretofore regarded as exclusively their own, by a title resting on the good faith of the Government, it is not probable that they will contemplate the situation with complacency. On the contrary, it is to be feared that the discovery of such fact by them would be the signal for them to commence hostilities. And while it cannot be doubted what the ultimate result of such action on their part would be, the loss of life and property consequent on the outbreak of the Modoc, in the same section, is too recent to allow us to regard lightly the prospect of another occurrence of the same kind.

The rights, therefore, of the citizens owning these lands, the good faith of the Government pledged to the Indians in solemn treaty, and the safety and welfare of the settlers in the vicinity of the reservation all conspire to demand that the Government shall take prompt steps either to put the citizens in possession of the land which they hold by title from the Government or to extinguish their title to the lands by giving them an equitable consideration therefor. To place them in possession of their lands would involve the breaking up of the reservation and the removal of the Indians to some other locality; that this ought to be done I am not prepared to say. But if it is thought best to retain the reservation where it is—and the question of its removal deserves very serious considerations before its determination in the affirmative—I certainly think the citizens in question are entitled to relief in the other manner suggested.

Trusting that this matter will receive your early attention, I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM IRWIN,
Governor of State of California.

Hon. Z. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 4, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a communication from your Office, dated the 17th ultimo, respecting the action of this Office touching the lands in what is known as the Klamath Indian reservation, in Oregon, embraced in the limits of the grant of July 2, 1864, for the Oregon central military wagon-road.

In reply, I have to state that the odd sections falling within said reservation have been approved to the State for the benefit of the road, within the three and six mile limits, as follows:

	Acres.
April 21, 1871	$51,248 56
December 8, 1871	37,414 51
April 2, 1874	4,487 34
Total	93,150 41

The treaty creating the reservation not having been ratified until 1870 and not having been brought to the attention of this Office until after the approval of the lands, no formal decision upon the rights of the State has been promulgated, the question not having been examined with reference to the force of the reservation made subsequent to the date of the grant, to take the lands out of its operation.

Very respectfully,

S. S. BURDETT, Commissioner.

Hon. E. P. SMITH,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

KLAMATH AGENCY, OREGON, October 16, 1873.

SIR: Having returned to the reservation and thought further relative to the subject-matter of your communication of September 17, in regard to the lands of the Oregon Central Military Road Company, located on this reservation, I deem it proper to express more fully my views.

By the treaty of October 14, 1864, the Government of the United States pledged itself in the most solemn way to secure this land to the Indians and their heirs forever. This was thoroughly explained to them, and has been repeatedly since, and their good feelings toward the Government and its white citizens to-day rests on the conviction that this pledge will be conscientiously fulfilled.

Say to them, the Government has deeded this land to the road company, and they will reply, "The Government made a solemn treaty with us, giving us a title to all this land, only reserving the right of way for roads, nothing being said about the location of lands, and we cannot understand that this is not a scheme to take our country from us."

They will look upon this as a violation of the treaty by which the Government does positively give them an assurance of their permanent ownership of this identical land, and they will say, "If the Government violates one pledge, there is no certainty that it will fulfill any."

I do not thus express myself without having as fully considered the subject as I am capable of doing. I have also counseled with persons of sagacity and reliability who are fully conversant with the feelings of the Klamath, Modoc, and Snake bands located on this reservation, and I will say that it is my honest conviction that, if a public announcement were made to-day to the three thousand white and red inhabitants of this section of the country, that we would stand upon the verge of a war by the side of which the late difficulty with the renegade band of Modocs would be dwarfed into insignificance. A combination of Klamaths, Modocs, Snakes, and Pi-Utes could at a single stroke destroy the sparse settlements of Southeastern Oregon, and, taking refuge in the volcanic fields of this country, with the supplies of arms and subsistence secured by their success, would cost the Government millions of money and a thousand lives before they could be subjugated.

Why will not the Government, in order to make its promises good to secure peace for both Indians and whites and the civilization of the red men, procure a title to the lands for the Indians? The outlay would be insignificant as compared with the expenses of a war, which, without the greatest care and caution, will result from this most unfortunate affair.

During the Modoc war there were always irresponsible parties ready to talk to these Indians and make them distrustful of both the reservation authorities and their Government. Among other things, they were told that as soon as the Modocs were subdued and taken from the country, the Government would steal away the reservation lands and take them away. Although the Indians knew these parties were not much entitled to credit, there was at one time a great deal of excitement, and they could only be satisfied by assuring them that the Government would surely make its promises good, and secure to them and their children forever all the lands of the Klamath reservation. Suggest this thing to them now, and the galling wound will be opened afresh, and they cannot be persuaded to believe that the Government means to allow them justice.

It is possible that, with judicious management and the purchase of all the road-lands south of Sprague's River, the Indians could be prevented from open hostility, but it is unmistakably true that nothing short of a title to the reservation would be justice.

I have expressed myself plainly and distinctly, knowing that you wish to know the actual facts in the case, and not that I wish to draw the picture with brighter colors than belong to it.

I would respectfully insist on the Department sending out a man of sagacity and experience to inquire into this matter in all its bearings; some one in whom the Department can repose entire confidence to make a report and suggestions in this case, which is one, perhaps, of greater consequence than any question now remaining unsettled among the Indians in this section of the Union.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. S. DYAR,
United States Indian Agent.

Hon. EDW. P. SMITH,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

KLAMATH AGENCY, OREGON, September 23, 1874.

SIR: According to agreement, I wrote you very briefly relative to the lands claimed by the Oregon Central Military Road Company, within the limits of the Klamath reservation.

Treaty was concluded by the Government with the Klamath, Modoc, and Yahooskin Snake Indians on October 4, 1864, but was no fully ratified by Congress and signed by the President until February 17, 1870. Meanwhile (between 1864 and 1870) a bill was passed by Congress granting said company the right to build a road from near Eugene City, in the Willamette Valley, to the eastern boundary of the State, and granting also to the company every alternate section of land for three miles on each side of the road to aid in the construction of the same.

This road runs diagonally through the whole length of the Klamath reservation, a distance of sixty miles or more, traversing the very best portions of the same; in fact, is so located as to embrace within the limits of the six miles in breadth more than one-half of all the land upon the reserve suitable for cultivation or for winter grazing.

I am informed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the decision that the road company has the prior right to these alternate sections upon the reserve.

Now, if Sprague River Valley be taken from these Indians, the only hope of their ever becoming self-supporting is removed; for they must depend on stock-raising in the future as their only means of subsistence, and Sprague River Valley, nearly all of which is embraced in this claim, is the only reliable winter pasturage upon the reservation.

Unless some action be taken by which these lands are secured to the Indians, the most serious results are inevitable.

I hope you, with the Indian commissioners, will induce the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to furnish funds for the Indians at Yainax sufficient to keep them from starvation.

I have been obliged to close my school for want of means to support it. This I very much regret, but no other course is possible. Mr. Werden returned to-day all right.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. S. DYAR,
United States Indian Agent.

Hon. WM. VANDEVER,
United States Inspector.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
February, 8, 1875.

SIR: In reply to the inquiry contained in your letter of the 6th instant relative to Senate bill 1164, entitled "A bill to adjust the claim of the owners of land within the limits of the Klamath Indian reservation in the State of Oregon," what, if any, action may have been had by me, or under my sanction, relative to the subject-matter of the bill, and requesting an expression of Office views respecting the same, I would respectfully state that the bill referred to has not been submitted for the views of this Office.

A report was made to the honorable Secretary of the Interior on the 7th ultimo, (copy herewith,) which contained the views of this Office on the subject-matter of the bill. I would further state that it is deemed very important and desirable that the Klamath Indian reservation in Oregon should remain intact, as contemplated by the treaty of October 14, 1864, (16 Statute at Large, 707,) and that such action be taken as will best enable the accomplishment of this end.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. P. SMITH,
Commissioner.

Hon. COMMISSIONER GENERAL LAND-OFFICE

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS,
January 7, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the claim asserted for lands within the Klamath Indian reserve in Oregon by said State, under act of Congress granting alternate sections of the public lands to aid in the construction of wagon-roads. The attention of the Department was called to this subject by communication from this Office on the 11th of November last. A brief statement is as follows:

By an act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, (United States Statutes at Large, volume 13, page 355,) there was granted to the State of Oregon, to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Eugene City, by way of Middle Fork of Willamette River, and the most feasible pass in the Cascade range of mountains near Diamond Peak, to the eastern boundary of the State, alternate sections of public lands designated by odd numbers for three sections in width on each side of said road.

Subsequently on the 14th of October, 1864, a treaty was concluded (ratified February 17, 1870) (United States Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 707) between the United States and the Klamath and Modoc tribes, and Yahooskin band of Snake Indians, by the terms of which the United States recognized the existence of the Indian title or claim to the region of country therein described, by having the Indians cede and relinquish their right, title, and claim thereto to the United States, with the proviso, "that the following described tract within the country ceded by the treaty shall, until otherwise directed by the President of the United States, be set apart as an Indian reservation." Then follows a description of the tract of country reserved.

This Office being in receipt of information that the State of Oregon claimed the lands, granted in the act first above named, along the entire route of the wagon-road, (which passes through the tract of country reserved, as aforesaid, for Indian purposes,) under date of the 17th of October last, addressed a letter to the General Land Office requesting to be advised what action, if any, had been taken by that Office relative to the claim of said State, so far as the alternate sections, within the limits of the said Indian reservation, were concerned. A reply was received to this letter, dated the 4th of November last, in which it was stated "that the odd sections falling within said reservation have been approved to the State for the benefit of the road within the three and six mile limits, as follows:

	Acres.
April 21, 1871	51,248 56
December 8, 1871	37,414 51
April 2, 1873	4,487.34
	93,150.41"

All since the date of the ratification of the treaty. In consequence of this state of facts, this Office submitted for the consideration and decision of the Department—

"First. If the Indian title had not been extinguished, and was in existence, the same being recognized, to the region of country in question by the treaty of October 14, 1864, did the grant to the State of Oregon, made by the act of July 2, 1864, which is confined to public lands, attach to any of these lands?

"Second. If the grant to the State of Oregon by the act of July 2, 1864, did not attach, it is respectfully submitted whether steps should be taken to have the approval of the lands to the State annulled.

"Third. If an annulment of such approval is deemed impracticable, ought not the Indians to be re-imbursed by an appropriation by Congress of the value of the lands within their reservation which have been approved to the State?"

Other questions were also submitted relative to this matter.

Under date of the 28th ultimo, Mr. B. J. Pengra, agent for the parties in interest, in a communication to this Office, states that the lands granted to the State of Oregon by the act of July 2, 1864, were, by the Legislative Assembly of said State, in September following, granted to the Oregon Military Road Company, and, so far as the public surveys have been extended, have been located and approved to said company by the State and by the United States, and that said lands belonging to said Oregon Road Company by virtue of said acts have recently been conveyed by said compay to B. J. Pengra, of Oregon, and by said B. J. Pengra to Nicholas Luning, Edgar Mills, N. D. Rideout, W. H. Parks, G. W. Colby, W. C. Belcher, John Bogga, and others of the State of California.

Mr. Pengra further states as follows:

"I have therefore to inform you that I am instructed by the owners of the grant to propose to your Office, as an equitable settlement of the matter, and to indemnify them for the lands taken by the Government, that Congress pass an act at its present session allowing said owners to locate, in lieu of their lands embraced in the Klamath reservation, an equal number of acres of any vacant Government lands elsewhere, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue such certificates as will enable them to make such locations."

In view of the questions involved and the difficulties that might attend an annulment of the approval of the lands to the State within said reserve, and as affording a possible solution thereof, I would respectfully recommend that the proposition made by Mr. Pengra in behalf of the parties in interest be recommended to Congress, with the request that such action be taken by that body as shall, in its judgment, be deemed proper and necessary to permanently settle the question.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. P. SMITH, Commissioner.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

To the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned respectfully represent that they are settlers and citizens living in the vicinity of Klamath reservation, Oregon and California, and being well acquainted with the character and past history of the various tribes of Indians upon that reservation induces them earnestly to solicit an immediate settlement of the private land claims within the boundary of the reservation, as they fully believe if it were known by the Indians that they had not full and complete right to the whole reservation, and that the Government hesitated in protecting that right, the consequences would be most alarming, and before relief could be had the whole of Southeastern Oregon and Northern California would be depopulated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator from Oregon would explain this bill to us a little further. It may be perfectly correct, although in this report I do not find any recommendation from the Secretary of the Interior. There is a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that, fairly construed, seems to be in favor of this scheme; but from the Secretary of the Interior or the Land Office I do not find any recommendation. I notice in this bill a provision "likewise any indemnity lands within the limits of said reservation that have been selected and approved to the State of Oregon under the provisions of said act." In running my eye over the act hastily I do not perceive any indemnity lands provided for.

Mr. KELLY. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that that provision is not in that act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot find it there.

Mr. KELLY. It is not in that act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does it mean?

Mr. KELLY. There is a subsequent act of Congress which I can turn to by which indemnity land was given to the company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see that act. The bill that comes from the House of Representatives refers to the act of July 2, 1864, as being the act that gives this right to have indemnity lands. How extensive that claim may be I do not know. The act does not give it; and yet this bill, reciting that it does and providing for it, would be a confirmation of all the indemnity lands that they have heretofore claimed, whether consistently with law or otherwise. So if they have been getting an allowance for indemnity lands that the present law does not provide for, this bill would step in happily and make the necessary provision. Therefore I should like to see the statute upon which this indemnity business rests. The House of Representatives which passed this bill puts it upon the ground that this right of indemnity arose under the act of 1864. It is a matter of considerable consequence, as anybody can readily see, because the lands allotted under this reservation are more than ninety-three thousand acres that we are now to pay these gentlemen for by giving them a roving commission to take lands anywhere else in lieu of these the title to which they say is doubtful.

Mr. SARGENT. Within the State of Oregon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but I suppose that State is large enough to allow the location of 93,000 acres more.

Mr. KELLY. I cannot in the hurry of the moment lay my hands on the statute; but I can assure the Senator from Vermont that the right to indemnity lands is given by law, whether in some special act or otherwise I am not aware.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That right is clearly not given as stated in this bill. I have not the slightest ground to question my friend's sincerity in supposing that it is so; but he agrees that this statement in the bill of a general right of indemnity arising under the act of 1864 is incorrect, because the act of 1864 certainly does not provide, if I have read it correctly, and I have read it twice, for any indemnity at all.

Mr. KELLY. That is very true.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill, if you pass it as it stands, will by its own force provide for making good any indemnity land that by right or wrong they may have already claimed or got allowed to them. That the Senator does not wish to do, because it is not right.

Mr. KELLY. No, it is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are only providing for what is due to them in point of law. I suggest, therefore, that the bill go over till to-morrow.

Mr. KELLY. I will offer an amendment that I think will obviate that difficulty. I propose to insert in the twenty-first line:

Or any act of Congress amendatory or supplemental thereto.

So as to read:

Any indemnity lands within the limits of said reservation having been selected and approved by the State of Oregon under the provisions of said act or any act of Congress amendatory or supplemental thereto.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit that that will not do, because here are five lines which we all agree, as they are stated, have no business in this bill, because they acknowledge a right to indemnity lands growing out of the act of 1864. We all agree that no such right of indemnity does grow out of the act of 1864. Now, if there is any subsequent legislation which has given those gentlemen a lawful right to indemnity lands, I want to know upon what ground that legislation stands. If it should happen to turn out that that legislation gave indemnity lands for those they might lose in crossing this reservation, and we pass this bill, then we shall have given them indemnity lands twice over. The Senator does not want to do that. Therefore it is important that we should see the precise law upon which any indemnity at all is claimed. We do not find it in the act of 1864; and now it is said to be somewhere else. Before we provide for any indemnity let us see that the law does give it somewhere else, and how much, and upon what terms. I move, therefore, to postpone this bill till to-morrow, not in any hostility to the general object of it, but we all ought to desire to get it right.

Mr. KELLY. I hope that will not be done, and for this reason: I am sure the Senator from Vermont will see that if this bill is so amended as to provide that they shall be "entitled to indemnity lands within the limits of the said reservation that have been selected and approved to the State of Oregon under the provisions of the said act or of any act amendatory or supplemental thereto," it will be very clear that they can claim no lands excepting those that have been so selected.

I may say here for the Senator's information that I suppose there are few lands that have been reserved. The amendment to the law was only to give the company lands in lieu of those that had been selected for other purposes. As I said, if the amendment I now propose be adopted, the company surely can claim no indemnity lands unless it be under some law of Congress, either the original law or some supplemental act.

I would say further that I should have no hesitation in consenting to the postponement of the bill to another day until I could find the law, excepting for the great difficulty that is known to exist about getting up bills here at this period of the session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to ask my colleague one question, what he understands the words to mean that I am now about to read:

Likewise any indemnity lands within the limits of said reservation that have been selected and approved to the State of Oregon under the provisions of said act.

Mr. KELLY. There may have been indemity lands selected. I should rather have it amended so that there would be no question on that point.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to strike out the words I have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has moved to postpone the present consideration of the bill. The first question is on that motion.

Mr. KELLY. I will accommodate the Senator from Vermont and allow the bill to go over, with the distinct understanding that I shall have the privilege of calling it up at any time. I wish to be perfectly fair about this and show the Senator the papers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not doubt it. I hope the inquiry I have made about this bill has not led my friend to suppose that I was doubting his sincerity at all.

Mr. KELLY. Not in the least.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the lands of the United States are getting so short that we have to be a little careful about any more grants. I cannot agree to any understanding that I shall assent to this bill being called up so as to displace anything else, but my friend will take his fair chance.

Mr. KELLY. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nobody will prevent the bill coming up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to suggest an amendment and have it pending, so that it may not be overlooked when the bill comes up. In line 11, after the word "mineral," I desire to insert:

And which are then subject to entry under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just the amendment I was proposing to move; and there ought to be also a further amendment striking out the provision about unsurveyed lands, because no unsurveyed lands are subject to homestead and pre-emption.

Mr. KELLY. I will answer both those objections when the bill comes up again.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to submit an amendment to be considered, to strike out these words:

And likewise any indemnity lands within the limits of said reservation that have been selected and approved to the State of Oregon under the provision of said act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) appointing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

W. A. GRAHAM.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being House bill No. 2676.

Mr. SARGENT. There are but two minutes left of the morning hour. We might by common consent consider the morning hour as over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has so nearly expired that, if there be no objection, it will be considered as having expired.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should like to have the Senate consider a bill that will only take a minute, being the bill (H. R. No. 431) for the relief of the heirs of William A. Graham. It will not take longer than the reading of it, I am sure.

Mr. SPENCER. There are only two minutes of the morning hour left.

Mr. JOHNSTON. This bill can be passed in two minutes.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not like to object, but I will call up the regular order of business at one o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report read, if there is one.

Mr. JOHNSTON. There is a printed report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Patents, on the 19th instant.

Mr. SPENCER. I call for the regular order. I am satisfied that this bill cannot pass very soon.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I hope the report will be read through.

Mr. SPENCER. There are several Senators who will object to the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is quite obvious that the bill will have to be discussed, reviving a patent forty years old and giving an exclusive right by act of Congress, and opening a good many questions of law between the people who are making these machines and this present patentee that it would be very difficult to decide. Therefore it will take some time to see whether the bill is in proper shape, if it is to pass at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired and the unfinished business of yesterday will now be proceeded with.

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the District of Columbia report an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert a substitute. The substitute will be read, and the House bill will not be, unless its reading is called for.

The Secretary read the first section of the substitute, as follows:

That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for the purpose of imposing a just measure of taxation on the property of said District, there shall be, and is hereby, levied upon all real property in said District, at the rate of $1.50 on each $100 of the assessed value of the same; that for such purpose, until otherwise provided, the general assessment of real property made in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, shall remain, subject only to the revisions for special causes hereinafter provided for.

Mr. INGALLS. That clause is imperfect from the fact that it does not specify that a tax shall be levied upon real property. It says:

There shall be, and is hereby, levied upon all real property in said District at the rate of $1.50 on each $100 of the assessed value of the same.

The words "a tax" should be inserted after the word "District," in the eighth line. I move that those words be inserted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the substitute, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the amount collected under the provisions of this act shall be distributed for the purposes required under the various acts in force in the District of Columbia, upon a just and fair apportionment, to be made by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office: Provided, That before any of said fund shall be expended such apportionment shall be established by said commissioners and published at least three times in a daily newspaper published and having a general circulation in the District of Columbia; and the said apportionment shall stand as the law for the distribution of the funds herein mentioned: Provided further, That deficiencies in any of said funds enumerated in said apportionment may be supplied from any surplus in either of said funds so apportioned; but, unless a surplus exists, the revenues belonging to one fund shall not be applied to the purposes of any other fund.

SEC. 3. That one-half of the tax levied by this act upon real property shall become due and payable on the 1st day of September, 1876; and the other one-half of said tax shall become due and payable on the 1st day of January, 1877; and in every case where the tax levied by this act shall be paid in installments as herein authorized, each of such payments shall be deemed to have been made on account of the several funds and for the different purposes indicated in the second section of this act; and the pro rata proportion of payment so made shall be carried to the credit of the respective funds according to such apportionment.

SEC. 4. That if one-half of the tax herein levied upon the real property taxed by this act shall not be paid on or before the 1st day of September, 1876, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent; and there shall be added, to be collected with such taxes, a penalty of 2 per cent. upon the amount thereof on the first day of each succeeding month until payment of said installment and penalty. And if said installment shall not be paid on or before the 1st day of January, 1877, together with one-half of said original tax due on or before said 1st day of January, a like penalty shall be added on said last one-half of said tax, and the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax, to be dealt with and collected in the manner prescribed by law. All the taxes herein levied or which may hereafter be levied upon the real property within the said District of Columbia shall be collected within four years from the levying of the same; and the collection of taxes shall not be enforced by law after the lapse of said four years. It shall be the duty of the collector to promptly advertise and sell all delinquent property on which taxes shall accrue or shall be in arrears during his term of office; and if any such taxes shall be lost to said District by reason of the neglect of the collector to collect the same, each and every collector whose neglect may have contributed to said loss shall be responsible to the said District for the amount thereof, and shall be sued therefor on his official bond by the commissioners of said District or their successors in office.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the fourth section, and might as well do it as the reading proceeds. I propose to strike out the word "September" wherever it occurs and also the word "January," and insert in lieu thereof——

Mr. CONKLING. I think this proposed substitute had better be read through regularly before we stop for amendments. It is a substitute which for one I do not mean to vote for unless I can find some reason that I have not yet heard, and I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senator having it in charge to let the Senate understand why the whole House bill is stricken out and all these matters proposed. When we come to details we can adjust the needed amendments, if the substitute is to prevail.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that course, but the Senator having charge of the bill has shown to me that the amendment that I suggested is not necessary.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the substitute, as follows:

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the collector for said District as soon as practicable after the 1st day of July, 1877, to prepare a complete list for publication of all the real property in said District which shall be then in arrears for taxes; and, as soon as possible after completing the said list, he shall publish the same, with the notice that if the taxes due, together with the penalty and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale, the property will be sold at the south front of the city hall, in the city of Washington, on the second Monday of October, 1877, and on the same day in each succeeding year thereafter; such publication to be made in the form of a pamphlet for the use of the tax-payers, to be issued not less than three weeks next prior to said day of sale; and the printing of the same shall be done at the Government Printing Office at the net cost thereof; the number of copies shall not exceed 10,000; and said pamphlets shall be kept at the office of the collector of said District for distribution among the said tax-payers.

SEC. 6. That on the second Monday of October, 1877, and in each year thereafter, the collector shall proceed to sell any and all real property upon which taxes remain unpaid, and shall continue to sell the same every secular day until all such property shall have been brought to auction. Immediately at the close of the sale, upon payment of the purchase-money, he shall issue to the purchaser a certificate of sale; and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner thereof within two years from the date of sale, by payment to the collector of said district, for the use of the legal holder of the certificate, the amount for which it was sold at such sale, and 12 per cent. per annum thereon, a deed therefor shall be given by the commissioners of the District or their successors in office to the legal holder of such certificate, which deed shall be admitted and held to be a good and perfect title in fee-simple to any property bought at any sale herein authorized: Provided, That no property advertised as aforesaid shall be sold upon any bids not sufficient to meet the amount of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid upon any property is not sufficient to meet the taxes, penalty, and costs thereon, said property shall be bid off for the amount thereof by the said commissioners or their successors in office, in the name of and for the District of Columbia as purchaser: And provided also, That minors or other persons under legal disability shall be allowed one year after the removal of such disability to redeem any of their property so sold, from the purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their heirs or assigns, or from the District of Columbia, by the payment of the amount of purchase-money paid therefor, together with 10 per cent. per annum interest thereon as aforesaid, and all taxes and assessments that have been paid thereon by the purchaser or his assigns, or which may have accrued to the District of Columbia, between the day of sale and the period of such redemption, with 10 per cent. per annum interest on the amount of such taxes and assessments, and also the value of the improvements which may have been made by or erected on such property by the purchaser while the same was in his, her, their, or its possession.

SEC. 7. That the collector of taxes immediately after sale of any property as aforesaid shall file with the comptroller a written report, in which he shall give a statement of the property advertised and the property sold, to whom it was assessed, the taxes due, to whom sold, the amount paid, the date of sale, the cost thereof, and the surplus, if any, and the lands as aforesaid sold to the District. Any surplus remaining after the collection of taxes, penalties, and costs, on any real estate, shall be deposited by the collector of taxes to the credit of the surplus fund, to be paid to the owner or owners, or their legal representatives, in the same manner as other payments made by the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. That the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, shall appoint five competent persons to be assessors, who shall be citizens and tax-payers of said District, and to hold office for the term of one year, the salary of each assessor to be $750; that it shall be the duty of the board of assessors to inform themselves by all proper and lawful means, at all times, of all taxable property in the District of Columbia which may have escaped valuation at previous assessments, and for this purpose all buildings in process of erection, enlargement, or improvement, the work whereon, either by contract or by good management, should be completed on or before the 1st day of July then next ensuing, shall be assessed or re-assessed as though such work was already completed. It shall be their duty to assess and value and make returns on or before the 1st day of June of each and every year of all and every species of property by this act made taxable and not before assessed and valued; to reduce the assessment and valuation of any property before assessed and valued which may have been lessened in value by means of fire or other casualty; to increase the assessment and valuation of any property which may have been enhanced in value by reason of any addition thereto or improvement the eof; and to make such corrections and alterations in previous assessments and valuations as may, according to their judgment and best information, be just and proper, having in view the actual cash value of the property. Said assessors shall, between the 1st and 20th day of June, 1876, of which notice shall be given by said assessors, hold daily sessions for the purpose of equalizing the assessments theretofore made by them, and for the purpose of hearing and determining any and all appeals from the valuation theretofore made by them. Each assessor shall, at their meetings as aforesaid, make full and detailed reports of his acts as such assessor. And during this period they shall have power to revise assessments theretofore made by them, or any of them, by either justly increasing or diminishing any particular assessment. Upon the assessment so made and finally revised, the tax herein provided for shall be levied, and the collector of taxes shall be in readiness to receive payment of the same on and after the 1st day of November, 1876. Said assessors before entering upon their duties shall respectively take or subscribe an oath or affirmation before some officer authorized to administer oaths or affirmations in said District, to faithfully discharge the duties of their said office, which oaths when taken shall be certified by the officer before whom the same shall have been taken, and shall be filed with the commissioners of the District or their successors in office

Such tax shall be paid on or before the days, in the manner, and subject to the same penalties for non-payment as hereinbefore provided for in case of taxes on property; but no property shall be exempt from seizure for non payment of tax.

SEC. 11. That should not either such half-yearly installment of such tax, and any accrued penal interest thereon, be paid within thirty days next after being so due, the collector may distrain sufficient goods and chattels belonging to the person charged with such tax to pay such tax and penalty, together with the costs of such enforced collection; that no person shall engage in any trade, business, or profession hereinbefore mentioned until he shall have obtained a permit therefor as next hereinafter provided.

SEC. 12. That any person engaged or engaging in any trade, occupation, or profession whereon an annual or other tax is hereby imposed shall, before continuing or commencing in business, apply to the collector for a permit, stating, under oath or affirmation, all the requisite facts in relation thereto, and shall pay the amount of money required by law in such case. The collector, if satisfied in the premises, shall thereupon issue to the applicant the required permit, stating therein the name or style of the person, firm, or company to whom, and the term of time for which, the same is granted; the nature of the business thereby authorized; and the precise place (city, town, district, number of house, street, or roadway) wherein or wherever the business thus permitted is to be prosecuted. Each such permit shall be signed by the collector and impressed with the seal of his office. Any such permit may be assigned pursuant to the law and police regulations; and in like manner the location or place of business therein specified may be changed; but the nature of the business shall not be altered without a new permit. Such assignment and change shall be approved and certified to by the collector before becoming operative; and any person found transacting any business not authorized by his permits, or transacting any business in a place not named in his permit, shall be considered and dealt with as thus acting without a permit.

SEC. 13. That all permits of produce dealers, peddlers, and commercial agents shall date from the 1st day of April of each year and expire on the 31st day of March following. Those for carts, wagons, drays, hacks, cabs, private carriages, omnibuses, street-cars, lawyers, physicians, dentists, architects, notaries public, engineers, costumers, and peltrers shall date from the 1st day of July of each year and expire on the 30th day of June following; and all other annual permits shall date from the 1st day of November of each year and expire on the 31st day of October following. And the permit of every person liable to tax after the 1st day of April, July, or November aforesaid shall date from the first day of the month in which the liabilities began, and payment shall be made for a proportional amount.

SEC. 14. That every person liable for a tax who may fail to pay the same before engaging in the business for which the tax may be required shall, in addition to the tax imposed, pay a fine or penalty of not less that five or more than fifty dollars for each offense, to be imposed and collected as provided in this act. In case of commercial agents, dealers, traders, or their agents, managers of theatrical performances, exhibitions, and concerts for gain, (not including exhibitions and concerts given by, or for the benefit of, religious institutions or societies,) beer-gardens, carouses, and race-courses, one-half the penalty shall inure to the use of the informer.

SEC. 15. That in every case where more than one of the pursuits or occupations hereinbefore described shall be pursued or carried on in the same place by the same person at the same time, excepting as herein provided, the tax shall be paid for each according to the rates severally prescribed.

SEC. 16. That if any one taxed under the provisions of this act shall allow any other person to sell under his permit or to occupy any portion of his premises for the purpose of offering for sale merchandise under his permit, the person so offending shall be fined not less than $100 for each offense, to be imposed and collected as other fines.

SEC. 17. That no permit shall be required of any person bringing to any part of the District of Columbia wood, lumber, building materials, or produce of any kind, to be sold by the car, cargo, or wagon-load, or of persons bringing marketing to the District.

SEC. 18. That the keeper of every livery stable and of coal and lumber yards shall, before engaging in such business, obtain the consent, in writing, of a majority of the persons holding real estate, and a majority of the residents keeping house, on the same side of the square on which is the principal front of the stable or yard about to be built or kept, and on the side of the square fronting immediately opposite, for him to enter upon and engage in this business; the collector to determine which is the principal front; and without such consent being first obtained it shall be unlawful to grant such permit.

SEC. 19. That every place where distilled or fermented liquors are sold in less quantities than one pint shall, unless kept by an apothecary, be known as a bar-room, sample-room, or tippling-house, as the case may be; and it shall be the duty of the proprietor of every such place to present, with his application for permit, the written permission of a majority of the owners of real estate and a majority of the residents keeping house on the same side of the square where it is desired to locate this business, and on the near front of the opposite square, which permission shall be certified to by the superintendent of assessments of the District, and such permit shall not be issued until the application be approved by the board of Metropolitan police: Provided, That the failure of any keeper of a hotel, eating-house, tavern, or restaurant to obtain permit to sell distilled or fermented liquors in quantities less than one pint shall not otherwise affect his business of keeping a hotel, eating-house, tavern, or restaurant, he having the permit therefor: And provided further, That if the superintendent of assessments of the District shall knowingly and willfully make a false certificate touching the granting of said permit, or any member of the Metropolitan police board shall knowingly and willfully unite in the approval of the application for said permit, when the applicant for said permit has failed to comply with the provisions of this section, each of the said officers shall be liable to an action for violating the provisions thereof, to be instituted in the name of the District of Columbia; and each of said officers may be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 20. That nothing contained in this act shall authorize any person to keep his place of business open on Sunday for the sale of any merchandise whatever, except medicines in case of necessity, and undertakers prosecuting their legitimate business. Any person violating the provisions of this clause shall, upon conviction thereof before the police court, be fined, for each such offense, not less than five nor more than fifty dollars, and a share of every such fine may be awarded by such court to the informer not a policeman.

SEC. 21. That every undertaker having coffins, caskets, or burial-cases not of his own manufacture shall be liable as a dealer.

SEC. 22. That no person whatsoever shall sell or expose for sale at auction any property, real or personal, within the District of Columbia without having first obtained a permit as auctioneer. Every person who may offer to sell at auction any property or merchandise without permit shall be fined not less than $100 for each offense. Every authorized auctioneer and every real-estate agent shall give bonds to the commissioners of the District of Columbia in the sum of $5,000, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the commissioners, for the honest and due performance of all duties required by law. Every auctioneer and real-estate agent failing to comply with the provisions of this section and other operative laws governing such sale shall, on conviction, forfeit his permit, and be fined not less than $100. Any person injured by the action of such auctioneer or agent shall have the right to sue on such bond.

SEC. 23. That wherever in this act a tax is imposed semi-annually on sales, receipts, or deposits, returns for the same shall be made to the collector, under oath or affirmation, on or before the 10th of January and July of each year, and the same shall be due and payable to the collector on or before the 30th of said months; and on all such taxes remaining unpaid after the 30th of said months a penalty of 5 per cent. shall be added, and it shall be the duty of the collector to make demand for the payment of the same. For this purpose, the collector is hereby authorized to employ some suitable person, who shall be entitled to a commission of 10 per cent. on the amount collected; and if unpaid for three months after the same has become due and payable, the collector shall transmit the account for the same to the attorney for the District of Columbia for collection by due process of law. If, in the opinion of the collector, the returns required by law are underestimated, he shall have power to examine, either in person or by deputy, the books and accounts of the person making such returns; and if he shall find that the returns made are less in amount than shown by said books and accounts, he shall make an assessment for a correct sum, to which he shall add the penalty of 25 per cent. on amount of tax due.

SEC. 24. That all carts, wagons, and drays taxed by the District of Columbia shall, at the time of receiving the permit, be furnished with a number, legibly painted on tin or some other suitable material, with the letters D. C. and the year, which the owner or agent shall attach to said cart, wagon, or dray, in some conspicuous place; and in like manner a number shall be furnished, painted on tin or some other material, in the form of a badge, which shall be worn conspicuously on the person of the driver of each hack, carriage, cab, or other taxed vehicle for the transportation of passengers for hire, except street-cars, when in service; and any person offending against this section shall be fined not less than $5 for each offense.

SEC. 25. That it shall be the duty of the collector to keep, in books prepared for the purpose, a list of the names of all persons obtaining permit for carts, wagons, and drays, and for hacks, carriages, and cabs and other vehicles for transporting passengers, numbered to correspond with the number of the permit.

SEC. 26. That for the purpose of this act the word person shall include firms, corporations, and companies. Words of one number shall signify and include words of both numbers respectively. The word agent shall signify and include every person acting for another. The word merchandise shall signify and include every article of commerce, whether sold in bulk, by sample, catalogue, or otherwise.

SEC. 27. That all laws, acts, ordinances, and regulations now of force in the District of Columbia, touching police regulations for the several occupations and places of business in said District, not inconsistent with anything herein, are hereby continued in force.

SEC. 28. That all penalties or fines imposed or in any manner created by this act, or the act of the Legislative Assembly entitled "An act imposing a license on trades, business, and professions practiced or carried on in the District of Columbia," approved August 23, 1871, and by the amendatory act approved June 20, 1873, shall be recovered in the police court of said District on information under oath filed therein by the attorney or his assistant, in the name of the District of Columbia, and in the same manner as was provided for in section 16 of an act of Congress of the United States entitled "An act to establish a police court for the District of Columbia," approved June 17, 1870, for the recovery of fines and penalties for the violation of ordinances of the late corporation of Washington, Georgetown, and the levy court: Provided, That when any penalty shall be allowed in part to the informer, the judgment and finding of the court shall set forth that it is for the District, and shall indicate the amount or proportion thereof for the informer.

SEC. 29. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office, are hereby authorized to arrange the laws relating to the taxes imposed by this act in the form of circular, and have one thousand copies printed for distribution, to be printed at the Government Printing Office, at the net cost thereof.

SEC. 30. That the period of redemption be, and is hereby, extended for one year as respects the property of which, for the want of sufficient bids, the District of Columbia became the purchaser at the tax sale under the act of Congress, approved June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," as amended by section 13 of an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and prior years, and for other purposes."

SEC. 31. That this act shall continue in force from year to year, unless repealed by act of Congress; and the successors in office to the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have the same powers as are given to said commissioners by this act: Provided, That the tax on real property for each fiscal year after the one ending June 30, 1877, shall become due and payable on the 1st day of June preceding the commencement of each and every fiscal year; and the other half on the following 1st day of December in each and every such year; and said installments shall be in arrears and delinquent if not paid on or before said respective days; and upon their becoming so in arrears and delinquent penalty shall accrue as in this act provided.

SEC. 32. That all laws, acts, ordinances, and regulations, or parts thereof, inconsistent herewith, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) The question is on the adoption of the substitute reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONKLING. This amendment which has been read is designed to supersede a House bill seventeen pages and a fraction long. I do not wish to call for the reading of the House bill, if we can get information of its contents in a briefer way. Therefore I ask the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER,] who has charge of this measure, to state, if he will, the differences, at least the marked differences, between the House bill and this proposed substitute which is to take its place bodily, and what the objections are to the scheme as proposed by the House, which seems in general terms to follow the theory to be found already on the statute-book touching taxation in this District. The original House bill has not been read at all. I do not mean to insist upon its being read, provided we can hear from the Senator what the reason is for dismissing the entire bill of the House and substituting bodily this amendment for it.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to state for the information of the Senator from New York and other Senators that the bill as it came from the House was a substitute for this bill which we now report. The bill which has just been read to the Senate was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives; I think it was almost a unanimous report. With the exception of Mr. NEAL, of Ohio, the House committee were united upon the bill which has just been read. The bill which has just been read meets the approval of the commissioners and, as I understand the commissioners, it was draughted at a meeting of citizens, tax-payers, of Washington. That I understand to be the history of it.

Mr. CONKLING. Will my friend allow me to understand him?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Shall I understand that in the House a report was obtained also in favor of the bill now proposed as an amendment?

Mr. SPENCER. Such is the case.

Mr. CONKLING. And when the Senator says the present House bill is a substitute, shall I understand him to mean that in the House, this present House bill being offered as a substitute, it prevailed against the bill to which the assent of the Committee on the District in the House had been obtained?

Mr. SPENCER. Such is the case.

Mr. CONKLING. So that the Senator means that the House bill comes here as an amendment adopted by the House to another bill which found its way through its committee; and now our committee has reported the bill rejected by the House as a substitute for the bill adopted by the House?

Mr. SPENCER. That is the case.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, if the honorable Senator will be kind enough to state what the leading differences are between these two bills, what it was that the House voted down after its committee had recommended it, and what it was that the House adopted in place of that recommendation, we shall know something about it.

Mr. SPENCER. For the information of the Senator I will send to the Clerk's desk to have read a letter from the commissioners on the subject, which will explain it fully to his satisfaction.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, May 8, 1876.

SIR: In reply to the letter of your committee, inclosing to us a copy of a bill (H. R. 2676) to regulate the assessments and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and inviting our attention thereto, we have the honor to present the following views:

First, in our judgment the rate of taxation should be uniform in the District. The present assessment was made under a law levying the rate of 1½ per cent. throughout the District, giving, we believe, general satisfaction; and we think that no injustice can arise now should one tax-rate for city and county be again adopted by Congress.

To illustrate the results to be obtained from taxation of real property with the variable rates as proposed, we give the estimated amounts derivable under it for each division:

Washington, $78,819,934, at 1½ per cent	$1,182,234 01
Georgetown, $5,849,317, at 1 per cent	58,493 17
County, $8,764,433, at ¾ per cent	65,883 25
Total	1,306,610 43

The contrast in the amounts to be contributed by the several sections of the District, it will be seen, are very marked.

Should a uniform rate be established the results would be as follows, the rate being 1½ per cent.:

Washington	$1,182,234 01
Georgetown	87,739 75
County	131,766 49

From which it appears that with a like rate of taxation, Georgetown and the county combined will contribute less than one-sixth of the entire amount.

The injustice arising from different rates for different sections in the case of personal taxation, if such tax be sustained, will be readily perceived. A share of stock, or a bond, or money is as valuable to the holder in one part as another, and yet it is proposed to tax such property 1½ per cent. in Washington and ¾ per cent. in the county. The owner of a horse on one side of Boundary street is to be taxed 1½ per cent., and on the other ¾ per cent.

Secondly. It is proposed to tax the bonds of the District, the effect of which will be to drive such securities entirely out of the District.

Thirdly. That the assessment of all property in the District within the time specified in the fourteenth section of the bill is impracticable.

Fourthly. That the sixteenth section of the bill, we apprehend, may defeat the entire proposed taxation, as it is thought men of character suited to the positions of assessors will refuse the office in view of the penalties imposed.

Objections of technical character could be made to numbers of the provisions of the bill, but these will doubtless occur to your committee in their review of its provisions.

Having presented such objections as appear most patent, we have in general terms to state that the taxation of personal property in the manner proposed appears to be repugnant to the views and foreign to the customs and usages of the people of the District.

It is very generally held that such a tax—except perhaps in a very modified form—would be injurious to the best interests of the District.

One result illustrative of the result of such a tax is already experienced in the advance of from 1 per cent. to 2 per cent. in the rate of interest demanded for loans since the passage by the House of the bill under discussion. Foreign capital has been withdrawn, and we are informed increased difficulty is experienced in obtaining money upon real-estate security. The borrower is already made to pay the tax in anticipation of its becoming the law.

The District is very limited in extent. Many of the wealthy citizens have property just beyond its limits, where residence can be established to list personal property for a very light taxation.

We deem it proper to invite the attention of your committee to the original tax bill as reported to the House of Representatives by the majority of the Committee of the House on the District of Columbia. Inclosed herewith is a copy of that bill, with a few verbal amendments, and including one for a uniform rate of taxation. Certain changes in some of the license rates might be suggested; but in view of the importance of prompt action we refrain from making them.

In our judgment the net amount to be realized from the license system proposed in the committee's bill will be as large as could be anticipated from the other; the license system can be enforced without additional officers or increased expense, whereas the personal tax would be both expensive, difficult of collection, and odious to the people.

It is held, and with apparent justice, that Congress having fixed upon the amount to be raised by taxation, the people should be granted any preference in respect to the manner of paying it. The license system is one now in force, only more limited in its amount; is one to which the community is accustomed; and the bill reported by the committee, as we are advised, was approved by influential citizens, well known to all classes of people in the District.

The receipts from the bill, as amended by us, may be estimated as follows:

Tax on $92,000,000, at 1½ per cent	$1,380,000
Deduct 10 per cent. delinquencies	138,000
Net result from real estate	1,242,000
Add for licenses proper, as estimated by collector, percentages on deposits and receipts not included	275,000
	1,517,000

The license-tax on furniture and percentages on deposits of banks and receipts of agents may be estimated at from $125,000 to $200,000, although no data exist on which to found estimates in any sense reliable as to receipts from these sources.

Adding to the above amount of $1,517,000 for these items, it appears that the net revenue to be realized from all sources will be between $1,640,000 and $1,700,000.

Very respectfully,

W. DENNISON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
S. L. PHELPS,
Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. GEORGE E. SPENCER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. I think that the letter of the commissioners which has just been read fully explains the difference between these two bills. The bill as reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate is the same bill that was reported by the Committee for the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives and adopted by that committee, I understand, by a vote of ten to one. Mr. NEAL offered a substitute, which was adopted by the House, and the substitute was never read in the House. It does not, as I understand, meet the wishes of the tax-payers, nor does it meet the wishes of the commissioners. The commissioners inform me that they could not carry out the Neal bill; that it would not be practicable; that they could not collect the revenue. They say that one section, section 14, is totally impracticable.

I do not know, at present, that I desire to say anything further on the subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that reported this bill, I feel bound to say a word in regard to it. I do not agree with the majority of the committee in reporting the substitute now pending before the Senate. I do not agree to it, because I believe the measure on general principles is wrong. I know no reason why all property alike should not be taxed to support and maintain government. This bill proposes to exempt absolutely the personal property of this District——

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him. He is certainly mistaken in that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This bill proposes, Mr. President, to strike out the tax upon all "moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies, and otherwise, of persons residing" in the District of Columbia, and to put in a very extraordinary tax upon the very smallest character of business that a can man enter into. I do not believe the Congress of the United States can afford to exempt the millions of dollars that may be held in bank or loaned here by capitalists, idle money comparatively, and tax a man on a hand-cart $2 for the privilege of earning his living with that hand-cart. I do not believe that is in accordance with the genius and spirit of this country and its institutions. At any rate, I propose that this Senate shall go upon the record upon that question. That is all that I care to say and all that I am able to say upon this subject in the present condition of my health. I simply want the Senate to understand that this substitute does exempt the money of the capitalist, does exempt personal property, while it taxes a man with a hand-cart $2 for the privilege of earning his living with that hand-cart, taxes a butcher, taxes a man with a wagon $5 for the privilege of earning his living with that wagon; taxes every kind of business in the most minute and careful way.

Mr. CONKLING. Taxes the man who sells a coffin.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It taxes the man who sells a coffin; it taxes any man who enters into business in any way; it taxes the huckster. I do not believe the Senate of the United States can afford to put themselves on the record in favor of this. If they can I am entirely willing that they shall do so; but I want the privilege of calling for the yeas and nays on this substitute.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I am very glad that there was at least one member of the committee from which this bill came to us who did not agree to it. I have had a little experience in legislation here, and of all things that ever came into this body asking for a favorable consideration I think this exceeds everything I ever saw. [Holding up the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia.] I have no command of language to characterize the thing as I think it deserves. Governments, it is said, are instituted and laws are passed for the protection of a man in his person and in his property; and somehow or other there has grown up along with me an idea that that property which seeks a shelter under the ægis of the Government should contribute its proportion for that protection, and I confess I am not casuist enough to draw a line of distinction which will enable me as a legislator here to say that the landholder within the District of Columbia shall be the only tax-payer. The reading should be then "that governments are instituted and laws are passed for the protection of a man's person, and a part of his property shall pay for that government and the execution of that law." What is the result? The law affords an equal protection to the personal as well as to the real estate; and why, I ask, should not that personal property contribute its proportion?

Now, I am told—and I have no doubt such is the fact—that this bill is agreed upon by the principal men in this city, including the merchants and the bankers, for those were the words in which it was communicated to me by one of the citizens—men whom I esteem and respect. I am told that the bill was prepared by them, that it is acceptable to the District, and that they believe it can be more easily enforced than one which imposes a tax upon personal property. That is the theory upon which this bill now offered as a substitute has got here. Suppose they had drawn a bill and sent it to us which in terms should have imposed a tax upon a single class of individuals within this District, would we or could we give to that bill our assent if it met the approbation of ninety-nine persons out of every hundred in the District? We are here to vote for a measure which our judgments shall tell us is just, right, and equitable; and we cannot take a proposition from any quarter which does not contain those properties, however acceptable it may be to the gentlemen from whom it comes.

But I assume that, while it is the wish of a very worthy and a very large proportion of the people of this District, there are thousands of men in the District, who toil, who have as much interest as others who have been consulted in framing and preparing this bill, who do earnestly protest against it; and I say that every Senator stands here in his official capacity to-day as the protector of the minority, even if it consist of only one man, and that we may impose no injustice upon a minority even in this District; and this measure does impose a gross and outrageous injustice upon the people of this District.

The chairman of the committee tells us that this bill was reported to the House, and that it was so obnoxious to the body—he does not say that, but I do—that they, believing they could not possibly get anything worse, took the substitute without reading it, and passed it. I think they did wisely, for I do not think human ingenuity could devise a bill which is more unjust than this very bill now presented by our committee as a substitute for the House bill. A tax bill which imposes a tax on this District that shall fall, like the dew of Heaven, alike on all, I grant is impracticable; but we may do that which is a wonderful improvement upon this. I have had no time accurately to examine the bill as it has passed the House; I think it needs amendment; I think it should be recommitted; I think it should go back to the committee for their revision; but that bill in preference to this, in my judgment, is vastly superior, and should, as between the two, command our favorable action.

Now, sir, a bill which does not impose a tax upon the personal property of the citizens of this District, I hold to be unjust and outrageous.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPENCER. The commissioners inform me that it is utterly impossible to collect a personal tax.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then let us appoint another board of commissioners who will not tell us that.

Mr. SARGENT. There is no difficulty in collecting a personal tax in my State.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is no difficulty in it whatever; none at all.

Mr. SARGENT. We have had it for twenty-five years.

Mr. SPENCER. The commissioners say that in the instance in which they have tried it they have utterly failed. The people who own bonds that they want to get at immediately move out of the city to their suburban residences in Maryland and Virginia.

Mr. HAMLIN. And if they do go you are just as well off with a law that would tax them if they were here, and you will hold as much as you can find if you do not hold it all.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me, I desire to say that the great body of the personal property of this District, especially the bonds, are held by corporations and parties who cannot move out of the District; and therefore there is no difficulty in collecting the tax here just as we do in Ohio; and the failure to collect this tax one year ago was a palpable and shameless repudiation of a law of the United States.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have only this to say: In a conversation with one of the commissioners I learned from him the main difficulty to have been a want of sufficient time between the period when the tax law of last year went into effect and the period when the tax must be assessed. I have here by me the tax bill of last year, which did embrace real and personal property. Why depart from it this year? It is said to be found impracticable to collect a personal tax. I deny it, and I say that I get from the commissioners themselves this information: that it was not applied last year for the reason that the time between the passage of the law and the period when the assessment was made was not sufficient, with the force they had, to collect the information necessary to enable them to assess a tax on personal property. Such I understand to have been the reason why it was not collected last year.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maine, in answer to the remark of the Senator from Alabama, that there is nothing in that remark that people move out to other districts to escape the tax. If they escape the tax here, they do not escape it where they move to, for the law in those States does levy a tax on personal property. Hence it is not an escape from taxation by any means.

Mr. SPENCER. What I intended to say was, that in 1871 they attempted to collect a personal tax in this District and utterly failed to do so; and last year they failed to do so for want of time.

Mr. HAMLIN. But let me come back to this amendment. To break the force of abandoning a tax upon personal property—and I suppose I am justified in assuming that there may be, that there are men within this District who hold taxable assets to the extent of millions of dollars, and who will run away to avoid taxation or to get a lighter taxation under another municipality—and to avoid the assessment of a tax upon personal property that will meet such cases most justly, the committee have sought to incorporate and have incorporated within the bill submitted to us a long series of special taxes, by which, as the Senator from New York has well said, while you do not tax specialties, you do indirectly tax the coffin the poor man is buried in. They have sought to replenish the District treasury, not from a tax on personal property, but by a special system of licenses, objectionable in almost any point of view. There are but a very few cases which I think may justify licenses. I think they extend only to that class of cases where no person should be permitted to engage in the business unless he has the authority of a license from a proper board, which is a certificate that he is a proper man to transact that kind of business. When you step beyond that, and undertake to impose a special tax by way of license upon your butcher, upon your mechanic, upon every branch of industry, you make it a very objectionable system; because there is added by that butcher, by that mechanic, by the pawnbroker, who is a known extortioner everywhere, the amount which he pays for the license, which is to go back into his pocket from those with whom he deals and to whom he sells. Is not that vastly more objectionable than that we shall place a tax on the actual value of the property in this District? It seems so to me.

But go one step further and look into this system of special taxation. You impose upon the landholder—yea, and who is the landholder?—a tax of $1.50 on every $100. While there are large landholders within this District, it also applies to every small landholder, to every widow who just holds the shelter that protects her from the storms and the sun of heaven. The great numbers and the great classes that are to be affected by a special tax upon real estate while personal property goes free are the middling classes. You tax the landholders $1.50 on every $100 of their real estate. Turn to your special taxes, and see what they are. All taxes ought to be equal, according to my estimation. Uniformity of taxation is one of the rules by which our Government has been always controlled; ay, it is recognized in our Constitution.

Now, sir, turn to the special taxes, and let us see with how much adroitness there is favoritism to particular classes. I have had but a very few moments of time to examine it. If Senators will turn to page 20, clause 36, they will find Street railway companies shall pay .1 on each $1,000 of their stock paid in.

You are to tax railroad corporations one dollar on each thousand dollars of their stock paid in.

Mr. MORTON. Perhaps no stock ever was paid in.

Mr. HAMLIN. Suppose it was, however; I will come to that point. It is $1 on $1,000 on the stock paid in. It is $15 on $1,000 when it comes to the real estate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator will allow me to suggest that the very next sentence reads: "Telegraph companies shall pay $1.50 on each $100.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am going on; I have my eye on this clause; it is one of the beauties of the bill. One dollar on a thousand dollars of a stock actually paid in. Now, I will assume that it is paid in, and I will assume another thing——

Mr. SPENCER. Allow me to interrupt the Senator. They pay on the cars also.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will come to that. This is a broad field; I cannot cover it all at once. Now, suppose the capital stock has been actually paid in, and suppose, which is true, that the stock has doubled in its value and is worth $2,000 in the market, then the tax is $1 on one thousand of nominal value, while the tax on the actual value of a domicile that reaches $2,000 is $30 So a house is taxed $30 where the railroad company pays a single dollar on the same amount of value. It is true the company are to pay upon their stock, and why should they not? It is personal property; and this is simply bringing in one little item of personal property. I only contend that it shall all be brought in as the committee bring in a single item here.

Follow along, and "bank-note engraving companies shall pay a license of $100 and $1 on each thousand dollars of their paid-up capital." We do not know whether it is worth the thousand dollars today; but if it is actually paid in, I think it is fair to assume that it is.

Mr. MORTON. Gas stock pays a tax of one dollar on the hundred dollars of capital stock—the best paying stock in the United States.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have it here. I will come to that. I will assume, if it has actually been paid in as the bill assumes, that it is worth something near the thousand dollars now. That comes somewhat near a tax on personal property. I therefore like it; but I do not like the rule by which you fix the sum that it is to contribute, because you ask it only to contribute $1 for the thousand dollars paid in while you ask the humble man in this District to pay $15 on the thousand of the value of his domicile, according to the actual value paid in. Paid in how? Paid in in building his house. The one is paid in in creating a stock in a company; the mechanic pays his to his laborer, to his employés, to the man of whom he purchases his realty; he pays in his money to make his stock, and his stock is his home. He pays $15 on the thousand, while these stocks pay $1 on the thousand.

That is one of the beauties of this bill. Following it immediately is the precise point, which I had noted, to which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] has called my attention. The same argument which I am making applies to gas companies, and I know a little about gas companies in this District. I had something to do with them once when I was on the District Committee. I remember very well that it was shown to us what exorbitant dividends they were making. If I had the figures which were before me at that time, I could furnish a most perfect illustration; but I am safe in saying—I come, I think, a great way within the true condition of things when I state that the evidence then produced showed that the actual cost for gas-works in this city was a given sum; that the company had watered the stock, so to call it, or had issued new certificates to the stockholders from the accruing profits of the company to full 100 per cent. of the stock paid in, and yet the stock could not be had in the market, because it was so valuable that the men who owned it would not sell it. You tax the gas company $1 on $1,000 of stock paid in. That $1,000 paid in has earned its additional thousand, and the stock has been doubled; that stock is vastly above par, and you tax that $1,000 one simple dollar; and what is the effect? Who purchases gas of that company? All the people of this District. Who are interested in this tax bill that shall put additional taxes on gas companies that you shall compel them to charge more—they seek every opportunity—to every man, woman, and child within this District who wants gas a little cheaper, and ought to have it?

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend allow me to suggest that as the tax is only on stock actually paid in it does not apply to the watered stock?

Mr. HAMLIN. Surely that must be so, though I do not know exactly what "watered stock" means. When a stock is of a given amount, and they issue certificates to twice that amount, and still that stock will command in any market more than par value, that is a kind of watered stock that does not hurt much, and I do not call that very much of a watered stock. I think watered stock is very much like where a man gets more in his whisky than he wants. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, these are very briefly some of the views which have presented themselves to my mind. I could illustrate them by going through with almost every specific license which this bill proposes to grant. But I hold that the whole system of licensing is thoroughly and radically wrong, and should be kept strictly within the limit which I have named. No licenses of any kind or description should be required except in those particular species of business which require a peculiar kind of man to transact them, and then the license should be given him only upon examination and from a board who will guarantee that he is a proper man to engage in it; but here you license everybody.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. I understood the Senator to propose that the bill be recommitted. I should like to ask him if he has had an opportunity to examine the House bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is precisely what I have done. I have said that the House bill, in my judgment, is vastly superior to this. I should vote for it very readily.

Mr. SARGENT. Is it not better, then, instead of recommitting this, to pass the House bill and settle the matter for this session?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am more than half inclined to believe that a briefer process would be to re-enact, with a single section added, the tax law of last year, and let us try that.

Mr. SARGENT. Then we should have the danger of the bill failing in the House for the lack of time.

Mr. HAMLIN. I shall vote for the House bill with great cheerfulness, though I do think there are some things in it which could be very much improved.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I made a remark a moment ago that may possibly do injustice, although it is literally true that the nullification of an act of Congress by the assessors in this District was probably one of the most indefensible and outrageous acts I have ever seen in the course of my public life. Congress deliberately, after full investigation, declared that personal property in this District should be taxable, as it is in nearly all the States of the Union; that those wealthy people who own property and those large corporations who administer property in the District should pay taxes just like the humble poor or the middle class who own real estate. That was the deliberate judgment of Congress, and Congress is the law-making power of this District. Whatever else there may be doubt about there is no doubt about that. The law was plain and express that there should be levied a tax of 1½ per cent. on certain real estate in this District, and on all personal property in this District. That law was openly, flagrantly, and without excuse violated and entirely nullified and made void. But, sir, while I repeat that again, I ought to say that I do not blame the commissioners of the District of Columbia for that, for I remember distinctly that the duty was charged on the assessors provided for by the law and that the commissioners had no power or control over them. There was the defect of the law; and in the report of the commissioners to the present session of Congress I find this paragraph:

> In their accompanying report the assessors, appointed under the act of March 3, 1875, to assess the value of all the real and personal property in the District taxable under said act, explain the causes that prevented their executing so much of their duty as related to the appraisal of personal property, to which we invite the attention of Congress; and with it to the correspondence between the commissioners and the assessors on that subject. The commissioners regret the failure of the assessors to comply with the law in that regard, but appreciate the serious difficulties they encountered. They invite the attention of Congress to the recommendation of the assessors for the substitution of licenses for a tax on personal property; and while they are not prepared to favor such a policy, they venture to suggest that if a tax on personal property be not continued, the present rates of licenses should be increased and their range enlarged.

There is also in another part of this report, on page 225, the correspondence with the assessors. Senators who want to pursue this matter will see there that the commissioners on April 5, 1876, sent a schedule for the listing of personal property to the assessors, addressed to William Clagett, chairman of the board of assessors, and a series of correspondence continues for some time, and finally the assessors practically resolve that they cannot under the machinery provided for under the law assess personal property. I have read the law, and the law is very much like the law in Ohio. Indeed it was said to be the Ohio law, and under it our Ohio assessors assess all personal property in about sixty days. There was ample time.

Mr. CONKLING. Who appointed the assessors?

Mr. SHERMAN. That I do not know; the commissioners, I suppose; but their duties were under the law. At any rate here is a correspondence showing that the commissioners urged on them the performance of this duty; they protracted and delayed, and finally said they had not time; and thus our act, the act of Congress, was plainly and palpably and openly repudiated and set aside.

When I read that last fall, and saw the proceedings here during the last summer, I must confess that I had a feeling of indignation which I have not quite got over yet; not so much that I care about the personal tax, because there are serious difficulties in levying a personal tax in this city; but because these men have undertaken to disregard a law which is considered just by the wealthiest communities in this country. I believe they have such a one in New York and Massachusetts; they have laws which tax personal property and corporate property in all the States. That these assessors should disregard it seemed to me a pretty high-handed proceeding; and therefore I think we ought now to try these assessors again; we ought to make it the express and bounden duty of the commissioners to see that this law is executed; and if an assessor fails for a single day to perform his duty, we should require the commissioners on their responsibility to remove him promptly and see that the law is enforced. Even if the law was wrong, they had no business to ignore it and nullify it.

The difficulty about taxing personal property in this District has been exaggerated in a great measure. I do not think that ordinary furniture ought to be taxed, the furniture of an ordinary household, because that is generally pretty fairly distributed. There ought to be a certain exemption made, so as not to be guilty of espionage. But the stock and property of corporations, banks, railroad companies, and gas companies, certainly ought to be taxed. The property of the Washington Gas light Company, a wealthy corporation, personal and real, ought to be taxed. So of all the railroad companies: their cars and all their property ought to be taxed, and the stock of the corporations ought to be taxed. That would greatly tend to swell the list of property; and, besides, it ought to be taxed at the same rate as real property. For instance, $100,000 invested in a bank ought to be taxed not at the rate of $1 a thousand, but ought to be taxed at the rate of a dollar and a half a hundred, just like real estate. A house, the homestead of a poor man, although it may cost but a thousand dollars, will be taxed $15 under this bill; but the same thousand dollars invested in a corporation would only be taxed $1 instead of $15. That is grossly unjust.

I am inclined to think also that there ought to be blended with this form of taxation a system of licenses, because I believe the system of license taxes proposed by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia is a wise one and would tend to give a very good revenue without much burden. Perhaps they have carried it too far; but I think many of these license taxes ought to be imposed. For instance, the tax on pawnbrokers, the tax on various articles of personal property like pianos, gold and silver watches, private carriages, and the tax on certain employments. I do not know how it is in other States, but in Ohio we tax certain employments, and that is a fruitful and proper source of taxation. I see no objection to it. At the same time I think this bill ought to contain a tax on personal property within proper limits.

I call the attention of Senators who propose to take the House bill to the fact that the House bill has no machinery to carry into effect the personal tax. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska who proposes to take the House bill to the fact that it is entirely defective. Section 7 is the only section that provides a machinery for levying taxes.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he proceeds further. Here is an act standing in the statutes, passed on the 3d of March, 1875, which does tax real and personal property. The defect in the act now is obvious on its face: it was an act for a single year. What is the objection, by a simple provision—a very brief one would do it—to perpetuating or continuing this act; and, if there be any defects in this act amending those defects? What is the need of re-enacting all the machinery and all the substance of a tax bill for this District, when here stands an act good, except that like an appropriation bill it is annual, but it can be extended, and if there be defects about it those defects can be pointed out and cured.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a defect in the House bill to which I will call attention. It is the only section in the bill which provides for the mode of assessing personal property. How far it is like the act of last year the Senator can see by looking at that act. The eleventh section of the bill before us from the House provides:

> That the commissioners of said District, or their successors in office, shall cause to be prepared a printed blank schedule or form, for statement of personal property, including moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, subject to taxation under this act, together with deductions authorized to be allowed, to which shall be appended an affidavit setting forth that the foregoing presents a full and true statement of all the personal property, moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies, or otherwise, subject to taxation, together with the amount of indebtedness on account of which deductions are claimed; and the assessors provided for by this act shall deliver to each person.

The words "corporations, banks, banking companies, or partnerships" are omitted, although in the first section the tax must be levied upon these as well. The Senator will therefore see that no notice is required to be given to anybody but a "person," while the first section of the act provides that "all corporations, banks, or banking companies," &c., shall be subject to a tax on real and personal property. There is no provision in the eleventh section for serving notice on banking corporations and companies.

Mr. ALLISON. Section 17 of the House bill, I think, covers that question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it does. I think very probably the definition of the word "person," as given in the seventeenth section, might include and does include firms, corporations, and banking companies.

I do not see then but that with these modifications and some more stringent provision as to the duties of assessors, placing those high contracting parties who override and overrule our law under some proper authority, it would be better to follow the suggestion of the Senator from New York. I think we ought to do so; that these people who are appointed under the act ought to be willing to recognize our power to appoint them. They evidently drew their pay, and if they drew their pay they certainly ought to perform the duties imposed upon them by law.

Mr. MORTON. I agree with the most that has been said about the character of this bill, and yet I think there is no occasion for surprise or for any exhibition of feeling on the subject. I observe that both my friend from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] who made a very able and somewhat impetuous speech, and my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who followed him, have very carefully kept away from the cause of all the trouble in this case. They have handled it very gingerly, and intend to do so hereafter. My friend from Ohio has denounced the commissioners, who are three excellent gentlemen. I do not think much better commissioners could be had if we are to have this kind of government. My friend has denounced them as having nullified the law of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. I say the assessors nullified the law.

Mr. MORTON. Well, the assessors were under the commissioners, and the responsibility comes right home to them. I understood my friend to apply it to the commissioners, to say that they had nullified the law of Congress; and the commissioners have presented to Congress this bill which my friend from Maine finds so execrable and so infamous that he cannot even give it a name.

What is all this trouble? Here is blundering on blundering. It is the effort of Congress to control the domestic concerns of 150,000 people in this District without knowing anything about them; without consulting them; without giving them a representative or a delegate in any shape or form. It is "taxation without representation," in violation of every principle of our Government, in violation of the principles especially of the republican party, and of the democratic party also, or that part of it which is entitled to be called democratic. Here is a bill now to tax 150,000 people for their local and domestic concerns, to provide for those things which belong to them exclusively, and which do not pertain to the property or to the business of the nation. None of them are consulted except a few gentlemen who get together and frame a bill and get these commissioners to bring it in, the effect of which is to relieve them from the payment of taxation, leaving out their paying stocks, leaving out the capital of the District. The capital is not taxed at all. I am told that there is one man in this District who has $1,000,000 at interest and will not pay one cent under this bill. I have no doubt he would be very much in favor of this bill and of having Congress perpetuate this system of government. The fault is a radical one, and we have ourselves to blame for it.

I suggest to my friend that there is no use of having any feeling on this subject. I think my friend from Ohio is in part responsible for it that Congress has undertaken to govern this people in their local and domestic affairs, withholding from them all representation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator refer to my colleague, [Mr. THURMAN?]

Mr. MORTON. I refer to my friend from Ohio right here, [Mr. SHERMAN.] I understood he was opposed to the restoring of sufffrage.

Mr. SHERMAN. O, suffrage.

Mr. MORTON. My friend says "O, suffrage." Certainly; that is the very thing. He was opposed to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. The reason why I expressed myself in that way was that I thought the Senator was charging me with the responsibility of my colleague, who framed the law under which the present District government was organized. I had nothing to do with it. I therefore throw off that responsibility, as my colleague is perfectly able to take care of himself.

In regard to the government of the District by commissioners, I think myself it is the wisest mode. I am willing to say that I believe commissioners are the best to govern a municipal corporation. If there were an election of officers to represent the District in Congress or elsewhere, I should think differently; but for the management of the internal affairs of a municipal corporation I believe a board of commissioners is the best. I will state also to my friend that in Ohio they have adopted this system for Cincinnati, and in New York they have adopted it for that great metropolis, and they have adopted it in almost every city with a hundred thousand inhabitants. When Indianapolis gets large enough, they will have to adopt it there.

Mr. MORTON. It has not been adopted in any way like the system of having these commissioners here. In Cincinnati the people elect a mayor and they elect a common council. It is so in New York, and so in other cities which control their local and domestic affairs. No such system as this prevails anywhere; but the argument in favor of it here is equally good everywhere else. I should like to see the gentlemen who argue for it here go home and argue for it in their own States. The argument against suffrage here is an argument against suffrage everywhere, if it amounts to anything. My democratic friends are opposed to suffrage in this District because the negroes vote, and they do not want them to vote; and we have some other gentlemen who are opposed to suffrage because they can control the affairs themselves without suffrage, as they have substantially done.

I can see no reason why the capital of this District should be exempted from taxation. There is a man in this District, I am told, who has $1,000,000 at interest and by this bill he will not pay one cent of tax upon it, while the laboring-man who has managed by accumulations from year to year to get a little piece of property worth $500 is taxed upon it. His little homestead is taxed. Here is a bank with a capital of a quarter of a million of dollars and it pays no tax upon it under this bill. There is a little tax upon deposits, but no tax upon the capital of the bank. Every bank in my State pays a State and a county and a city tax, if it is located in a city.

Mr. CONKLING. So it is in every other State.

Mr. MORTON. I presume it is that way in every other State in this Union; but gentleman arrogate to themselves the privilege of dictating the policy of this District and provide a bill to exempt all capital from taxation.

O, no, Mr. President, when we come right back to it, the difficulty is radical, it is fundamental, and there is no escape from it. As republicans we ought to be—I was going to say ashamed of it; I believe I will say it; because in doing so we violate a fundamental principle of this Government. One hundred years ago our fathers declared their independence from England because of taxation without representation, and here are 150,000 people who are to be taxed without being consulted, who are to be outraged without having even a chance to remonstrate.

I have called attention to this fact before and I shall do so again. So far as I am concerned I do not intend to vote for any bill taxing this people without their consent. As a matter of principle, I will not do it. I will not vote either for the bill reported by the committee, or for the House bill, or for any other bill of the kind. I know the time will come when you will be driven to give this people a local domestic government. I have no fear about that. It may not come this year; it may not come next year; but the time will come when you will be driven to give to them a government in harmony with the general character of our institutions. You cannot govern them wisely; you cannot govern them intelligently and well. I do not reflect upon these commissioners, and there is no occasion to reflect upon them. They are doing as well as they can; but they are mere proconsuls; they are not of this people; they are not responsible to this people; they are not dependent upon them. They have none of the obligations that make officers wise and faithful to those for whom they are to provide.

Of course, so far as this bill is concerned, I could not vote for it, even if I were willing to vote for a tax bill. I believe there is principle still in government. I believe that our Government is based upon certain great principles. It may be unfashionable now to refer to them. We may have come to the time when we are so practical and so arbitrary that all principles are obsolete. We are told that under the Constitution Congress can govern this District and must do so. That is a poor, miserable, pitiful, contemptible evasion. From the very first year that this District was ceded to the United States, Congress provided for it a local government, and they got along without trouble, having a local government until three years ago. It was abolished temporarily on the 23d day of June, 1874, to be restored, it was understood, in December following; but it never has been restored, and now the purpose is avowed not to restore it. Those who doubt suffrage, who doubt the people, have grown so conservative that they want the people to be governed by commissioners, and avow their purpose never to restore the government to this people. I tell them they will change their mind. I have no hesitation in saying that. This people will have their government given back to them; but it may not be for two or three years. This thing goes on blunderingly now, getting worse and worse every year, until when it can be no longer endured, Congress will allow them to have a government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to follow my honorable friend from Indiana in the discussion of his favorite dogma of popular suffrage as applied to the people of this District, because perhaps on general principles I would not differ with him that popular self-government is the only proper mode of governing men. But experience has shown that in the government of cities the power of popular government must be somewhat restrained in order to accomplish the purposes of municipal government. In the management of a State government or in the exercise of political rights all men are equal, and must be equally considered in the administration of the government; but experience has proven not only in this country but in all countries that municipal corporations are somewhat different in some of their powers, and must be governed by boards or commissioners. It is the practice in every large city in the Union that I know of to adopt a government by boards and commissioners in the most important functions of city government. It is so in the city of New York. During the last winter, after long discussion in the State of Ohio, for the city of Cincinnati we adopted two boards, one a board of police commissioners, and another board, the name of which I have forgotten, which practically has power over the public purse, so that no money can be disbursed or appropriated except by the consent of that board. That has been the custom; but that is neither here nor there. These commissioners were a provisional government organized under a law not long since to bridge over a difficulty. As to whether the people here in the District of Columbia should be governed by their own common council or something in that way, I do not wish to contest with my honorable friend. It is sufficient to say that the government now existing in this District is a government of commissioners, and the only question now is whether this year the amount that these people ought to pay to carry on and support their own government, necessary to carry on their schools, their police, &c., shall be raised by one kind of tax or another.

The Senator from Indiana proclaims his purpose to vote against all taxes until this question, which he considers of prime importance, is settled. Would he stop all the public schools? Would he stop the police? Would he dissolve all the functions of government here? Certainly not. We must therefore provide a reasonable tax law, so that the people of this District shall contribute in some degree their share of the expenses of their own government.

There are three bills here, each of which I have glanced over, but not read carefully. The Senate committee's amendment is the first in order. That is objectionable to the Senate and objectionable to me. I could not vote for it, because it exempts from taxation all kinds of personal property, except only the furniture that may be in the houses. Therefore I think it would not be a wise law. On the other hand, the House bill does not contain, in my judgment, the necessary machinery to carry it into execution. The time has run along so far that it will have to be changed in all its material provisions. That would be required to be done within so short a time, that it cannot probably be done at all. Therefore, if it is to be considered, it must be revised. Neither of these bills is the bill proposed by the commissioners who are charged with the government of this District. Early in the session they did prepare a bill which they felt would enable them to carry on the government of this District without trouble. What was that? Here is the bill; I hold it in my hand. It was referred to a committee of the House, and seems not to have been acted upon by the House. At any rate, it is not either of the bills before us. That bill provided (and it is the main feature of the bill) for a tax of $2 on each $100 of all property, real and personal. The bill presented to Congress by the commissioners did provide for a tax of $2 on each $100 of real and personal property, without the complicated system of license taxes contained in the bill now proposed by the Senate committee. These propositions are before us, and also the additional proposition offered by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] that we take the law of the last session and continue it in its vitality for next year, instead of leaving it an annual law. I do not care which is adopted.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to say as a matter of justice to these commissioners, whom I certainly do not wish to arraign and whom I do not know that anybody arraigns, that they are not here in favor of either of these tax bills. It is a matter for Congress; they have no power over it; they have no interest in it. The question is for us to decide, and they must execute the law that we pass. At the time the matter last year occurred I watched the proceedings to see whether or not these commissioners, who are our agents, were guilty of any laches, and I feel it due to them to ask the Secretary to read as part of the record, and to be placed upon the files, what actually occurred between the commissioners and the board of assessors, who seemed to be a kind of imperium in imperio and to have the control of the matter to suit themselves. I ask in justice to the commissioners that certain correspondence that occurred between them and the assessors shall now be read. I send it to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[No. 1.]

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 5, 1875.

SIR: We send herewith schedule of the listing by the tax-payers of the District of personal property for taxation pursuant to law, and will hold ourselves in readiness to furnish the assessors whatever assistance they may need for the prompt delivery of the same and for the discharge of all their other duties. If yourself and colleagues apprehend any serious difficulty in the way of making personal delivery of the schedules, you will please so advise us, and we will appoint such assistants as your board may deem necessary.

Very respectfully,

W. DENNISON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
S. L. PHELPS,
Commissioners.

WILLIAM CLAGETT, Esq., Chairman Board of Assessors.

[No. 2.]

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF ASSESSORS, April 6, 1875.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant and the schedule for listing personal property for taxation.

The board of assessors is now engaged in assessing the real estate of the District, and they find the present assessment so unsatisfactory and that it presents so many instances of inequality that their labor will be much heavier than was anticipated. They will, however, proceed with all possible diligence in the execution of the law.

If this board should conclude that any assistance can be afforded them in the performance of their duties under the law which will facilitate their labors, they will avail themselves of the proposal contained in your letter and duly notify you.

Yours, very respectfully,

WM. H. CLAGETT,
Chairman of the Board.

The Hon. COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

[No. 3.]

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 7, 1875.

SIR: Referring to your note of yesterday relative to the delivery of schedules, I am directed to ask that your board will not be embarrassed by any suggestions of the commissioners limiting the delivery of the schedules to the members of your board personally. The commissioners advise your board to have such assistants as it may deem necessary to aid in the delivery of the schedules, and this was the meaning they intended to give in their communication to you, to which your note of yesterday is a reply. It will not do to put the delivery of the schedules in jeopardy from any cause.

Very respectfully,

WM. TINDALL, Secretary.

WILLIAM H. CLAGETT, Esq.,
President Board of Assessors, &c.

[No. 4.]

ASSESSOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 12, 1875

GENTLEMEN: It will be utterly impossible for this board to comply with the law under an act of Congress, March 3, 1875, in making personal delivery of the schedules as required by that act. We find unforeseen difficulties in the assessment of the real estate, and all our time will be required in order to complete the equalization of the same within the time allowed by law.

Very respectfully,

W. H. CLAGETT,
Chairman Board of Assessors.

The Hon. COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. President, it is apparent that the difficulty last year was that these assessors were called upon to assess both real and personal property; and they said they could not do both. They could have done both by employing assistants, and the commissioners offered to give them assistance; but they doubted their power to do this business by deputies. There is no trouble about it. A deputy, any boy, any lad, might have left the notices around at the different houses for personal property; but they felt that they had to do it, and they finally decided that they had not time to do both, and it was more important to levy the assessment on real estate than on personal property. The truth was, as is plain from this correspondence, that the assessors did not want to assess personal property, and they made that the ground of their refusal. But now there is no pretense of that kind. If either of these bills is passed, there is no question as to their having ample time to assess the personal property, because the real property has already been assessed; the real property is already upon the books; and neither of these bills proposes to change the assessment upon the real estate; so that all the assessors will have to do will be to make the assessment upon personal property.

Under these circumstances it seems to me it is better to take the House bill, make such amendments as can be suggested, and pass it; and let me say to Senators that it ought to be done to-day, because if the measure is recommitted it is probable it will not again gain the attention of the Senate, or if we pass it at all we may possibly pass it at an inopportune moment or at so late a period or when it will be so involved in our complications hereafter with the appropriation bills that we may adjourn without securing a tax bill for the District, and thus we shall leave the common schools, all the ordinary administration of justice, all the police, and the government of this city at loose ends. That is not right. I think, therefore, it is better to pass either of these bills rather than postpone the matter any longer. I think myself it is better to take the House bill and make such modifications as are necessary, or else to offer a substitute similar to that proposed by the Senator from New York to continue in force the act of last session, and send it to a committee of conference.

Mr. SARGENT. The bill of our committee is an amendment offered as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the Senator from New York, according to his suggestion, can offer in a single section a substitute for the House bill, and if the Senate agrees to that substitute the whole matter may go to a committee of conference, and they can take either the House bill or the bill of the last session.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Ohio will accomplish his whole purpose by a section, however brief, simply continuing for another year this act, entitled an act so and so.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it must be a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Yes; but I merely suggest to the honorable Senator that any form of words which can be put down for him or by himself in a moment, merely reviving and continuing for one year that act, will accomplish his purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. My attention has not been called to the matter, and I would rather the Senator from New York, with the law before him, should draw up the amendment. I think as a practical question the better way would be to have a clause of that kind proposing the continuance of the law of last session, offer it as a substitute for the House bill, and let the two propositions go before a committee of conference.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, it is proper for me to say that I am not very familiar with the theory or details of the substitute reported by the committee or the House bill. Although a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I was necessarily absent at the time the subject was considered, and I do not feel in any sense committed to the report of the committee or to the House bill; and with all due respect and submission to that part of the committee which reported this substitute, I must beg to dissent from its propriety. I think there are two or three fundamental errors manifest on its face, without reference to detail.

In the first place, I concur mainly in what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] has said touching the taxation of personal property. In the next place, I think there is a fundamental error as to the way and manner in which it is proposed to tax the real property in the District. The substitute provides for imposing a like percentage of taxation upon all the lands in the District of Columbia, the same percentage of taxation upon real estate in the city of Washington, in the city of Georgetown, and in the District of Columbia outside of these two cities. It seems to me that that is manifestly wrong, and it is wrong for this reason: So far as the public debt owed by the District of Columbia is concerned, I suppose that more than four-fifths of it was created and expended in improvements in the city of Washington, and certainly of the one-fifth that would be left upon that estimate the greater portion was devoted to improvements in the city of Georgetown, while the District of Columbia outside of those two cities realized from these vast expenditures comparatively a trifling sum. Taxes are levied on the people throughout the District for the purpose of supporting a government for the protection of the people in their property and their liberty, and each man ought to pay in proportion to the amount of protection which he receives. We all know that the people in the city of Washington have privileges that the people in the city of Georgetown do not have, and that the people in the city of Georgetown have privileges that the people of the District outside the two cities have not. The people of Washington have a higher degree of protection; they have better streets, they have better sewerage, they have a more thoroughly organized and more numerous police; they have a thousand advantages that the people in the city of Georgetown do not have. So in the city of Georgetown the people have many advantages that those outside of the two cities do not have. They have the advantage of police, gas arrangements, fine streets, well-regulated sewerage, and all that, while the people of the District outside of the cities have comparatively few advantages, derive comparatively little benefit from the government which is to be supported by the taxes it is now sought to impose.

I think that justice requires that some fair proportion of taxation according to the assessed value shall be ascertained, and that that proportion shall be imposed in whatever tax bill shall pass. I see in the House bill it is provided that real estate in the city of Washington shall pay $1.50 on the $100 of assessed value; in the city of Georgetown real estate shall pay a tax at the rate of $1 upon the $100 of assessed value; and in the District of Columbia, outside of the two cities, real estate shall pay seventy-five cents on the $100 of valuation. That proportion may or may not be right; but that some such proportion ought to be established seems to me to be manifest; and therefore I cannot agree to this leveling process in assessing taxes upon real estate in the District of Columbia agreed upon by a majority of the committee.

In view of these objections, it seems to me that the bill ought to be recommitted. I think the committee was not full when this bill was acted upon. It was not convenient for me to be present, and I was not present, as I have already said.

I want now to say a word in reply to the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.] I believe he avails himself of all appropriate occasions, and of some that are not very appropriate, to talk about free suffrage in the District of Columbia. Well, sir, if it were appropriate, if it were lawful, I should be as far from objecting to suffrage in the District of Columbia as anybody; but I believe that Congress has no power to confer on the people of this District the right of suffrage. The Government of the United States was not made for the purpose of conferring suffrage upon anybody. The Constitution does not provide suffrage for anybody. The American people do not know anything about suffrage, except through the several State governments; and until the fifteenth amendment there was no provision affecting suffrage anywhere in the Constitution. It may be said that suffrage was formerly conferred upon the people of this District; and I believe that whenever it was conferred it was conferred in violation of the Constitution; and a precedent that has not the sanction of the Constitution is no precedent at all. Now, how does this matter stand resting upon the Constitution? The Supreme Court has decided—they decided it in the case of Marbury vs. Madison—that a justice of the peace in the city of Washington was an officer of the United States. They have further decided that an act of Congress in reference to the city of Washington and the District of Columbia was a statute of the United States, a law of the United States. The Constitution provides that the President shall appoint all officers of the United States, except certain officers who are appointed by heads of Departments or the courts. If, then, a justice of the peace, a mayor, or a judge in this District is an officer of the United States, how can Congress confer on the people here the right to elect him? I should like to hear my friend answer that argument. I have heard this suggested as an answer to it, that the clause of the Constitution in reference to the District of Columbia gives Congress complete power and control over this District and its government; but I take it that every lawyer would say, more particularly every court would say, that that clause of the Constitution must be construed in reference to the other provisions of the Constitution and must stand and harmonize with the other provisions, which would embrace that provision that confers on the President the power to appoint all officers of the United States, with certain exceptions, which exceptions certainly would not embrace officers appointed to administer any government in the District of Columbia.

The Senator says that the fact that these officers are to be appointed by the President contravenes the whole theory of our Government and subverts free government, and that all parties and the American people ought to be ashamed of it. I say to the Senator that if they ought to be ashamed of it they ought to be ashamed of their system of government, for their system of government provides it. Why, sir, will the Senator contend that the people ought to elect Cabinet officers; that they ought to elect Supreme Court judges; that they ought to elect revenue officers; that they ought to elect the whole body of officers necessary under the Constitution of the United States to administer the Federal Government? The Secretary of the Treasury, all Cabinet officers, all officers of every grade, including the judiciary, are appointed by the President. They rule over the American people. They come in very close contact with them. The people do not elect them. We hear nothing from the Senator upon that subject. He does not complain that the people have no voice in the appointment or the election of the Secretary of the Treasury or the judges of the Supreme Court or the various revenue officers that come in direct contact with them. Nothing is said about that. I say nothing about that, because according to our system of government it was intended that they should be appointed by the President, and I think it is a wise and proper regulation and a regulation essential to our system of government. If, sir, we were to blot out these provisions of the Constitution, if we were to break down these limitations and turn the whole Union into a mob, we might expect the fate of Mexico and other countries that have attempted republican government without establishing in that government proper balancing powers. So, then, I say to the honorable Senator that while I am as ready as he is whenever it is proper to confer upon the people suffrage, I am willing to stand by the Constitution; and it is just as essential to uphold these limitations contained in the Constitution upon popular power as it is to uphold the right of popular suffrage where it ought to be exercised and where it properly belongs under our system of government.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, one word. The District was ceded by the two States of Maryland and Virginia in 1800, I believe. The very next year the Congress of the United States gave an interpretation to the Constitution by providing for the people of this District a local government, to be elected by themselves. That government continued for seventy-two years, and nobody thought that the Constitution had been violated. The democratic party through all the years of its ascendency continued that government.

Mr. MERRIMON. They did a great many improper things.

Mr. MORTON. I know they did a great many improper things; but that was one of the things that were not improper. It would be a very excellent thing for this country if it could be said that that was the worst thing the democratic party had ever done. But here is the contemporaneous construction of the Constitution for seventy-two years, nearly three-quarters of a century, giving to this people a local, domestic government, and no harm ever came of it, but they got on smoothly and they got on without trouble. Latterly the discovery has been made by the democratic party, since colored men were allowed to vote, that nobody has a right to vote in this District, and that Congress cannot give anybody that right. That awakening and that discovery, I undertake to say, grew out of the fact that colored men were allowed to vote; and if they had not been allowed to vote the democratic party to-day would be in favor of giving to the people here a local and domestic government of their own.

Mr. MERRIMON. May I ask the honorable Senator a question?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIMON. They had suffrage; and who took it away from them? Was it the democratic party or the republican party?

Mr. MORTON. I believe I must confess to my sorrow that the republican party had something to do with taking it away, but they were unanimously supported by the democratic party in that effort, and now the democratic party is unanimously opposed to giving it back to them, and I can say that the republican party is not unanimously opposed to giving it back to them, because I can speak for one at least.

My friend says that we do not elect the Secretary of the Treasury and we do not elect the judges of the Supreme Court. Ay, but we elect those who do appoint them; but the people of this District have no power to elect anybody. They are taxed to make their streets, and their alleys, and their sewers, and to pay policemen, but they have no voice in the matter at all; they are governed as despotically as are the serfs of Russia; they have no more power than the people of Russia have; it is a pure despotism, so far as they are concerned.

Mr. President, I say that is in conflict with our theory of government. I do not care how often it is mentioned. If it has become unfashionable to talk about the right of suffrage, so be it; it will never be unfashionable with me until I change my mind. But my friend, I think, dares not carry his argument of a while ago to its conclusion when he talked about Mexico. The substance of that argument is that suffrage in his own State and everywhere else ought to be limited, and that there is a class of people now voting who ought not to vote. That is what my friend means, but what my friend does not say in words. Let him and others come out and avow the logical result of their doctrines on this floor.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will my friend allow me just a moment?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MERRIMON. He does not want to do me injustice. What I said was this: That I stood by suffrage, the suffrage of everybody entitled to it; but that, in order to preserve suffrage and liberty, it was necessary that suffrage should be regulated by law. And we must stand by the law as well as by the suffrage.

Mr. MORTON. What does that mean, "regulated by law?" My friend means that it shall be so regulated that a great many men who vote now should not vote. It is regulated by law everywhere; it has always been. That means nothing in itself. But the whole argument is that suffrage is too general, that it is too universal, that it ought to be limited; and I ask my friend from Ohio, and my friend from North Carolina, and others to come out and declare the logical result of their arguments, because they are just as good at home as they are here.

Mr. President, one hundred years ago our fathers used this language:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

That was true one hundred years ago, and it is true to-day. And the government of this people in their local and domestic affairs should derive its powers and its administration from the consent of the governed. My friend takes away that consent, and would do it for all time. I ask my friend to accept the logical result of his doctrine and apply it in his own State.

Mr. THURMAN. And when the people of the District of Columbia shall petition Congress to give them suffrage, I shall then believe that they are governed without their consent. Until they send us some such petition, I shall continue to think they are governed with their consent. I have not yet seen any such petition. I have not heard of any clamor for suffrage in this District; and, until I do find some movement of this people, whom my friend from Indiana supposes to be oppressed, that manifests a sense of oppression on their part, I shall presume that the government they have is with their consent.

But I hope that this discussion about suffrage will not go on on this tax bill. It has nothing in the world to do with the bill; and, having nothing to do with it, I think in the short time that is left of this session, or at least that is supposed to be left, we should proceed more practically and discuss the matter that is really in hand. I shall not say a word more on this subject of suffrage.

I wish to say, without having had yet an opportunity to carefully study these bills, that the impression made upon my mind by glancing over the bill of the Senate committee is not very favorable. I have not yet had an opportunity to read the House bill; but if I understood the statement of it made this morning by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, it is a bill that taxes all real estate with certain exceptions, the same I believe that are in the Senate bill, and, speaking in general terms, all personal property. It is pretty much such a law as exists in nearly all the Western States, notably in my own State, and I believe in most of the Western States; a scheme that has been supposed by some political economists to go quite too far in some respects in the taxation of credits without allowing deductions as in some cases, and in others the taxation of money without allowing deductions. But these are speculations that I do not see fit to go into.

The general idea of the House bill is that all property, whether real or personal, should pay a contribution to the support of the government of the District. It goes upon the theory that the revenue should be raised by a tax on property. It provides for no poll-tax; it eschews all poll-tax. It goes upon the theory that the revenue must be raised by a tax on property, and that raising it by a tax on property you may as properly tax personal property as you may tax real property. That is the general feature of the House bill. The Senate bill ignores a tax on personal property except in a small degree taxing certain furniture and some articles of luxury; but the general taxation of personal property is ignored in the Senate bill unless, indeed, it may be said to be a tax on property by indirection. The provisions are not properly a tax upon personal property generally; but the theory of the Senate bill is I see by glancing hastily over it, if I comprehend it, first a tax on real estate and next a tax on trades and occupations. So far as revenue is raised except by a tax on real estate and a tax on furniture and some articles of luxury in the shape of personal property, the rest of the revenue is to be derived by a tax on trades, occupations, and business. Now, is that a good mode of taxation, and is it possible to frame a system of revenue in that way to make it fair and make it just? Why, look at some of the details of the bill and see how it is. Upon what theory is this tariff to be levied? For instance, I find in section 10, which is the section that begins with this work—

> That for the objects aforesaid there is also levied hereby—

That is, after levying a tax on real estate, they proceed as follows:

> That for the objects aforesaid there is also levied hereby upon professions, trades, callings, occupations, business, and personal property in the District of Columbia, in full of all licenses and personal taxes, the following, to wit:
> First. Apothecaries shall pay annually $10 on each thousand dollars, or fractional part thereof, of capital invested.

Now let us go on:

> Dealers in merchandise, of any kind whatever, not otherwise provided for, shall pay annually $5 on each thousand dollars, or fractional part thereof, of capital invested in business.

Will somebody tell me some good reason why an apothecary should pay double as much tax as a dry-goods merchant?

Mr. SPENCER. Because his profits are so much larger.

Mr. THURMAN. How do we know that?

Mr. SPENCER. It is generally understood that an apothecary makes a profit of 100 or 200 per cent., while a merchant makes a profit of from 15 to 25 per cent.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think any man would make the large profit of 100 or 200 per cent. and have a monopoly of the business long. I think such a profit as that would set apothecary-shops at about every door.

Mr. SPENCER. That is the case; there are more apothecary-shops in Washington than in any other place in the country.

Mr. THURMAN. Not quite that. There are a great many of them, I know. It is a mere supposition that the profits of apothecaries are greater than the profits of dealers in merchandise. I want some better evidence of that before I say that the tax shall be twice as large on the one as it is on the other. Then—

Commission merchants shall pay $40 annually.

Some commission merchants do an immense business. I do not know how it is here.

Mr. HAMLIN. And others do very little.

Mr. THURMAN. Some very little; but then right next to it—

Auctioneers shall pay $100 annually and a semi-annual tax on gross receipts of ¼ of 1 per cent.

I really do not think that there is so much difference between a commission-merchant who sells quietly to merchants and dresses in good clothes and a fellow who gets up in a pulpit and sells goods under the hammer, that the one shall be taxed about three or four times as much as the other. I do not really see that because one fellow has more eloquence than the other, can halloo louder and longer, that he shall be made to pay three or four times as much tax as the other, or five, or six, or ten times as much tax. So we go on through all these items, and if you look at them you will find that it is the most curious sort of thing to see the discriminations that are made.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask my friend from Ohio if he sees any reason why the lawyer whose income is $50,000 a year should not pay a little more tax than the lawyer whose income is only $500 a year? But they are all put alike here.

Mr. THURMAN. If that runs out the poor fellows who are not fit to practice it would not be of much disadvantage, [laughter;] but if it runs out the poor fellows who are fit to practice and have not the money to pay the tax, it would be very oppressive.

Mr. WITHERS. It would be hard on young men trying to get a start.

Mr. THURMAN. I object to the whole system of taxing professions. Here is a tax, for instance, of $5; my friend from Indiana called my attention to it:

Carts, wagons, and drays shall pay annually, as follows: Wagons, $5; carts, $2.50; drays, $2.50; hand-carts, $2.

A fellow cannot trudge things around in a hand-cart without paying $2 license. So far as a tax is necessary to secure a system of licensing and police that will protect people against fraud, I have no objection to that; but I deny that you can with any propriety tax occupations as this does, for it is a tax on occupations. Nobody will pretend that it is necessary to have a five-dollar tax on a wagon in order to pay the expense of licensing the wagon and putting a number on it, so that any man who employs that wagon may know what wagon it is he employs, or a dray, or the like. So far as you merely provide for the cost of granting a license to the man to whom it is granted for the public security and for the security of persons who use his vehicle or avail themselves of his services, or for putting a mark or number on his wagon, or dray, or the like, well and good; but to undertake to raise revenue to support a government by doing more than that is to tax the man's occupation, to tax his labor, to tax his industry; it is nothing else than that.

I need not go further. There is one thing here that touches my friends very sensibly. I am sorry that my friend from Delaware is not here—the Senator who is down South now—because he called attention to one of these things once before, and I am sure this would affect him sensibly.

The proprietors of beer-gardens shall pay $3 per day.

Why, that makes a thousand and odd dollars a year if they keep open the whole year round. What a tax that is! I tell you if you pass such a law as that and give suffrage here, you will not get the vote of a Dutchman for your party. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORTON. Is not that taken from a bill reported last year by the new Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. THURMAN. If I had known that before, I would not have voted for his confirmation. [Laughter.] That is a direct attack on a man's stomach.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I was influenced by no party consideration. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. Then after the man has paid his $3 a day he cannot sell anything but beer, for he is expressly prohibited from selling wine or spirituous liquors.

Mr. CONKLING. That would lose him the democratic party as customers. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. It is an assault on the party. [Laughter.]

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the condition of the Committee on the District of Columbia is truly deplorable and I think entitles it to the commiseration of the Senate. It is assailed from without and denounced from within, and its worst foes are apparently those of its own household; for, after this bill has been reported by the committee, two members rise on the floor and say that it was without their concurrence; and it has so far been without advocate or defender by any member of the committee. It therefore, perhaps, is necessary for me, as one member, to say that I consented to the reporting of this bill from the fact that it was so late in the session and the exigencies of the public service were so pressing that it became necessary that some measure should be brought before the Senate for immediate action. Personally I have no preference for one bill or the other, either that proposed by the House, that originally introduced in the House, or that reported as an amendment by the Senate committee. I am opposed to all taxation. If I had my way it should be entirely abolished. There should be no levy or impost on real estate or personal property or upon avocations. But, unfortunately, taxation is the price we pay for citizenship; it is the compensation that society demands for protection of life and liberty and property; and there never has yet been, so far as I am able to understand, any system of taxation devised that met with the uniform approbation of every person to whom it was applied. No man ever paid a tax "with good opinion of the law."

The chief objection that has been made to the bill before the Senate is based upon the fact that the taxation is inequitable and that the burden has been unjustly and unequally and unfairly distributed. Well, sir, that is the great problem that has vexed the minds of statesmen and political economists from the earliest foundation of society. Take the tax upon real estate, against which no person has made any objection so far as this bill is concerned, of $1.50 upon one hundred dollars' valuation. As an illustration, assume the case of a poor laboring-man who has a little piece of property worth $500. Upon that the tax under this bill would be $7.50. Take the case of the great capitalist who owns fifty thousand dollars' worth of real property in this District, a large amount of which is productive, bringing him rents perhaps up to the amount of 10 or 15 per cent. on his original investment. Will any man say to me that the impost of $7.50 upon the poor laboring-man's tenement is anything like a fair and just imposition when contrasted with the tax paid by the capitalist who owns fifty thousand dollars' worth of productive real estate? Take the case or personal property for the same illustration. The poor man owns a little furniture; he owns, it may be, a few hundred dollars' worth of bank stock. Again, the wealthy man owns a million dollars of interest-bearing bonds. He pays precisely the same tax as the poor man; but is there any equality, any justice, or any equity in imposing precisely the same amount upon the real estate or the personal property of the poor man that you do upon that of the rich man?

I say therefore that this complaint that is made against the provisions of this bill is one that exists in the very nature of the thing you are seeking to do. It is impossible to levy a tax that shall bear uniformly and equally upon all classes of men in society and upon all kinds and conditions of property.

But, sir, as I said, I am not particularly wedded to either of these bills, and yet I cannot submit quietly to the wholesale imputations that have been brought against the bill that has been reported by the committee, notably by the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. HITCHCOCK,] who is a member of the committee, and more particularly by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] who, with a great deal of impetuosity and ardor, declared that the amendment was a thing which he appeared to be unwilling to touch and to which he was unable to apply an appropriate appellation. I beg to say to that Senator that in my judgment the tax that is obtained by way of a license is the most uniform, the most equitable, and the most just that the ingenuity of man has ever yet devised. There are two kinds of taxes, one direct, the other indirect. The direct tax is levied upon land; it is levied upon personal property; it is levied upon the poll of the citizen. The indirect tax is levied upon rents and profits; it is levied upon vocations; it is levied upon the various articles and occupations that come within the general purview of an excise law. Now, sir, what is known as a tax upon vocations and upon business is the most just and uniform from this fact, that it comes the nearest that has ever yet been devised to what is known as the tax upon commodities, the tax upon personal property, and the reason is plain. It is because every man who has to pay a tax upon a vocation, who has to pay a tax upon business, inevitably charges the tax that he pays to those to whom he sells or to those for whose benefit his vocation is exercised. Thus, sir, a system of licenses, a system of taxation upon avocations, if it is applied to all vocations and trades exercised in a community, in the course of a year is distributed uniformly over every member of that community, because every man in a community, every citizen in the course of a year, either purchases some property of the man who pays the license or applies to the lawyer or the physicians or the other professional person for whose benefit the avocation is exercised.

This much, sir, I have felt bound to say in defense of the committee and against the imputations that have been made by the Senator from Maine. There is no ground whatever for the assertion that the tax that is levied by way of license or tax upon avocations is unjust, invidious, or unequal.

Again, sir, it is urged that in the bill reported by the committee personal property entirely escapes taxation, is relieved from bearing its share of the burden of public expense. If the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Ohio had been at the trouble to examine this bill minutely, they would have ascertained that there are twenty-two instances in which personal property is directly taxed, so that instead of there being an exemption of personal property from bearing its share of the public burdens there is an absolute specification in twenty-two instances where personal property is taxed. But, as I said, I am indifferent to the fate of either of the bills, for I am opposed to taxation, and it is a matter to me of profound indifference what the Senate do with the bill of the committee or any of those to which it is offered as an amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. In order that the suggestion may be before the Senate, I offer as a substitute for the bill and the pending amendment this:

That the act of Congress entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, is hereby re-enacted for and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will observe that the act was passed in March, and has expired.

Mr. CONKLING. It is dead.

Mr. SHERMAN. That act requires certain acts to be done in the months of April, May, and June, and they cannot be done now.

Mr. CONKLING. Those things have all passed away.

Mr. SHERMAN. But they must be done before the tax can be levied.

Mr. CONKLING. Let the Senator look at the act and suggest an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit to the Senator whether it is not necessary to have something like this:

That said tax shall be levied and collected in the mode and manner, and with like exceptions and qualifications, as provided by the act approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes;" and where by the provisions of the said act the time or times for the performance of any act or duty cannot be complied with, the commissioners of said District shall prescribe the time for the performance of such act or acts, and said commissioners are hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry said act into effect and collect the tax on personal property provided for in said act.

The act, which is before me, provides for certain things being done in April, May, and June.

Mr. CONKLING. Are those the dates of assessment?

Mr. SHERMAN. The assessment of personal estate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That act as to personal estate was not put into execution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not as to personal property. It is therefore necessary to have a time fixed.

Mr. MORTON. I inquire whether or not, at this session, we did not pass an act which to some extent modified it?

Mr. EATON. I was about to make very nearly the same proposition which was offered by the Senator from New York, differing in one particular. I propose that the bill of last session, the present law on the statute-book, together with these bills, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; so that if any alteration be necessary in the law such alteration can be made. I have no idea that at this late day in the session a satisfactory tax bill can be perfected. I do not know that there is a tax bill in any State, or in any community in the United States, that is entirely satisfactory to that community. Therefore my honorable friend from Kansas is entirely right in the opinion he has expressed.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me, I will withdraw my amendment. I am satisfied that his suggestion is the true one. Let this bill go to the committee and they can consult with the commissioners and change such dates as are necessary, in their judgment, and they can report it back in a day or two. I think that the better way.

Mr. SPENCER. It is very necessary that we shall have this bill acted upon immediately, and I will consent to the course proposed, provided we can have the privilege of taking up the bill on Tuesday, when we shall be able to report to the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not think there will be any objection to that understanding.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not before Tuesday? Say on Monday.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to any arrangement that is subject to the appropriation bills. The Army bill comes up on Monday.

Mr. SPENCER. If by general consent it be understood that when we report this bill back it shall be acted upon immediately, I have no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest that the Senator needs no general consent, and especially if the judgment of his committee should be in favor of such a suggestion as that now made by the Senator from Connecticut reporting a mere continuation of the law of last year, mutatis mutandis, making such variation of dates as will be necessary, it will lead to very little debate after what has occurred. I suggest to the Senator that he can take it up in the morning hour and have it considered in the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) The Senator from Connecticut moves that the bill and the pending amendments be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill have had the same under consideration, and submit a report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

LOT M. MORRILL,
WM. WINDOM,
ROBERT E. WITHERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
CHARLES FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire which House asked for the conference on this bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Should the report be made here in the first instance, then?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senate was the party asking the conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a good deal like the old lady's indigo, but I had the impression that the rule was exactly the other way. The Chair can inform me.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We had the papers and asked for the conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In asking the conference you had the papers; but then they went back to the House and the House agreed to the conference.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And so, the House having the papers, the report should go to the House in the first instance.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not interpose any point upon the conference report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit that point of order. It is of no account in this particular instance that I know of; but it is quite proper in this state of things that we should observe the utmost decorum toward the House of Representatives. As I understand it, the body asking for the conference never acts first upon the report.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It seemed to be understood in the committee of conference that the report should be made here first.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I remember that question was up on the bounty bill a year or two ago when we fell into exactly such a difficulty. Let us look at that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The usage perhaps has been as the Senator supposes; but it may be done either way, doubtless.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not raise a point of order on this report. Unquestionably he is right; but it is not pertinent here. The other House is not in session, and we do not want to recall the committee of conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The propriety of procedure, considering the state of the thing, is probably of considerable more importance than the mere form.

Mr. SARGENT. Sometimes, however, it can be waived. There is nothing vital in the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. First let me ascertain whether I am right.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator is right, unquestionably.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit the point to the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that to the House granting the conference the report is to be made first.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is as I understand it exactly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is undoubtedly the usual practice, but not invariably, and in this instance, the House of Representatives not being in session, the form may be waived.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not help the matter because the House is not in session. If we are to ask for a new conference, the House not being in session will not help it a bit.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It will, insomuch that we can act upon it now and send it to the House for action at their meeting on Monday.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a mere matter of form. The House will act on it on Monday and send it to us, because of course both Houses will agree to a new conference. I should like to have the rule read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the rule.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And in all cases of conference asked after a vote of disagreement, &c., the conferees of the House asking it are to leave the papers with the conferees of the other; and in one case where they refused to receive them, they were left on the table in the conference chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It follows, therefore, that the conferees on the part of the Senate had no right to the papers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to my friend, while I am sure he will not misunderstand my motive in making this point of order, that he treat the papers as not presented, because they are not, I believe, in a strict sense in the possession of our conferees.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I withdraw the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report is withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not know what may be the temper of the Senate this afternoon as to a disposition to attend to any other business. There were reported from the Committee on Claims a few mornings since two bills, both of them in the nature of appropriation bills. One is a bill providing for the payment of allowances that have been made by the accounting officers of the Treasury. The bill covers several pages, it is true, but these claims have been very carefully examined by the Committee on Claims, and there are only one or two amendments, which are not verbal, reported to the House bill. It occurred to me that perhaps the Senate might be willing to take up that bill this afternoon. I am sure it will take but a very few moments, unless there is a disposition to have it read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will have to be read.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is made up merely of names and amounts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think we ever ought to pass any bill without having it read.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not want to insist upon keeping the Senate here this afternoon if there is a temper to adjourn, but at some time or other this bill must be read and considered. It ought to be acted upon at this session of Congress. I hope the Senate will be content to remain here and let us pass the bill this afternoon. It has passed the House and has been carefully considered by the Claims Committee of the Senate. There is but one change of importance, and that was made upon the recommendation of the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the whole amount in the bill?

Mr. WRIGHT. About $100,000. The bill has been passed upon by the Quartermaster's Department and also by the Third Auditor, and has been carefully examined. Some time it must be passed upon by us. I therefore move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2691.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to interfere with the disposition of the Senate this afternoon to pass this bill or anything else, but it is known very well that what was considered as a special order lost its place by some fault either of mine, or of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] or of the Secretary of the Senate. The Senator from Missouri thought he made a motion which would secure it as a special order, but it lost its place. I refer to the silver bill. It is indispensably necessary to have that bill considered at some time. We cannot adjourn this Congress without making some provision more than is yet made by law for issuing silver change. I therefore move, pending the motion of the Senator from Iowa, not to interfere with it at all, that House bill No. 3398, for the issue of coin and for other purposes, be made a special order to take the place of the unfinished business on next Monday morning. I have no doubt that we can then get through with it in a very short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to entertaining the motion of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WRIGHT. I make the point of order that that is not in order pending the motion I have made to take up this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. It is not in order to make that motion pending the motion made by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SHERMAN. I appeal, then, to the unanimous sense of the Senate. I do not want to struggle to get the bill up, for it is no more to me than to any other Senator; but I ask, as this bill was displaced by a misunderstanding, whether it ought not to be the sense of the Senate to take it up?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senate can refuse to take up the bill proposed by the Senator from Iowa, and then the Senator from Ohio can make his motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa to withdraw his motion for a moment to allow me to get the bill up.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am sure my bill will take no time except that occupied in its reading.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that, but as soon as I can get the silver bill made the special order for Monday the Senator from Iowa can proceed with his bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I can very well see, as an appropriation bill is to be taken up on Monday, the Army appropriation bill, which has been reported, that the motion of the Senator from Ohio will be antagonized.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will run the risk of that. We have got to pass this silver bill some time, as it is important that it should be sent back to the House of Representatives.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think I must insist on my motion, and take the sense of the Senate at all events as to whether they will take up the claims bill this afternoon. Of course if my motion is voted down, I shall have to surrender. I make the effort because I feel it my duty, in view of the importance of the bill and the numerous claims involved, mostly small claims, from $5 up, that some action should be had; and it should be got out of the way as soon as possible.

Mr. SHERMAN. After his bill is taken up, will the Senator from Iowa give me a chance to test the sense of the Senate as to whether they will make the silver bill the special order for Monday?

Mr. WRIGHT. If the Senate will take up my bill, I am sure it will lead to no discussion, and will only take the time necessary to read it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been here laboring diligently to get a special order on a bill which I regard of importance, and the Senate all feel that we must act on the question before we adjourn. Therefore, if the Senator from Iowa will not give me an opportunity to submit the motion to take the sense of the Senate to make the bill a special order for Monday, I shall insist on a division on his motion. If he will withdraw his motion for five minutes, I have no doubt the Senate will decide this matter. I am not going to debate it at all.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask the Senator to defer his motion. Of course Senators will be influenced by the importance of the Senator's bill; but I think that action ought to be had at once upon the bill to which I refer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] to proceed to the consideration of the bill which he has named.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will postpone its consideration for five or ten minutes in order that I may make my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to take up the claims bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for a division. I am not going to take care of a bill of this kind for so long without an effort to get it before the Senate.

There were, on a division—ayes 19, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let us have the yeas and nays. I am sure there is a quorum here.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 12—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Caperton, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Dawes, Goldthwaite, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Johnston, Key, Logan, McCreery, Maxey, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Robertson, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, Withers, and Wright—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Cragin, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Ingalls, Morrill of Maine, Paddock, Sargent, Sherman, and Windom—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Ferry, Gordon, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, and Whyte—35.

So the motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS FOR ARMY STORES AND SUPPLIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2691) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK, (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

Several SENATORS. O, no; let us go on.

The Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa to give way to me informally for a motion that House bill No. 3398, for which I reported a substitute yesterday, be made the special order at one o'clock on Monday. Then I will not interfere with him.

Mr. WRIGHT. I trust the Senator will allow this bill to take its regular course.

Mr. SHERMAN. My motion will not take a moment.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think there will be discussion on that very proposition, especially if it is to antagonize the Army appropriation bill on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa declines to yield. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was in line 58, to change the name of "Somuel E. Cottrell" to "Samuel E. Cottrell."

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to suggest in this connection that as there are several amendments which are a mere change of names, unless there be something said they may be passed as a matter of course, without stopping to take any question upon them. The bill has been very carefully compared with the rolls, and these changes have been made by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was to strike out under the heading "State of Tennessee," lines 116 and 117, as follows:

To George G. King, Washington County, $912.50.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will state with reference to this amendment that on information derived from the accounting officers since the bill passed the House we find that they recommend that this claim be withdrawn, as it was passed by them by mistake. Therefore we have omitted it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 136, to change the name of "T. P. McNew" to "F. P. McNew."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 149, after the word "seventy-five" to strike out "cents" and insert "dollars;" so that the paragraph will read:

To James G. Moore, executor of Statira Moore, deceased, Shelby County, [Tennessee,] $7,775.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 225, to change the name of "Darwin I. Adkins" to "Darwin J. Adkins."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 232, to change the name of "B.T. Roberts" to "R. T. Roberts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 280, under the heading "State of Missouri:"

To Abner and Montney Thurman, Warren County, $375.50.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will state in reference to the amendment that it is only a transposition of the same names and the same amounts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 291, to change the name of "Ira D. Wood" to "Ira L. Wood."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 293 and 294, as follows:

To Abner and Montney Thurman, Warren County, $375.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 313, to change the name of "Willing Boling" to "William Boling."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 317, to change the name of "G. L. Bowland" to "G. L. Bourland."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 358, under the heading "State of Kentucky:"

To Robert Floyd and George Anderson, partners, trading under the name of.

So as to read:

To Robert Floyd and George Anderson, partners, trading under the name of Floyd & Anderson, Jefferson County, $52.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 363, to change the name "I. H. Gardner" to "J. H. Gardner."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 476, to change the name "Harmon R. Wilson" to "Harmon K. Wilson."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 518, to change the name "Isaac Vanasdall" to "Isaac Vanosdall."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 578, to insert before the name "A. H. Hager" the word "to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 580, to change the name "A. Armstrong" to "S. Armstrong."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 590, after the word "William," to strike out the letter "H" and insert "M;" and in the same line, after the word "administrator," to strike out the word "of" and insert "and;" so as to read:

To William M. Hill, administrator, and Henrietta Hill, administratrix of David Spong, deceased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 636, to change the name "Christian Slotler" to "Christian Stotler."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 672, to change the name "Joseph A. Ritchie" to "Joshua A. Ritchie."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 686, to change the name "L. Curtis" to "S. Curtis."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 692, to change the name "S. J. Feltz" to "S. J. Weltz."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 697, under the heading "State of Kansas," to insert:

To William R. Chitwood, Jefferson County, $26.84.

And to strike out the same words in lines 702 and 703.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported certain amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 939) for the relief of John S. Bishop; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DOROTHEA IRONS.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the bill (H. R. No. 2017) for the relief of Dorothea Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First United States Artillery, be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. It was reported by mistake, and I move that it be recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MERRIMON. Yesterday my colleague [Mr. RANSOM] was appointed a member of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes. He is absent to-day, and will be absent some days. I move that he be excused from further service upon that committee and that his place be supplied.

Mr. RANSOM was excused; and by unanimous consent the Chair was authorized to fill the vacancy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints upon the committee of conference upon the Indian appropriation bill the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] in place of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM,] who has just been excused from further service.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that my colleague has just been called away by a telegram on account of sickness in his family, and probably he will not be here for several days. I therefore suggest the appointment of another Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. CAPERTON, to fill the vacancy.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have in my hand a bill——

Mr. SPENCER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of a bill. I do not think it will take three minutes. There cannot possibly be any objection to it, and it is important that it should pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. PADDOCK. I yield for a moment only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 873) to provide for the 8 per cent. certificates of indebtedness issued for work done under the direction of the board of public works and chargeable to the private property benefited thereby.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is that bill reported from our committee?

Mr. SPENCER. From the Committee on the District of Columbia, unanimously reported. The Senator was present, I think, when we agreed to report this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was not.

Mr. SPENCER. Let the bill be read at any rate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CONKLING. I want to make an inquiry about it to see whether I object or not. Does this act, if act it shall be, confirm and validate all the assessments made upon private property in this District?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand the object of the bill is to waive any technical difficulties in the assessment of the tax. The bill was introduced by myself, and that is the only way I happen to know anything about it. It was accompanied by a communication from the commissioners, whose statement I do not remember thoroughly, but I believe, in substance, it was this: That by authority of the territorial Legislature a certain amount of what were called "greenbacks" were issued, bearing 8 per cent. interest, to be paid out of the levy of a tax which was to be levied upon the property-holders whose property was to be improved by this money.

Mr. PADDOCK. My friend from Maine will allow me to suggest that I yielded the floor upon the representation of the Senator from Alabama that the bill which he proposed to have considered would not consume the time of the Senate and would give rise to no debate. I find that it will be impossible to pass the bill without talk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It cannot be passed to-night, certainly.

Mr. PADDOCK. Therefore I must insist on the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will yield while I move to take up a bill for consideration.

Mr. HOWE. Very well.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the bill?

Mr. PADDOCK. It is a bill relating to the postage on official mail matter.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator only wants to take it up and does not want action, I understand?

Mr. PADDOCK. That is all I desire to do. I will state as a reason for this request that if the bill should pass it will require a modification of the post-office appropriation bill. That bill is now in the hands of a conference committee and there ought to be some action taken in reference to this matter immediately.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it a bill restoring the franking privilege?

Mr. PADDOCK. It restores the franking privilege so far as relates to official communications.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does the Senator desire to go on with it to-night?

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not desire to go on with it to-day. I simply wish the Senate by unanimous consent to take it up and let it lie over until Monday morning.

Mr. BOGY. I object.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest to my honorable friend from Nebraska that it be taken up subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. PADDOCK. Certainly; that is what I desire.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course it will have to take its chances against an appropriation bill.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator wants it to remain as unfinished business; that is all, I understand.

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be considered the unfinished business, in the absence of appropriation bills. Is that understood?

Mr. BOGY. I object. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] made a motion a while ago to take up the silver bill, so as to make that the special order for Monday. That is a bill which has been before the Senate for a long time and is of very great importance.

Mr. PADDOCK. If my friend will give way a moment I will state that I spoke to the Senator from Ohio about taking up this bill and making it the unfinished business for Monday morning, and I understood him to consent thereto.

Mr. BOGY. How long will it occupy the Senate?

Mr. PADDOCK. I think not more than twenty minutes. It ought not to do so, at any rate.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

Mr. BOGY. I should like to make a proper motion, I do not know exactly what motion to make, so as to have the silver bill taken up on Monday at one o'clock and made the special order for that time. It is a bill of very great importance.

Mr. PADDOCK. Say two o'clock.

Mr. BOGY. We all must be aware of the fact that there will be a great deficiency of small change. It is being felt throughout the country now, and this bill ought to be disposed of one way or the other.

Mr. PADDOCK. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he name two o'clock. That will accommodate us all, I think.

Mr. BOGY. I have no objection to making it two o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that the bill (H. R. No. 3398) for the issue of coin, and for other purposes, be made the special order at two o'clock on Monday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

OFFICIAL MAIL MATTER.

Mr. PADDOCK. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 552) to restore the franking privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking up the bill named by the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 24, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m., and was called to order by its Clerk, Hon. GEORGE M. ADAMS.

The CLERK. In the absence of the Speaker of the House and of the Speaker pro tempore, the Clerk, in conformity with the rules and usages of the House, will now ask the House to be in order while the Chaplain proceeds in prayer.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The CLERK. The House is now in session, and unless objection be made it will be held that the first thing in order is the election of a Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. RANDALL. There does not seem to be a quorum present, and I therefore move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I hope not; there will be a quorum here soon.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 58, noes 23.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being 33 in the affirmative, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 30, nays 116, not voting 143; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Banning, Boone, Bradford, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, Cook, Cowan, Douglas, Ellis, Forney, Goode, Robert Hamilton, Kimball, Lamar, Lane, McDill, Milliken, Pierce, Piper, Potter, Reagan, Terry, Thompson, Waldron, Walling, Warren, Wike, Jeremiah N. Williams, and Young—30.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. DAVIS. My colleague, Mr. YEATES, is confined to his house by sickness.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. PHILIPS, is detained at home on account of sickness.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. VAN VORHES, is absent by leave of the House.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Clerk, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That Hon. MILTON SAYLER, a Representative from the State of Ohio, be, and he is hereby, appointed Speaker pro tempore during the present absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the gentleman elected Speaker pro tempore should take the Chair before the House adjourns; before any business is done.

A MEMBER. He is not here.

Mr. FOSTER. The functions of the Clerk cease when the Speaker pro tempore is elected.

Mr. KASSON. I submit that it is in the power of the House to adjourn, and hardly in its power to do anything else in the absence of a Speaker. I hope, therefore, the motion to adjourn will be agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. But we have a Speaker.

The CLERK. It will be held that action on the motion to adjourn is not business, and that it is competent for the House to adjourn whenever it thinks proper. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is therefore overruled.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN that the House adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at twelve o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BUCKNER: Remonstrance of citizens of Saint Charles County, Missouri, against the construction of the Portage Canal across the peninsula of Saint Charles County, Missouri, so as to turn the Missouri River into the Mississippi River about fifteen miles above the present mouth of the Missouri River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SEELYE: Memorial of the New York committee for the prevention of licensed prostitution, signed by Mrs. Abby Hopper Gibbons, president, and other officers and members of said committee, praying that Congress may not enact any law authorizing or permitting the board of health to license prostitution in the District of Columbia, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 26, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last; when, on motion of Mr. MORTON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) appointing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORTON presented the petition of Thomas F. Ryan, of Indianapolis, Indiana, praying to be relieved from responsibility as surety upon the bond of one John A. May in the sum of $5,865.55; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON presented a petition of members of the bar of Washington County, Iowa; a petition of members of the bar of Scott County, Iowa; and two petitions of members of the bar of Louisa County, Iowa, praying for the passage of an act to provide for the holding of terms of the United States circuit and district courts at Davenport, Iowa; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of sailors and seamen of the port of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3187) to amend title 53 of the Revised Statute relating to merchant seamen; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of the governor, members of the executive council, secretary of state, and others of the State of Maine, and the petition of the governor, members of the executive council, secretary of state, and others of the State of New Hampshire, praying that Commander Greenleaf Cilley, of Maine, now on the retired list of the United States Navy, be restored to his appropriate rank on the active list; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FAILURE OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate take from the table the message of the President upon the subject of appropriation bills, in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the message of the President in regard to the failure of appropriations be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the Signal Service, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3740) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. I am also instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery, to report it without recommendation, and ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar without recommendation on the part of the committee.

Mr. SPENCER also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2043) to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall give way to morning business, and then report the District tax bill for the action of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am instructed by the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3670) authorizing the Nebraska City Bridge Company to construct a ponton-railway bridge across the Missouri River at Nebraska City, in Otoe County, Nebraska, to report it without amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this bill. It is a bill of a usual character and entirely unobjectionable. Similar bills have been passed this session in two or three instances for other points, notably that for a bridge over the Mississippi River at La Crosse, I think.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the morning business be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in the nature of an objection. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas in favor of the passage of a certain act for the protection of public highways, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant-General in the case of Benjamin F. Pope, assistant surgeon United States Army, recommending the passage of a bill to determine the status of this officer, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN, from the same committee to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 125) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the authorities of the city of Paterson, New Jersey, four pieces of artillery, to be used in celebrating July 4, 1876, reported adversely thereon, and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 2017) for the relief of Lizzie Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First United States Artillery, reported it with amendments.

Mr. LOGAN. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union, to report it with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. I prefer it not to be placed upon the Calendar, but left in a condition where I may have an opportunity of calling it up, if that will be regular.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be called up if placed upon the Calendar. The rule requires it to go on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought to go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. The Senator can call it from the Calendar as well as from the table.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of Mrs. Susan E. Rhea, widow of Dr. J. Burrows Gardiner, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 457) authorizing the restoration of Charles E. Boggs to the active list, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Robert Erwin, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. CONKLING, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale of or dealing in counterfeit trade-mark goods, reported it with amendments.

DAVIDSON'S REPORT ON IRRIGATION.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment, and asked for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the report of George Davidson, assistant Coast Survey, describing and illustrating methods for irrigating land in India and in Southern Europe, transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, be printed, with 150 extra copies for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 940) for the relief of William S. Lawrenson; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 941) for the relief of Passed Assistant Engineer John W. Gardner; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 942) to define the powers of the commissioners of the District of Columbia in respect to the board of health and the commissioners of police of the police district of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 943) establishing a mail-route in Oregon; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 944) for the relief of Gilderoy M. Hardy, guardian of the minor children of Watson C. Howard, deceased; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT POLICE FORCE.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the police commissioners of the metropolitan police district of the District of Columbia be requested to report to the Senate the names of the men who have been appointed upon the police force of said District since the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, and now upon said police force, with the date of the appointment of each; and also whether in making such appointments the provisions of said act have been complied with, and, if not, for what reason.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SPENCER. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I hope that will not be done. It simply asks for information. There is no need of any reference.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well; I have no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOWE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

Mr. SPENCER. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, acting under what they consider the instructions of the Senate on last Saturday, have, with the aid of the commissioners, prepared a bill which the committee now report back to the Senate without any recommendation on the part of the committee, each member of the committee being uncommitted upon the subject. They have prepared the act of last year so as to continue it in force another year, with such verbal amendments as are necessary to make it effective, and also with one or two small amendments which the commissioners think necessary to perfect the bill. I report the bill back and ask the Senate to take such action upon the subject as it may deem best. It is the bill of last year continued in force another year, with the necessary alterations of dates. If the Senate are willing to take it up at the present time and pass it, I shall be glad. If they are not willing to do so, I give notice that I will call it up to-morrow morning. The Senate can do as it chooses.

Mr. MORTON. It had better be postponed until to-morrow morning.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the bill be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed and go over until to-morrow.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. SPENCER. Then I give notice that to-morrow morning, during the morning hour, I will call up the bill for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with that understanding, if there be no objection.

Mr. WEST. I should like to serve a caveat on the Senator from Alabama and tell him that I shall claim the morning hour to-morrow with a matter that has been deferred three times and given way to other business.

Mr. SPENCER. If that is the case, the Senate had better act upon the tax bill to-day. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the tax bill just reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. Has it been printed?

Mr. SPENCER. It is the law of last year. The Senator can send to the document room and get as many copies as he wants. It is the old law with some verbal amendments necessary to adapt it to this year and continue it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the consideration, provided at one o'clock I can have an opportunity of calling up the Army appropriation bill. I do not object to the bill coming up in the morning hour.

Mr. SPENCER. It will not take long, I am sure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Iowa that the unfinished business will come up at one o'clock.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the Senate will take up this bill. Such was the understanding yesterday. I understand that it is a single section reviving the tax bill of last year.

Mr. SPENCER. No, it is not that. We report the tax bill of last year as a substitute for the bill which was recommitted to the committee. To revive it by a single section would make it anomalous as many changes of dates, &c., are necessary.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is reviving the bill of last year with such changes as to the time when certain things have been done as are necessary. That act having passed at an earlier day than this last year, it becomes necessary to make those changes.

Mr. SPENCER. With a few other amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read.

Mr. SPENCER. The body of the substitute is the law of last year with such changes as are necessary, and I suggest that the Secretary need only report the amendments proposed to the former act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as a substitute what the Secretary holds in his hand.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary understands that the bill which he holds in his hand is but a printed copy of the law of last year, and now there are certain amendments proposed to the act of last year. There is no difficulty in reading the paragraphs of the act to which amendments are now proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will therefore read the amendments as they are reached in order.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no necessity for reading the mere changes of dates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As there are no numbered lines, the Secretary will read the amendments, but cannot define their location. The Senate will have to judge of that by the phraseology. The first amendment of the committee to the present law will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment is in the first section, to strike out "1876" and insert "1877;" so as to read:

For the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

The next amendment is to strike out the words "October, 1875," in the third section, and insert "December, 1876;" so as to read:

That one-half of the taxes levied by this act upon real and personal property shall become due and payable on the 1st day of December, 1876.

The next amendment is in section 3, to strike out "April, 1876," and insert "June, 1877;" so as to read:

And the other one-half of such tax shall become due and payable on the 1st day of June, 1877.

The next amendment is in section 4, to strike out in the second line the words "on or," and in the third line to strike out "October, 1875," and insert "December, 1876;" so as to read:

That if one-half of the tax herein levied upon the real and personal property taxed by this act shall not be paid before the 1st day of December, 1876, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent.

The next amendment is to strike out, lower down in the fourth section, the words "on or" before the word "before," and after the words "1st day of," to strike out "April, 1876," and insert "June, 1877;" so as to read:

And if said installment shall not be paid before the 1st day of June, 1877, &c.

The next amendment is to strike out "April," where it next occurs in the section, and insert "June;" so as to conform with the preceding amendment.

In section 5 it is proposed to strike out "May, 1876," and insert "July, 1877;" so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the collector of taxes in said District to prepare a complete list of all taxes, on real property upon which the same are assessed, in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1877.

It is proposed also in section 5 to strike out "June" and insert "August;" so as to read:

And he shall, within ten days thereafter, publish the same, with a notice of sale, in the regular issue of a daily newspaper published in said District, to be designated by the commissioners of the District or their successors in office as hereinafter provided, once a week for three successive weeks, giving notice that if said taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale, the property will be sold by the said collector at public auction, at the south front of the court-house in the city of Washington, on the second Tuesday of August following, between the hours of ten o'clock a. m. and four o'clock p. m. of said day to the highest bidder or bidders.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask the chairman of the committee if there were not a great many complaints last year in regard to the expense of publishing the notice in the newspapers, and if the committee did not agree in a bill reported the other day that notice should be given in pamphlet form, which would greatly economize that matter?

Mr. SPENCER. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that under the present arrangement the saving would not be much. The entire amount of advertising last year under the commissioners was only $8,250.

Mr. MERRIMON. I remember there was something said about it, and the committee endeavored to obviate the difficulty by requiring that notice should be given in pamphlet form.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee that has this bill in charge if there is provision in it for the redemption of estates that have been sold?

Mr. SPENCER. There is such an amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. That seems to be manifestly required by justice.

Mr. SPENCER. That is one of the amendments of the committee. We shall get to that after a while.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not want to throw any obstacle in the way of the passage of this bill; but I think there has been great complaint about the amount of money which was spent in advertising last year. My own impression is that the bill as amended ought to have been printed before the Senate acted upon it; but it seems there is a necessity for pressing the bill now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a printed copy of the act here which I will loan the Senator.

Mr. MERRIMON. That is not material, perhaps, but I want to economize the expenses of the District.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have a law before us which requires an advertisement in the newspapers, one insertion for three weeks in case of delinquent taxes.

Mr. SPENCER. The entire amount paid last year for advertising was $8,250, and that comprised the delinquents for several years. If it is published in pamphlet form it will probably cost a third as much and nobody will know whether his property is advertised or not unless he goes to the office of the commissioners.

Mr. CONKLING. Having been detained in committee, I ask the Secretary to begin anew in reporting these amendments that we may all know what they are.

Mr. SHERMAN. From what section did the Secretary last read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Section 5.

Mr. CONKLING. Allow me to inquire, has the committee reported at large the whole bill over again, and not merely an extension of the bill with amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have reported to strike out and insert.

Mr. SPENCER. We have reported the tax bill of last year at large, continuing it with changes of dates and other amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee propose to substitute the bill which the Secretary now holds in his hand, being the tax bill of last year with modifications.

Mr. CONKLING. I was not aware of that. I did not mean to interfere with it. I had supposed that an act which covers five and a quarter closely printed octavo pages could be extended without re-enacting it at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands, it is the law of 1875 with sundry amendments which the Secretary is now reporting. The next amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is in section 7, to strike out the words "on or" in the second line and to strike out "1875" and insert "1876" in the third line; so as to read:

That when the installment of one-half of the taxes on personal property so as aforesaid due and payable before the 1st day of October, 1876, shall not be paid, &c.

The next amendment is to strike out the words "on or" in the fifth line of the seventh section, and to strike out "April, 1876," and insert "June, 1877;" so as to read:

Before the 1st day of June, 1877.

The next amendment is in section 8, line 2, after the word "first" to strike out down to and including the word "other" in the tenth line of the section the following words:

Houses for the reformation of offenders, alms-houses, buildings devoted to art or belonging to institutions of purely public charity; church buildings, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings; houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers; free public library buildings and cemeteries; secondly, the lands or grounds appurtenant to any said house or building, so far as reasonably needed and actually used for the convenient enjoyment of any said house or building for its legitimate purpose and no other.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Buildings devoted to art, free public library buildings, and churches, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings; secondly, houses for the reformation of offenders, alms-houses, buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity, houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers, cemeteries dedicated and used solely for burial purposes and without private income or profit.

Mr. SPENCER. I will say in explanation of this amendment that the old law was so framed that under it there are claims for the exemption of whole squares from taxation as church property. Another object was to provide for a certain cemetery here that is owned for speculative purposes, so as to remit a portion of it to taxation. It is owned by a corporation who derive large dividends and certainly ought to pay a tax.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the clause referring to church property read once more.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the chairman, in view of his statement that as the law stands now it embraces whole squares annexed to churches, that the terms employed in the amendment are exactly the terms here:

Church-buildings, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings.

If he wants to curtail that exemption, he employs the precise words to stand in this law which, he says, are so vague that they were found to include what he states.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will read the section through, he will see that it is rectified.

Mr. CONKLING. The law now, if the Senator will pardon me, stands thus:

First, houses for the reformation of offenders, alms-houses, buildings devoted to art or belonging to institutions of purely public charity; church-buildings, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings.

Mr. SHERMAN. Read lower down in the section.

Mr. CONKLING. These are the words as they stand now:

Houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers; free public library buildings and cemeteries.

I am not speaking of cemeteries, but I am speaking of the entire squares connected with the churches, to which the Senator referred.

Mr. SHERMAN. The next clause is omitted.

Mr. CONKLING. Secondly:

The lands or grounds appurtenant to any said house or building, so far as reasonably needed and actually used for the convenient enjoyment of any said house or building for its legitimate purpose and no other.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is left out by the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. If that is the amendment, I submit it should be simply to drop that out, whereas the amendment is to recast all this phraseology, except the very words which are said to be too vague in respect of embracing squares, which are still found here. If the purpose is to omit the three lines which I read last, then I suggest that those three lines should be omitted:

The lands or grounds appurtenant to any said house or building, so far as reasonably needed and actually used for the convenient enjoyment of any said house or building for its legitimate purpose and no other.

Mr. THURMAN. Are those words left out?

Mr. CONKLING. These latter words the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] says are omitted. The former words are carried in; and yet the motion is to strike them all out and replant a part of these words, as I understand, whereas the whole purpose is purely to omit these latter words.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Secretary read the amendment again?

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment

Mr. THURMAN. I think the law of last year is right as it stands. If I understand the amendment as now offered, it only exempts from taxation the ground that is actually covered with buildings. That I do not think is right. I am quite sure there are quite a number of churches in this city about which there may be a few feet of ground on either side, and perhaps a few feet of ground in the rear, or a few feet of ground in the front. Is it proposed that these little strips of land are to be valued and taxed? I do not think that is right.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, the amendment says "actually occupied," not "covered." The few feet on each side will not be subject to taxation.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

First, buildings devoted to art, free public library buildings, and churches, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings. Secondly, houses for the reformation of offenders, alms-houses, buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity, houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers, cemeteries dedicated and used solely for burial purposes and without private income or profit.

Mr. THURMAN. Now, Mr. President, I see that here is quite an important change made if I understand it. That provision in respect to the ground relates to churches alone and the land occupied thereby, and then it goes on with alms-houses and the like after that provision, whereas the law as it now stands reads:

First, houses for the reformation of offenders, alms-houses, buildings devoted to art or belonging to institutions of purely public charity, church buildings, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings; houses to improve the condition of seamen and soldiers.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will allow the Clerk to read the whole section he will find that he is mistaken.

Mr. THURMAN. I will thank the Clerk to read it again.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following and no other, namely: First, buildings devoted to art, free public libraries, and churches, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings. Secondly, houses for the reformation of offenders, alms-houses, buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity; houses to improve the condition of seamen and soldiers; cemeteries dedicated and used solely for burial purposes and without private income or profit; but if any portion of any of said building, house, grounds, or cemeteries so in terms excepted is larger than is reasonably needed and actually used for its legitimate purpose and none other, or is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same or a sum equal in value to such portion shall be taxed against the owners of said building or grounds.

Mr. THURMAN. That is right enough. That is exactly the proper idea if the previous words have the effect to exempt so much of this appurtenant land as ought to be exempted.

Mr. SPENCER. The reason of this amendment was that the commissioners and the attorney of the District thought the first portion of the section was so vague that they were at a loss to construe it, and they wanted the law to be made more specific.

Mr. THURMAN. It ought to be specific; but what I wish to say and all I wish to say about it is that, because there may be a little strip of land by the side of a church, or in the rear of a church, or in the front of a church, or because there may be a little play-ground to a charity-school, that ought not to be taxed.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think that that would be taxed under this section.

Mr. THURMAN. With the interpretation put upon it by the chairman of the committee, I am content. It ought to have that interpretation.

Mr. HOWE. I understand from the chairman of the District Committee that the language employed here is intended to exempt from taxation some more ground than that which is actually covered by the buildings enumerated.

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. But how much more ground?

Mr. SPENCER. A reasonable amount. The object is to prevent abuse. They make claims to the commissioners to have whole squares exempted now for charitable purposes.

Mr. HOWE. Do you mean to exempt so much as the commissioners allow or what some other authority may say is reasonable?

Mr. SPENCER. The tax we are talking about, and no other.

Mr. HOWE. But there ought to be a definite quantity. You mean to exempt from taxation, as you say, something more than that quantity.

Mr. SPENCER. Whatever is reasonable.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator from Ohio says "a play-ground."

Mr. SPENCER. The object of this law is to exempt from taxation what is actually used and needed for the purpose.

Mr. HOWE. I take it, Mr. President, there is no church standing which has more ground annexed to it than in the estimation of those who own the church is actually needed. But suppose the commissioners should think the church could possibly get along with a little less ground than the wardens think is necessary, who in that case is to be the judge?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not suppose that any such controversy will arise. If it should, I suppose the commissioners would have to judge.

Mr. HOWE. But would it not meet the views of the committee to estimate the appraised value of this property?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not see how it can be computed. I want to say, in reference to the committee, that I do not think there is a member of the committee in favor of this bill; but we have reported it under the instructions of the Senate. We believe—at least I do myself—that it proposes a very onerous and very unjust tax, and that it is a bill which will be very unpopular in the community of Washington. I doubt very much whether all its provisions can be carried into effect. Still, under the instructions of the Senate we have reported this bill. We do not hold ourselves responsible for it in any way, shape, or manner.

I should like to state here, that I think the result of carrying out this law will be that next winter we shall be petitioned from all sources for a government of the people here. I think Congress will be flooded with petitions from this people asking to be allowed to elect their own government. I think that will be the result of the bill, and I hope so. I am in favor of popular suffrage.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to accept the following addition to the exemption proposed by the bill. I do not know that it is necessary; but it does not appear that the public buildings and grounds of the United States are exempt from taxation by the bill. I move to add to the last amendment the following:

And all buildings and grounds belonging to the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are excepted now by the first section.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I did not find it.

Mr. SARGENT. It ought not to be. I am opposed to that amendment and in favor of striking out the exemption in the first section.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I withdraw the amendment, if it is in the first section.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator cannot withdraw it until I finish my remarks. I wish to say a word or two in reference to that.

The sundry civil bill, in which there is ordinarily a provision of a million and a quarter as the United States portion for the cost of running this District, has reached the Senate without any provision of that kind, and I do not know whether it is proposed by Congress to make any ordinary appropriation to pay a portion of the expenses of this District. We pass here a bill which taxes one-half of the property of this District, both real and personal, and the other half is to go entirely scot-free. It seems to me this is entirely unjust. If Congress should pass a general law, a permanent statute, providing that there should be a certain valuation placed upon the United States property and that a permanent payment to that extent should be made annually out of the Treasury, there would be some measure of justice toward the people of this District. I do not know what right the Government has to the ownership of all these streets, all these fine buildings here, to use these streets to run its merchandise over, bring here all its works of art and utility, to occupy, in short, one-half of the property of this city, and pay nothing toward the expenses of the District or next to nothing.

It seems to me it is nearly time that there should be some regulation of the business of the United States in connection with this District. Sometimes we treat the District like a spoiled child, and at another time we treat it as a step-mother would, and refuse it all justice of every kind; and this year, it seems to me, is the step-mother year. It would be much better and more just to the Government to ascertain the amount that it ought to pay. The position of affairs in this District is very dissimilar to that of ordinary cities, where the Government may have a single building, or two or three buildings. Here the principal business is carried on by the Government, and everything else is a little retail business depending on the Government. It has the fine buildings, the great improvements; it owns the parks and squares, and claims to own the streets, which it requires the citizens principally to improve, keep clean, and light at their own expense.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggests to me that the Government does not pay a cent for the expense of the education of the children of its own employés. That burden is thrown on the citizens of the District generally. I might make a long list of things for which the Government pays nothing. It is only within a few years that it has paid anything for the fire department, although the fire department has been frequently useful in saving vast amounts of public property, and stands watchful over it day and night. I shall be opposed, therefore, to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, if he insists upon it exempting the Government from assessment and taxation. Perhaps it would be better that there should be a reasonable and decent assessment made from year to year on Government property; but if the Government cannot consent to an assessment of its property made by others, it ought to assess it itself and make regular appropriations for the benefit of the District somewhere in proportion to the amount of business that it does here and the property which it owns.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it is certainly a very novel proposition to introduce in the Senate that the Government is to be taxed upon the property which it owns either here or elsewhere. The Government is the proprietor of a very large amount of land in the State of Kansas, which I should be very glad indeed to have taxed and compelled to bear its share of the burdens of our State; and if there is any reason why the property of the Government should be taxed here, there is the same reason why it should be taxed elsewhere. Navy-yards, ships at sea, fortifications, public lands, everything that the Government owns should be taxed if there is any reason why its property should be taxed here. But as that matter is not pending, I merely rise to say that in my judgment the original provision as it stands in this bill is much better than that reported by way of amendment from the committee this morning. The original bill provides that "church buildings and grounds actually occupied by such buildings" shall be exempt, with the further provision that the lands or grounds appurtenant to any said house or building, so far as reasonably needed and actually used for the convenient enjoyment of any said house or building for its legitimate purpose, and no other, shall also be exempt.

But under this provision, as I am advised, very great wrongs and injustice have been perpetrated upon the property-holders of this District. There is one case in my mind at the present time. There is, as every Senator is aware, a very large tract of land on the north side of F street, between Ninth and Tenth, that is occupied by a partially constructed church building, upon which, I believe, no work has been done for several years. I do not know what denomination owns the church or the ground. The building has been run up, I believe, one story or partially to the height of one story. I am advised that that property, which is worth a great many thousand dollars, has for the last five or six years entirely escaped taxation. There is no church upon it; there is no completed building upon it which is occupied for church purposes; but it is owned by a church organization, and under the provisions of the law that have been inserted in this bill and other statutes that amount of property has entirely escaped its share of the public burdens.

Now, sir, I am in favor of the largest license and the largest liberty of religious worship, and believe that no burden should be imposed on property used for that purpose more than is absolutely necessary; yet it is evident that there is a gross wrong and injustice, that there is no reason why property that belongs merely to a church organization upon which no building has been completed should be entirely exempt from taxation. I therefore hope that the amendment reported from the committee will not be adopted, but that the Senate will agree to the bill as it stands originally on the statute-book.

Mr. SPENCER. The amendment is intended to cover exactly what the Senator from Kansas refers to.

Mr. INGALLS. It does not.

Mr. SPENCER. The commissioners think it does and the attorney of the District thinks so.

Mr. MORTON. The proposition that property of the United States should be taxed seems to me to be very unreasonable. I do not see any advantage or use in the Government assuming the entire control and government of this people without availing itself of that privilege to exempt its own property and tax the people only. But when I look at the large debt which has been created within the last three or four years, I do not feel quite certain that the Government has not of itself paid or undertaken to pay some portions of the expenses of this District.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will simply say to my friend that the Government of the United States has agreed and solemnly stipulated to pay its proportionate share of the expenses of the District, but it has never done it. It is one of those promises that have not been performed. The law passed a few years ago expressly stipulated that the United States should pay its proportionate part of the expenses, but it has never yet provided for it; and I do not know that there is any bill pending proposing to do it. There ought to be a provision in this bill that the United States appropriate from the public Treasury a certain amount, say one-third or one-fourth, or some proportion of the expenses of the government of this District. That is an express stipulation of law, but it has not been done. I think it should be put on this bill, without objection, that the Government of the United States appropriate a certain proportion of the expenses of this city government. I am not prepared to state any fraction; but, if the amount that will be raised by this bill as estimated yesterday is $1,700,000, I think the Government of the United States ought to appropriate about one-third of that sum, and that would make the Government pay about one-fourth of the expenses. I will not offer such an amendment, because I have not examined the question except so far as to know that there is a stipulation of law that ought to be complied with. I think, as this bill levies a tax upon the citizens, it ought to appropriate for the just proportion of the Government.

Mr. CONKLING. Why should it be only one-fourth?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not mention the exact proportion because I have not studied it. Let the District Committee make the proper proportion, and I will vote for it with pleasure.

Mr. HAMILTON. I should like to hear the Senator from Ohio state his grounds for the Government of the United States paying one-third or one-half or any proportion of the expenses of this District.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have just stated to my friend from Texas, first, that we agreed to do it. That ought to be a good ground with my friend.

Mr. HAMILTON. There is force in that; but the Senator from Ohio will remember that the agreement, if it can be called such, was made at a time and under circumstances when nobody could consider it fully or fairly. It was about the time you abolished and broke up the territorial government of the District, in 1874, when everything was in confusion at the close of the session, and nobody had time or opportunity to ascertain what was in that bill. Then for the first time, I think, was a proposition to make the property of the Government in the District taxable ever brought forward. How does it happen that from 1800 down to three or four years ago nobody ever heard of a proposition that the Government of the United States should pay a portion of the expenses of this District? It was first brought forward by the Delegate from the territorial government in the House of Representatives; and it was brought forward at the instance and suggestion of the gentlemen who have figured so largely in the government of this District during the last five or six years, and evidently for their benefit, because their extravagant expenditures had brought their measures under the condemnation of the people of the District very largely. This scheme was suggested with the object of relieving the people of the District, and it did to a considerable extent conciliate them. They were persuaded to be still while the debt of the District was being quietly partitioned between it and the Government of the United States with the consent of Congress. This is the truth, sir, we all know. I undertake to say that there is not one particle of justice in such a proposition. The Government owns no property here that is not an ornament to the city or that is productive. There is not a city in the Union that would not be glad to have such expenditures made by the General Government itself, and exempt the property from taxation. Your table is loaded every winter with propositions to build court-houses, custom-houses, post-offices, and every petition of the kind is accompanied with a promise on the part of the State asking the expenditure to exempt the property from taxation by legislative enactment, the ground as well as the building, before any work is authorized to be done.

There you have expended fifty or sixty, perhaps seventy millions of dollars in buildings, parks, squares, and circles. These latter adorn the front of almost every Senator's house in the city, and Representative's as well; and, forsooth, they are brought forward here as a basis of taxation.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas, that if you tax Government property here you ought to tax it all over the Union, everywhere; military stations, naval stations, arsenals, dock-yards, ships, and houses in every city of the Union. Why not?

I am amazed at this thing. It has been crawling along gradually for the last four or five years until it has obtained a footing, a respectable standing in the Senate and House of Representatives, and is talked about every year now as though it was manifestly proper. I think there is nothing in it that the Senate ought to consider for a minute. And while I am up I want to be informed why a church should be exempt from taxation any more than other property? The Government of the United States in the organization of the Government cut itself loose from churches absolutely. The purpose was to allow the people to exercise and enjoy any religion they pleased at their own expense and their own volition. It is a matter in which the Government has no share, and it ought not to be called upon to in any or to any extent provide. Every church is not public. Take, for example, any of the structures built in any of the large cities, costing $200,000 to $500,000, by the wealthy citizens, elegantly furnished with extravagant pews and fixtures, the sittings sold to the highest bidder, where every man except a pew-holder is excluded from the church; and yet you call it a place of public worship. It is a place of private worship, belongs to private individuals, is managed and controlled by them to the exclusion of all others, and they may not allow me or you, sir, to take a seat there except by courtesy. If one goes to the door perhaps he will be admitted to a seat; perhaps not. It depends upon who he may happen to be.

Now, Mr. President, fairness is a jewel no less than consistency. There are many thousands of people in the city of Washington who have no place to worship in. Those that belong to the Catholic church, and perhaps those who do not, may go into these churches. They are generally open morning and evening—always on Sundays, I believe; but in respectable Protestant churches in this city or other large cities the lower classes cannot go. They may occasionally hear preaching in the open air; otherwise they go without. It is so in every city of the Union now, more so than it was fifty years ago. Then almost every class of the community could hear the Gospel preached every Sunday somewhere. Now there are large classes in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Washington, and other cities of this Union who are absolutely excluded. All the respectable churches are occupied by pew-holders and there are no seats for outsiders. There is nobody to preach to them, nobody to pay their preachers. They are not able to build churches or to pay ministers. I think all church edifices ought to pay a tax, all property ought to pay a uniform tax without exception. This is the constitutional provision in nearly every State of the Union, and is the spirit of the Constitution of the United States. Taxation ought to equal, absolutely equal; there should be no discrimination in favor of anybody or anything. It falls then equally on all, and nobody can object to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend has answered his own question very well, much better than I did. He asked me why the United States ought to be taxed in this District. I answered first that it had agreed to do it. Now he has answered it better by showing that the United States ought to pay a tax. The United States owns in this District real and personal property, horses, wagons, lands, houses, buildings, to the amount, it is said, of $30,000,000 or $40,000,000, or probably more.

Mr. CONKLING. Sixty-six million dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. Sixty-six million dollars. Is not the Government of the United States wealthy enough to pay taxes on that property? Not only that, but the United States invites people here, employs them, pays them small salaries in some cases and sometimes large. Their children are educated here at the expense of the property-holders of this city, other than the United States. The streets are lighted at the expense of the private citizens, the United States refusing to pay its taxes. The churches do not pay taxes, in deference to a sentiment in favor of religion, that is usually, perhaps, not based on very good reason. I cannot answer the argument of the Senator that every church ought to pay a tax, especially where the churches are, as often in modern times, close corporations. The people who do not belong to the church have to stand on the outside or get a seat as they can. I cannot answer that argument. How, then, can the Senator answer the argument which would place the United States on the tax-roll for the amount of property it owns here? There is the point.

Mr. HAMILTON. If the Senator will allow me, I go on the ground that it never has been done before. United States property has never been taxed anywhere that I know of. It is specially exempt almost everywhere. Why not here as well?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will answer that. In the first place, the Senator is somewhat mistaken. The United States has recognized at different periods of our Government its obligation to pay taxes in this city, and to some extent it has provided for that obligation by paying certain taxes. For instance, the United States commenced paying its share of the police tax, on the ground that the police were actually employed in the protection of all the property in the city. It also pays its proportion of the tax necessary for the fire department. I am not prepared with the figures—the matter is not within my line—but I have seen a table showing that the United States from the foundation of the Government has paid out at different periods different sums of money in this District on the principle that it ought to pay a share of the expenses. The trouble is that we have never adopted a rule how the Government's amount of tax should be apportioned, nor have we made a provision for the school tax or any tax other than the mere property tax.

Mr. HAMILTON. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that my impression has been that the Government in making the provisions of which he speaks, about the police force and fire department, has recognized the necessity of assisting in those things, and has done it as a matter of grace, if you please, because it has buildings to take care of; it needs an efficient fire department to take care of the public buildings as well as the private buildings. An efficient police force is also needed for the same reason. I think it is proper for the Government to do that, and the Government has been doing that. But that is a very different thing from recognizing the right to tax all the property of the Government of the United States in this city.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, as I understand the honorable Senator, we ought to pay our share of the expenses of the fire department and of the police, but the United States ought not to pay for the education of the children of the men and women that it employs in the Departments. We cannot stop short. Equality is equity, and the United States ought to be treated like any other individual, the humblest or the lowest.

Let me may say another thing. The Senator from Kansas made an argument here to-day that I have heard two or three times, and it ought to be answered. He says that the United States owns property in the Territories and Western States that is exempt from taxation. How? On an express stipulation at the time those States were admitted that in consideration of 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands the public lands should be exempt from taxation. In the clause giving the States 5 per cent. of the proceeds there is an express stipulation for exemption from taxation. We give to them the sixteenth section and the thirty-sixth section, the swamp lands; and indeed about all the lands that are worth anything are given to the States, and every statute admitting a State into the Union recognized the equity of the State taxing the Government lands; and, as a matter of bargain, so as to prevent any controversy as to the relative value of the public and private lands, there was a stipulation between the incoming State and the General Government that the 5 per cent. of the gross proceeds of the public lands should be given to the State in lieu of taxation of the public lands. Besides that, the school lands are given, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in every township. So that, as to every State in the Union when it is admitted, we do recognize the obligation of the United States to pay its portion of taxes, and we stipulate the amount of the taxation.

Mr. OGLESBY. I wish to remind the Senator of another condition in the ordinance of admission. As to those States in which the Senators from Indiana and the Senators from Illinois live, the reason the Government agreed to pay to those States 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of sales of the public lands was upon the express condition that those States should relieve from taxation for five years all land entered by private citizens.

Mr. HAMILTON. After it was entered, not before.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was an additional stipulation. I will say in regard to the States named that there is still a controversy about whether money is not due to them. I do not want to go into that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the pending and all prior orders be laid aside for the continuation of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate. The Senator from Alabama moves to postpone it and all prior orders for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the bill pending during the morning hour.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is very patent, I think, to every Senator here that the bill which my friend from Alabama wishes to have considered cannot be passed to-day, or perhaps to-morrow. I hope that his motion will not prevail; it seems to me that it is proper that it should not, under the circumstances.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will not prevail for another reason. The Army appropriation bill was to come up to-day at one o'clock by general assent, I believe, and I think we ought to take it up and dispose of it now.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope this motion of mine will prevail. I think one hour more will dispose of the District tax bill. I hope the Senate will not persist in this general debate.

Mr. HAMILTON. I hope the Senator from Alabama will let his bill go over and be printed.

Mr. SPENCER. There are plenty of printed copies of the bill, with the exception of the verbal amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLISON. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPENCER. I think one hour will be sufficient to dispose of the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. Are we not ready to go on with appropriation bills? I ask the Senator from Iowa if he is not ready to proceed with the Army bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to proceed with the Army appropriation bill, and it is now proposed to lay aside the Army bill for the purpose of considering a bill which was reported this morning and is not yet printed.

Mr. SPENCER. The end of the fiscal year is the 30th of June, and then there is no tax bill for the District of Columbia. I am satisfied that if the Senate would devote one hour to the consideration of this bill it could dispose of it. I hope the Senate will approve of my motion to proceed with this bill now. We devoted all Saturday to it, and I am satisfied that one hour now will finish it.

Mr. SARGENT. I think it is perfectly obvious that the Senate will not in the last week of the fiscal year lay aside an appropriation bill even to take up a tax bill for the District of Columbia. I suggest to my friend that the best thing he can do is to let the bill be printed, and bring it up to-morrow in the morning hour, and he can get it passed then. Of course the Senate will not lay aside the great appropriation bills for any local matter. I think the appropriation bill had better come up now, and let this bill be printed and go over till to-morrow.

Mr. SPENCER. I will consent to that if I can have a unanimous agreement that it shall come up to-morrow in the morning hour.

Mr. WEST. That cannot be made.

Mr. SARGENT. We will take it up anyhow by a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair reminds the Senate that the special order for two o'clock to-day is the bill (H. R. No. 3398) for the issue of coin, and for other purposes. The Senator from Alabama moves to postpone the unfinished business and all prior orders for the purpose of considering the District tax bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us have a division. I will not insist on calling for the yeas and nays at present.

The question being put, the ayes were 4, which being less than a majority of a quorum, the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the tax bill be printed as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. CONKLING submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. STEVENSON, it was Ordered, That leave be given to withdraw from the Committee on Claims in the Senate the petition and papers of A. G. and B. P. Lee.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 552) to restore the franking privilege.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to let that bill be laid aside until the Army appropriation bill is taken up and acted on.

Mr. PADDOCK. It seems to be important that I should yield to the Senator, and I do so.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up House bill No. 3717.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I will make a brief explanation in reference to this bill. The bill was received in the Senate on the 21st day of June, and was printed on the following day. The first eight sections of the bill provide for a re-organization of the Army. The Committee on Appropriations, in pursuance of a rule adopted by them, have not considered that subject, and they would not have had the necessary time to consider it, even if it had been proper for them to do so. Therefore in reporting this bill we have recommended as the first amendment the striking out of the first eight sections, which comprise propositions for the re-organization of the Army.

The original House bill appropriates in all $24,183,259.06, to which the Senate Committee on Appropriations have added $3,378,102.34, so that the total of the bill as now recommended by the Committee on Appropriations is $27,561,361.40, or $1,037,468.60 less than the amount appropriates for the support of the Army for the present fiscal year. The House in this bill reduced the Army 3,000 men, and also reduced the Army ten regiments, and reduced the pay of the Army. Those matters the Committee on Appropriations have not gone into at all, and they have added the necessary appropriations on the basis of existing laws.

I ask that the amendments may be reported in the usual way, according to custom.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment will be reported.

Mr. ALLISON. Unless some gentleman desires to debate the bill, I ask that the five-minute rule be applied to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to applying the five-minute rule to this bill. The Chair hears none. The Senate so orders. The first amendment will be read.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was read, being to strike out the following sections:

That the officers of the Army shall be entitled to the pay herein stated after their respective designations:

The General, $12,000 a year.
The Lieutenant-General, $9,000 a year.

SEC. 5. That all chaplains hereafter appointed shall be appointed for a term of four years only, subject to re-appointment by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 6. That the number of cavalry regiments are hereby fixed at eight, and the infantry and artillery at twenty, and the cavalry regiments shall be recruited to one hundred men in each company, and kept at that number; and a sufficient force of cavalry shall be employed in the defense of the Mexican and Indian frontier of Texas. And the Secretary of War, as soon as the requirements of the service will permit, holding in view the least expense on account of transportation, shall cause the reduction to be made by the merging of the enlisted men into other organizations, either of their own or other regiments, by the consolidation into troops, companies, or otherwise, and the assignment of the commissioned officers to duty with the consolidated troops or companies, or with other regiments of their respective arms: Provided, That the officers of the discontinued regiments may be assigned to other regiments of their respective arms, according to their dates of commission, as vacancies may occur, and any officer, on his own application, may be honorably discharged with one year's pay; and sections 1104 and 1108 of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed, and hereafter there shall be no distinction in the service on account of color.

And there shall not be any new enlistments in the Army until the number of enlisted men shall have been reduced to twenty-two thousand, exclusive of Indian scouts and the enlisted force authorized for the office of the Adjutant-General by the act approved March 3, 1875, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876.

SEC. 7. That the President is hereby authorized and directed to assemble, from time to time as occasion may require, a board of not less than three nor more than five officers, such board being hereby invested with the powers of a court of inquiry and court-martial, whose duty it shall be to examine the propriety of conduct, capacity, qualifications, and efficiency of any commissioned officer of the Army on the active list, and into the conduct of retired officers who may be reported to the board by order of the President or Secretary of War; and upon such report, if adverse to such officer, after a revision of the proceedings like to that of a court of inquiry or a court-martial, and approved by the President of the United States the commission of such officer shall be vacated: Provided always, That no officer shall be eligible as a member of said board whose rank or promotion would in any way be affected by its proceedings; and two members at least, if practicable, shall be of higher rank than the officer to be examined; and the members of said board and the recorder shall be sworn to an honest and impartial discharge of their duties.

SEC. 8. That every military post may have one trader, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the council of administration, approved by the commanding officer, who shall be subject in all respects to the rules and regulations for the government of the Army.

Mr. STEVENSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word before this vote is taken. The Senate will bear in mind that the first eight sections of this bill provide for the re-organization of the Army as applied to its number, its pay, its staff corps, and all its relations, and this bill was presented to the Committee on Appropriations only on Thursday last. We have not considered this subject at all. The subject is being considered by the Military Committee in the Senate, and the bill proposed in these sections is a very different bill from the Army reduction bill as it passed the House and is now before the Committee on Military Affairs. It seems to me, therefore, that now, without consideration, it would not be fair for this Senate to undertake a re-organization of the Army.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask if the Army bill that passed the House is now before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. ALLISON. The Army bill as it passed the House is now before the Committee on Military Affairs, and it is a very different bill, I will say to the Senator, from the bill found in this appropriation act.

Mr. BOGY. How long has it been before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. ALLISON. I think about two weeks.

Mr. SPENCER. About three weeks.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it was presented here some time in May.

Mr. BOGY. I think it is six weeks since it came here.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if the Army bill he speaks of being before the Military Committee embraces these first eight sections which he moves to strike out of this appropriation bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that I have not examined with care the Army bill which is before the Military Committee, but I understand from a casual examination of it that this bill proposes a reduction of the Army by ten regiments of infantry and artillery, while the Army bill only proposes a reduction of five; and I understand from conversation with gentlemen of the Military Committee that this bill is a very different one in many respects from the bill which passed the House of Representatives after deliberation and consideration.

Mr. EATON. I think this matter should lie on the table until that bill which has been so long before the Military Committee can be brought to our notice so that we may act understandingly on the subject. For one I am not disposed to strike out the entire action of the House here unless some good reason is given for such a course.

Mr. LOGAN. I was not in when the question was raised about the bill that is slumbering before the Military Committee. I can state to the Senator from Connecticut and for the information of the Senate that if any committee in this Senate or in the other branch of Congress can regulate the Army in all its appointments, pay, and everything else, on an appropriation bill, they would be undertaking a task that I do not desire to engage in, so far as I am concerned.

There is a bill before the Military Committee reducing the Army, also one reducing the pay of the Army, and other bills of very great importance. I do not remember how long they have been there, probably a couple of weeks or even more, but that is immaterial. I have examined those bills very carefully, and I submitted a proposition to the committee a week ago, and we determined that at this point of time of the session it was inexpedient to bring them before the Senate, and therefore we agreed to postpone action by the committee on those bills until December or the next session of Congress. That was the action of our committee for the reason that the question involved requires much consideration. I have once or twice before, since I have had the honor of being in Congress, been connected with a reduction of the Army; and I know that it requires a great deal of time and a great deal of consideration if you wish to make the re-arrangement by a law that will leave the machinery as perfect as it is when you touch it. That was our reason for the course we have taken.

Now, I am in favor of the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations striking out these sections. I have not committed myself, nor do I desire to commit myself, in reference to what action I may take when these measures are properly before the Senate; but at this time there seems to be a general desire exhibited to strike at everything. I think myself it is a very bad time to undertake to cut down the Army either in its salary or in its numbers of officers or men. Looking at the manner in which this bill strikes the Army, I must say that it certainly has been done without any due consideration. The House Military Committee considered a bill and reported it, and it was passed by the House. This appropriation bill, irrespective of the consideration of the Military Committee, strikes right and left at regiment and officer and corps and post and everything else, without any equalization whatever.

I say to the Senate that, in my judgment, the adoption of these eight sections of this bill would be only an attempt to do something, having but one object in view, and that is to make the country believe that you have reduced expenses, when the only effect of it would be disorganization of the Army. Therefore I am in favor of the motion of the Committee on Appropriations to strike them out and leave the Army as it is. When we do undertake to act in reference to it, let it be done by a committee considering a bill that will regulate the staff corps, the line of the Army, and everything connected with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Under the rule the Senator's time has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, sir, I am glad of it.

Mr. EATON. I rose to ask a question of my honorable friend from Iowa, which has been partially answered by himself and more generally answered by the honorable Senator from Illinois. The Senate learns now from the Military Committee that that committee have determined not to consider any bill that has been brought before that committee——

Mr. LOGAN. I say to the Senator that I did not make that statement.

Mr. EATON. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; I said this: that two bills had passed the House reported by the Military Committee there, one regulating the pay of the Army, and the other cutting down the Army; that those bills had been sent to the Senate, and our committee had agreed to postpone them, not believing they had time to consider those two important measures at this session. I did not say we would not consider anything in connection with the Army, but I spoke of those two bills.

Mr. EATON. Well, Mr. President, those are about all that I had heard of as being before the Military Committee. It appears there are two bills there.

Mr. LOGAN. There are a great many things connected with the Army before the Military Committee, I will say to the Senator, that we have considered and will consider.

Mr. EATON. Well, let me ask the honorable Senator from Illinois if there is any bill that he proposes to report to the Senate cutting down the Army at all?

Mr. LOGAN. Cutting down the Army in what particular?

Mr. EATON. In numbers.

Mr. LOGAN. I want the Senator to be definite. Does he mean in number of soldiers, in number of officers, or in reference to the staff corps or the line of the Army?

Mr. EATON. We will take the number of soldiers first.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know of any bill that we propose to report cutting down the number of soldiers.

Mr. EATON. The number of officers, second?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know of any bill that we propose to do that with.

Mr. EATON. The amount of salary, third?

Mr. LOGAN. We propose to examine these questions in reference to the salary of the officers of the Army, the pay of the soldiers, the reduction of the Army, all at the same time; but we do not consider that there will be time to do it at this session of Congress. Now I will say to the Senator that in cutting down the Army it is a very simple proposition to just strike at it as a careless surgeon would use the knife, without attempting to cut out the cancer or the sore, to cut the body anywhere he might strike. That would be a simple proposition; but, if you wish to reduce the Army so as to leave the Army efficient, you want to do it in a proper way. Now I say that, in my judgment, the staff corps of the Army is much too large for the Army itself; but you do not propose to touch the staff corps by this bill. Why, sir, by your bill you strike merely at the line of the Army; you cut off ten regiments at one fell swoop. You cut off by this bill ten regiments of soldiers and officers too, but you leave four hundred staff officers standing as they do to-day, salary and all. Is that any way to reduce an army? Does any man who understands army matters desire to reduce an army in that way? The staff corps of the Army is the portion of the Army that receives the high salaries. When you regulate the Army, you should regulate its staff corps, the line of the Army, and everything connected with the Army, so as to equalize it, not have a heavy end and a light end; but this bill just cuts salaries anywhere it may strike, for the purpose of inducing the people to believe there is economy in it. There is no economy in it, but there is disorganization of the Army in it; and that is all it means. I do not wish to say anything about the men who prepared it; but, if I had prepared it, it would certainly have given evidence of very little knowledge of how to reduce an army.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

Mr. EATON. I hope my friend will give way one moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired, having been taken by the Senator from Illinois with his consent.

Mr. EATON. It was consumed by my friend from Illinois, and not by me.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move that the time of the Senator from Connecticut be extended, as it was taken up by an answer to his inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no option except to enforce the rule.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the Chair will recognize the Senator from Connecticut, and he will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. EATON. I do not wish to take up five minutes' time. I only wish to say that I think I was entirely correct when I remarked that I understood the Senator from Illinois to say that the committee of which he is the head would not report any bill tending to reduce the expenditure of the Army.

Mr. LOGAN rose.

Mr. EATON. I cannot give up my time. You may take your own time by and by.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not asked the Senator to give me his time. I have not said a word. I only got up because I preferred to stand rather than to sit.

Mr. EATON. I do not understand the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator said he would not give me his time. I have not asked him to do so.

Mr. EATON. The Senator twice rose and interrupted me, and I supposed he was about to do so again. I beg his pardon; I will wait for him next time.

Now I propose, not to cut and slash at the body of the Army here and there like an unskillful surgeon, but I propose that the country shall know that, if the Military Committee have in their hands reduction bills which they will not report, this is the only bill before the Senate whereby the expenses of the Government in this particular can be reduced. If any other was to be brought here, it would be a good reason why this bill should lie on the table and another one be considered; but if none other is to be brought here, then I propose that we shall take this bill as we find it.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations has reported a proposition to strike out eight sections of the House bill. Among these is section 6, a part of which provides—

> That the number of cavalry regiments are hereby fixed at eight, and the infantry and artillery at twenty; and the cavalry regiments shall be recruited to one hundred men in each company, and kept at that number; and a sufficient force of cavalry shall be employed in the defense of the Mexican and Indian frontier of Texas.

I feel a very deep interest in the success of that section which is proposed to be stricken out. During last winter my colleague and myself and a number of the Representatives in the other House made a formal call on the President of the United States with the view of securing protection to the Rio Grande frontier, calling his attention to his message in that regard. We were informed by him that he had not sufficient force to protect that frontier. He conceded that we had a right to make the demand, but he said that the cavalry were necessary in the Black Hills country, and that he had none to spare us for the Rio Grande frontier. Upon consultation with him, the idea which he presented was that the most feasible plan would be to increase the cavalry regiments by filling up the companies to one hundred men. If that were done, then he would be enabled to furnish us a sufficient force to protect the Rio Grande frontier. I say that the people of Texas have a right to demand protection of our frontier; and when the force of the Army is insufficient for that purpose, common economy, common justice demands that the force should be increased to a sufficiency to do what the Constitution requires, "provide for the common defense;" and I ask that this section which does provide for the common defense shall not be stricken out as is proposed here.

A short time ago I again went, not with my colleague on that occasion but by myself, to see the General of the Army in respect to an increase of force on the Rio Grande. I preferred—and that was the sentiment of my State—that the Fourth Cavalry should be sent to the Rio Grande, if we could get it, because we knew by experience that that was a most excellent regiment; it had been there; and General Mackenzie was a first-class officer, and we wanted him down there. I was informed by the General of the Army that it could not be spared, because its presence was necessary at Fort Sill. And so it is that we on the frontier are constantly losing our cattle, our stock, and our women and children and men are murdered because the United States Government fails to furnish that protection which under the Constitution we have a right to demand. This bill which comes from the House does make provision for the very case of the Rio Grande frontier; and I for one shall certainly oppose the striking of that out; and I will say to the Senator from Iowa that, if it be in order, I shall move to except out of this general striking out of the eight sections the sixth section, so as to present that as a substantive proposition for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. May I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this section reduces the number of cavalry regiments two, and if the Army is not large enough now to protect the frontier of Texas, how can it be protected by a reduction of the number of cavalry regiments? The provision which requires the protection of the Texas border, if it cannot be secured in any other way, I think is a perfectly proper one; but accompanying that provision is one reducing the cavalry regiments two.

Mr. MAXEY. The section which I read authorizes the increase of the cavalry regiments to one hundred men per company, and it requires that a sufficient force of cavalry be employed in the defense of the Mexican and Indian frontier of Texas. Now, sir, if you increase the cavalry companies to one hundred men and then do what this section requires to be done, keep a sufficient force of cavalry on that frontier and on the Indian frontier for the protection of those people, then the object which I have in view is subserved. But, sir, I should place my State in a very singular position to come before the Senate of the United States and ask for the protection of my people and strip the Government of the power to protect them by cutting down the Army. I do not do such a foolish thing as that would be. The Army ought not to be cut down, in my judgment, more especially the cavalry force, because that is most essential in time of peace, where the main use of the Army is for the protection of the frontier against Indians and for the protection of the great Rio Grande frontier, which I beg to state to the Senate is as much a part of the frontier of the United States as any other frontier we have. It is as much the duty of this Government to protect my people as it is to protect any other people in this Union. I say that in time of peace the arm which is more essential for the protection of the frontiersmen is the cavalry arm, and it ought not to be cut down; but, so far as the sixth section is concerned, it was put in after mature deliberation and consideration for the very purpose of protecting the Rio Grande frontier and the Indian frontier of Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, if the region of country that is so ably represented by my friend who has just taken his seat is not properly protected by the discretion and the voluntary action of the Secretary of War and the subordinates of the Army, certainly on a proper representation of the case, or on the adoption of a provision in this bill relating specially to that case, that protection will be afforded.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. WEST. Yes, if you do not take much of my time.

Mr. MAXEY. I certainly will not do that. I want to state to the Senator from Louisiana that I pass no blame whatever on the President, or on the Secretary of War, or the General of the Army. They cannot work without means to work with. I want to give them the means of working with.

Mr. WEST. So far as the Senator is concerned and his section of the country, therefore, if he has two companies of fifty men, they will answer the same purpose as one company of one hundred men; but here is the baldest sham that ever in my opinion was submitted to a legislative body, a sham pretending to reduce the Army of the United States, when it does not do it in the least particular or degree. It is a proposition to reduce the number of regiments from forty-two to thirty, to cut them down twelve; but it transfers every officer and every man from those regiments to other regiments. What kind of a reduction is that? It is a reduction in name only, that will have the effect, as the Senator from Illinois has said, of entirely disorganizing your Army and inflicting on the Treasury of the United States by the necessary transfers throughout the regiments and organizations an unusual and unwarranted expenditure. Whenever a proposition comes here looking to a legitimate and warranted reduction of the Army, I am sure this side of the Chamber will go hand in hand with the other side in reducing the expenditures; but whenever you come here with shams and bald propositions like this, that have no merit in them whatever, that are actually absurd, you must not expect that they will meet with favor. No Senator can take these sections and show that one dollar will be saved to the Treasury of the United States, and I can prove, and he will be obliged to admit, that on the contrary they will entail an increased expenditure by the transfer.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator from Louisiana that I have said nothing whatever in regard to the reduction of the Army.

Mr. WEST. I agree the Senator is against it.

Mr. MAXEY. I only spoke of that which is of immediate and vital importance to the people I represent; and I stated as clearly as words could that I never asked the Government to do a thing without furnishing the means to do that thing. I do not ask a reduction of the Army.

Mr. WEST. I did not suppose the Senator did; he said he was opposed to it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has no time remaining on this amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to amend by inserting in the sixth section "ten" instead of "eight" as the number of cavalry regiments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, sir, I desire in a very few words to answer my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON.] He says he wants the country to know that the Military Committee are holding back bills and do not intend to report any which would be calculated to reduce the expenses of the Government. Now I say to the Senator from Connecticut that that is not generally or usually the best way of arguing a question, to say that he notifies the country that a certain Senator is doing so and so. The best way to understand matters is to convince the country that you are right, not that somebody else is wrong.

Now I say to the Senator, as I said a while ago, that I have not given an opinion as to whether I would be in favor of a reduction of the Army or not; for the question is not presented except on an appropriation bill.

I can satisfy the Senator from Texas in a moment that his argument in reference to this bill is an argument based upon a mistake. This sixth section reduces the cavalry regiments from ten to eight. He says it increases the companies to one hundred men; that is, it authorizes an enlistment up to one hundred. If you will turn right over to the latter clause of section 6 he will find this language:

> And there shall not be any new enlistments in the Army until the number of enlisted men shall have been reduced to 22,000.

It provides for a reduction, first, of two regiments of cavalry, and then follows it up by saying "there shall not be any new enlistments until the number of enlisted men shall have been reduced to 22,000, exclusive of Indian scouts." At the last session of Congress the Army was reduced to 25,000 men by an amendment placed on an appropriation bill similar to this. The House insisted on an amendment on the appropriation bill, that no enlistments should be resorted to until the Army was reduced to 25,000. Now at this session of Congress it is proposed to amend by saying that no new enlistment shall be resorted to until the Army is reduced to 22,000. The sixth section reduces your cavalry regiments to eight, declares that the companies shall be increased to the number of one hundred men in each company, and the same sections say no enlistments shall be incurred for the benefit of the Army. I ask the Senator from Texas on that kind of a bill what benefit is he going to get in Texas? The bill reduces his cavalry and his cavalry cannot be recruited up under the very provision that he himself claims would be a benefit to the frontier people.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that I will offer an amendment in another place to carry out the object in view, and will not vote to retain these sections.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator from Texas that, if he will let the regiments of cavalry remain as they are at ten and then offer his amendment that they shall include one hundred men in each company, there will be some reason for his argument.

Mr. MAXEY. That is precisely what I propose to do.

Mr. LOGAN. But with this section his argument and the section cut the throat of each other. He said he was in favor of this section; but his argument was against the section. Now I am opposed to the whole of it, so far as I am concerned. I am opposed to it because, as I said before, it is cutting and slashing at the Army without any regularity whatever, and no result is produced whatever except this, that you destroy ten regiments of the Army and you withhold the mustering out of the officers. Why do you do that? You reduce the regiments ten, but how? By numbers; that is all. You reduce the number of regiments, but you reserve the officers in the Army and put them in other places. Is that the way to reduce an army? Is that what you mean by a reduction of the Army? This proposition is a humbug before the country; it means nothing in the world except deception. There is no honesty in it. It proposes a reduction and does not reduce; but it only transfers from one regiment to another. There is no meaning in it; there is no justice it it; there is no reduction of expense in it. It is a mere sham and a subterfuge to claim before the country that you have reduced expenses when you have not done it. When a Senator says to me that he wants it to be understood before the country that I am holding back bills for a reduction of the Army, I tell him that he had better read the bill that he himself is advocating, which is a sham and a subterfuge and intended for nothing else, in my judgment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Illinois shows more heat than is necessary.

Mr. LOGAN. Not more than the day requires. [Laughter.]

Mr. EATON. If he would keep a little cooler he would not perspire so freely. [Laughter.] I have not said that the honorable Senator from Illinois is withholding bills. I said that the honorable Senator himself has stated here that the Military Committee would not report certain bills, that they would not have time to do it, that they would postpone the consideration of those bills until next December. That is what I have said; and therefore whether this bill be faulty or not, whether it does reduce the expenses of the Army or whether it does not, it is the only bill that we have before us.

The honorable Senator from Illinois says it is a sham, a fraud, a deception, that it does not reduce the expenditures. Now the honorable Senator cannot mean anything of that sort. It does reduce the rank and file of the Army; it does reduce the expenditures in salaries. Whether we have a right to do it upon an appropriation bill is another matter; but unless I am incorrectly informed—if I am I wish any Senator to correct me—the provision in section 1, "The General $12,000 a year," reduces the salary; and so of the items, "The Lieutenant-General, $9,000 a year;" "a major-general, $7,000 a year," and so on. Therefore, if this bill passes, there is a very large reduction in expenditures.

Mr. LOGAN. I will ask the Senator, when he says this is a large reduction, how many major-generals there are to be reduced?

Mr. EATON. No matter how many there are. There are a great many officers.

Mr. LOGAN. There are four major-generals, and it reduces their pay $500. That is all.

Mr. EATON. Very well. There are brigadier-generals, there are colonels, lieutenant-colonels, majors, captains, adjutants, quartermasters, lieutenants, and the pay of all is reduced, and in the aggregate it is impossible for me here to say how much, but I say the reduction would be large. I have not said, nor am I about to say, that it is entirely proper that it should be done in this way, but I do say that the reduction would be quite large if this bill should pass.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that in speaking of it being a sham, which I certainly maintain that it is, these reductions that he speaks of are the deception there is in the bill, because they pretend to reduce expenses, when in fact they merge the Army one regiment into another, and make no reduction except a little reduction on the salaries. I say now to the Senator, and I believe he will agree with me, that any Senator or Representative who would desire to reduce the salary of a lieutenant in the Army wants to put that lieutenant out on grass. The idea of the salary of a lieutenant in the Army being reduced when he gets but $1,800 a year I think is simply absurd. His pay only equals that of one of the clerks in the Treasury Department, and you call it economy to reduce the expenditures by cutting down that pay. I would not stay in the Army five minutes if it applied to me, and I do not believe any one will if you reduce the salary so that he cannot pay his grub bills. That is what you mean and nothing else, when you talk about the reduction of the salary of a lieutenant.

Mr. EATON. My friend from Illinois insists on having a man of straw and knocking him down. The question that I was discussing with the Senator from Illinois was whether it was true that this bill did a certain thing or not—that is, reduce the expenditures. Whether it is proper or improper, is another thing.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to suggest to the Senator—I do not want to take his time—that the board or commission that is to be organized under this bill, and the different transfers and the transportation necessary in transferring one regiment to another and merging one in another, will cost five times the amount of the reduction of salaries in the bill. That is what I mean.

Mr. EATON. How many men are reduced.

Mr. LOGAN. It does not reduce a cent, and will cost the Government five times the reduction to carry it out; and any one who knows anything about these changes knows it.

Mr. EATON. I do not know anything about it, of course; and it is perhaps not courteous or necessary for the Senator from Illinois, who has been in the military service of the country, at once to assert that if anybody knows anything about a matter of this sort, then he will know that this line of argument is correct and that that line of argument is incorrect. I suppose that by this bill—whether it be right or wrong, is another thing; whether it should be done on an appropriation bill or not is quite another question—there is a great reduction of expenditures. I am told that thousands of men are taken from the Army; that the line of the Army, is reduced by this bill. Gentlemen say so here.

Mr. WEST. Well, read the bill.

Mr. EATON. They have read the bill. People disagree. My own impression is that if we have no other bill before us, if the Military Committee will present no other bill to us, then if it be necessary for us to reduce the expenditures of the Army, let us do it here on the only bill that we have before us.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator who speaks about the refusal of the Military Committee, that if the Senate by any vote or resolution will say that they are ready to act upon a bill reducing the Army, that they desire the reduction made at this session of Congress, the committee will report the bill at once. There is no trouble about that. If the Senate indicate that they desire to cut the Army down, all they have to do is to say so to the Military Committee, and the bill will be reported; but I do not want to see a cutting down like that in this bill, if we are going to do it at all.

I merely rose to ask the Senator a question. He tells us that persons say that here is a reduction of the number of persons in the Army. I wish some Senator would show me whereby in this bill the Army is reduced, except a small portion cutting down two regiments. I should be glad to be shown where it is. It is only that you prohibit recruiting until the Army reduces itself; not that you reduce it by this bill, but until it allows itself to linger along and die out down to the number of 22,000 troops. That is the meaning of it.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, it seems to me that we have got into this trouble for this simple reason: The House of Representatives have certain views of public policy. Whether those views be correct or not, they entertain them; I believe they are not altogether sor-rect; but the House, having those views, have passed upon this subject, and I will say also upon other subjects, certain bills a good while ago. Those bills came to the Senate, but no action has taken place upon those bills. The bill for the transfer of the Indian Bureau came to the Senate perhaps two months ago. It was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I am a member myself. That bill has remained there, and has slept soundly from that day until the other day it was reported by the chairman of that committee without any action having taken place by the committee on that bill, except the fact that it was reported back to the Senate for the disposition of the Senate in such way as the Senate might deem proper. The House had spoken in favor of the transfer by a good, well-guarded, well-protected bill, and that bill was referred to our Committee on Indian Affairs, and there it remained. So with regard to the bill for the reduction of the Army and the bill to reduce the pay of the Army. Whether their views be right or wrong, the House of Representatives have some rights; and they have expressed their views in bills well-guarded and well-protected, in my estimation. Those bills were referred to the proper committee here. I do not want to find fault with the committee, but I speak of a fact which cannot be contradicted when I say they were referred to the committee some three or more weeks ago, perhaps six weeks ago, and there those bills have remained. What is the House to do? What would the Commons of England do in a case of that kind? Sir, they have the right of appropriation. In that House are initiated all the appropriation bills. They speak in a voice to the Senate, saying "we have passed certain bills; there has been no action on them by you; and now we will pass the same bills as parts of an appropriation bill." It may not be proper; it may not be very correct legislation, although it has been done often before, and it does not meet exactly my approbation, but it is a necessity forced on the House. The Senate has a right to do what it may think proper with regard to all these questions. It has a right not to reduce the Army; it has a right not to reduce the pay of officers of the Army; it has a right not to vote for the transfer of the Indian Bureau; so has the House the same right to vote as it pleases on these subjects. Having passed those bills and sent them here, and no action having been had by the Senate, the House have again spoken in the only way left to them, and I think that they have spoken properly.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it would not interrupt my friend, I should like to ask him a question?

Mr. BOGY. If it is short I will yield, because I am only allowed five minutes, and I have exhausted four already.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator says that the House must originate the appropriation bills. I wish to know if, in his judgment, the House has any right more than the Senate to originate an appropriation bill? I understood him to speak as though the appropriation bills must originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BOGY. Appropriation bills originate in the House, as a matter of course.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why?

Mr. BOGY. I do not mean to say that the Representatives have an exclusive right, but they have the right to originate them.

Mr. ANTHONY. So have we.

Mr. BOGY. They have the right of action. In five minutes, as a matter of course, a speech cannot be very full of explanations. I do not mean to say that the House of Representatives has the exclusive right to originate appropriation bills, but it has the right. Having heretofore spoken in the way to which I have alluded, now when the appropriation bill comes up, they have reiterated what they before expressed in regard to other measures in this appropriation bill. That is what I meant to say. This is the trouble: There has been no action taken on the Indian Bureau transfer bill. It is not my place or my right to censure the action of any committee of the Senate; I am a member myself of the Indian Committee; I only speak of it as a fact that comes within my right to say, that the bill has remained there. The committee had the right to judge of the propriety of the delay—I speak nothing of that—but these measures have been delayed. That is sufficient for the House. According to my understanding of the duties of a committee, it cannot postpone a bill until the next fall to be taken up then by the committee, because a committee does not exist beyond the session, and it ought to report it back to the Senate. In that I may be mistaken, but such is my view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired. The hour of two o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 3398) for the issue of coin, and for other purposes, made the special order for this hour.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay aside that bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to letting it stand as the special order after this appropriation bill is through with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this bill being considered after the conclusion of the appropriation bill now before the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then it must be postponed by order of the Senate, or proceeded with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ought to explain, because my friend from Ohio may think I wish to keep his bill off. It may happen that we may have a conference report or anything relating to the conclusion of an appropriation bill pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection, provided it be left the special order subject to appropriation bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to House bill No. 3398 being considered as the special order after the conclusion of the present bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Subject to other appropriation bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Subject to other appropriation bills or other privileged questions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to all matters arising out of appropriation bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Army appropriation bill continues before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the first eight sections.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the discussion thus far has disclosed that it is impossible for us now in the Senate, as it was impossible for the Committee on Appropriations, to consider at this time on an appropriation bill the great question of re-organizing the Army. Gentlemen may have whatever views they choose on that subject. It may be that the Army can be reduced; it may be that the staff of the Army can be reduced and that regiments may be consolidated; but it seems to me manifest that in the Senate at least we cannot consider that question on this bill.

I desire to say one word, as I am up, with reference to the transfer of the Indian Bureau, in reply to the Senator from Missouri. Whatever there may be in his remarks looking to a reflection upon the Indian Committee with reference to that bill, I must say to him that I think he is mistaken. Of course I cannot state what occurred in that committee, but I do say that the consideration of that measure was pushed forward as rapidly as was consistent with the duties of the committee, and if this session should last six months longer or two months longer that question can be considered undoubtedly, as can all these other questions. But here we are with the end of the fiscal year approaching us, and up to us on Friday next, and the appropriation bills must go through. Then, after passing the appropriation bills, if we want to sit here and continue an examination of these other questions with a view to economy, I certainly shall not interpose any objection, and I do not think anybody will.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, as a question of the privileges of the Senate, I do not like to have the theory admitted here that the Senate has not an equal right with the House of Representatives to originate appropriation bills, a right which it seems to me we may be called upon to exercise this week. The Senate passes an appropriation bill every day. Every private-claim bill that we pass which contains an appropriation in it is an appropriation bill, and the Senate has passed general appropriation bills and sent them to the other House. It was done at the first session of the Thirty-sixth Congress. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will recollect it very well. The House of Representatives was slow in organizing, no beginning was made toward any appropriation bills, and the Senate took up the question and passed appropriation bills and sent them to the House. The subject here was discussed fully, and the decision was arrived at that we had an equal right with the House to originate those bills.

Mr. DAWES. What was the result?

Mr. ANTHONY. The House declined to pass our appropriation bills, and sent appropriation bills over to us.

Mr. DAWES. They laid all the Senate bills on the table.

Mr. ANTHONY. They did, undoubtedly. I do not deny the right of the House to lay an appropriation bill from the Senate on the table or of the Senate to lay on the table an appropriation bill from the House; but I say that the rights of the two Houses are precisely equal upon all appropriation bills. An appropriation bill is not a bill to raise taxes, but to expend the proceeds of taxes after they have been raised. I do not wish to pass over in silence any intimation so strong against the privileges of the Senate as that we have not an equal right to originate appropriation bills. I am afraid we shall have to exercise that right.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask the Senator with his long experience a question, whether it has not been the practice of the Government since the beginning that the House of Representatives shall originate appropriation bills generally?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly it has; and so it has been the practice of the Government from the beginning that the House should originate the resolution of final adjournment. It always originates in the House, but the Senate can pass it if it sees fit or lay it on the table, as the Senator from Massachusetts says.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think it is an open question. I think, as the Senator from Rhode Island has said, that the practice of the Government for years has been so constant as to the originating of appropriation bills—I speak not of the general appropriation bills but appropriation bills—as to cover the constitutional authority of the Senate. From time out of mind bills appropriating money have originated in the Senate, although I must confess that if it were a new question it would be very difficult for me to distinguish between appropriation bills and tax bills under the term "money bills." I

I think the original construction of the Constitution would cover them both; but the construction which has by both Houses been recognized is that there may be appropriations of money by bills originating in the Senate. Such bills from the Senate have been passed by the House time out of mind, and it is too late for us now——

Mr. ANTHONY. What is there about "money bills" in the Constitution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to turn his attention to the precise language of the Constitution. It does not say "money bills," as was the common-law phrase.

Mr. DAWES. I know it says revenue bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It says "bills for raising revenue." Now, the idea that you are raising revenue when you are paying it out, is singular to me. I thought that was diminishing it.

Mr. DAWES. I did not rise to discuss that question, because I think it has passed the period when it may be raised. I think that if it were an original question I would adhere to what I have stated to be the proper construction, but both Houses have committed themselves for half a century to the origination of appropriation bills in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion made by the Senator from Illinois to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the word "eight" in the sixth section and inserting "ten."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, we have to-day rather an extraordinary spectacle presented to the Senate and to the country.

The amendments proposed to the Army appropriation bill by the Senate Committee on Appropriations strike out all the reductions proposed by the House, and, instead of an annual reduction of more than $3,000,000 contemplated by that body in this branch of the public service, the Senate committee strike out the first twelve sections of the House bill and refuse concurrence upon the ground that they have had no time to consider in an appropriation bill and at so advanced a period of the session the proposed important reduction proposed by the House in the Army. It is the same old cry of the impropriety of repealing existing legislation upon appropriation bills. But is the House of Representatives to blame for this action?

The House bill for the reduction of the Army came to the Senate, I believe, about the 1st or 2d of June of this year. It was referred to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. No action and no report by that committee on this proposed reduction by the House on this important branch of the public service has ever been made. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. LOGAN] tells us that the committee, in view of the importance of the measure and the approaching end of the session, postponed all consideration of it until the next winter. This is the reason why the House of Representatives has deemed it proper to put the proposed reduction of the Army in this appropriation bill. Having failed to obtain any concurrence or action of the Senate upon the Army bill proper, passed many weeks ago, and proposing a re-organization and reduction of the Army by putting it on a peace basis and saving more than $3,000,000 in this branch of the public expenditure, the House have sought the same result by putting this reduction upon the Army appropriation bill. The Senator from Illinois tells us that the bill proposing this reduction of the Army is a sham, a mere pretense, and utterly false in its hollow pretensions at reduction of the military force and economy.

This statement is most extraordinary, if true, and it seems to me that the Senate Committee on Military Affairs instead of postponing the consideration of the bill until the next winter ought to have reported at once and exposed its hollow and hypocritical false pretenses. Why was it not done? Upon such a report each Senator could have voted understandingly. The pretended economy of the House on this proposed reduction of the Army, if false, might have been exposed to the country. Why postpone action?

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator will pardon me. I have but five minutes and he can explain when I get through.

Mr. LOGAN. I only want to set the Senator right.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator can set me right when I am through. I certainly did understand the Senator to say that the House bill was the merest sham! Am I wrong in that?

Mr. LOGAN. Not the House Army bill, but this appropriation bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understood the Senator to say the House Army bill was a sham.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then I misunderstood the Senator. The honorable Senator from Louisiana also told us that the House Army bill was a sham.

Mr. WEST. I said the attempted reduction of the Army in this appropriation bill was a sham.

Mr. STEVENSON. I certainly understood the denunciations of both the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] to be leveled against the House Army bill. But I accept their corrections and acknowledge I misunderstood them. They referred to the proposed reduction of the Army contained in the first twelve sections of the pending appropriation bill. But, Mr. President, if the Senate Military Committee had reported the House bill sent to them nearly a month ago, these reductions of the Army on this appropriation bill would not have been put there. It was the non-action of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs that has rendered this last action of the House necessary.

So far from deserving the denunciations heaped on the House to-day by the two Senators, I think that body deserves the thanks of the country.

That House is charged by the Constitution with the sole power of originating all bills for revenue; and they are the popular branch of the people. The House of Representatives know the wants and realize the necessities of the people. I therefore deeply regret that the Senate Committee on Military Affairs did not either recommend a concurrence on the Army bill passed by the House reducing the Army to a peace basis with the annual saving of $3,000,000, or recommend a non-concurrence. Had this been done and a report from the Senate Military Committee against concurring, the issue would have been fairly made before the country.

We have been informed that the revenues of the Government are below the estimates, and unless we practice retrenchment we must resort to increased taxation or borrow more money.

I believe that the people of this country have a right to demand of their representatives that the Government of the United States, like any prudent citizen, must live within its revenue. Economy and retrenchment are among the crying demands of the present hour. Not so much, Mr. President, in reducing salaries as in dispensing with unnecessary expensive Army and Navy establishments in time of peace. I am a friend of the Army and Navy both. My past course in the Senate will show that I have never been niggardly in my votes for all liberal appropriations demanded by these branches of the public service. But I insist with the House that an Army on a war basis should be brought down to a peace basis. It was so in the time of the war of 1812 and it must be so now.

We have a large number of officers in the Army, embracing almost every grade in the military department, in which I am informed great reduction can be made without detriment to the public service. It requires time to begin this reduction by dispensing with promotions when vacancies occur among the staff officers, and the sooner it begins the earlier will practical reduction take place.

A reduction in the rank and file in the Army can at once be initiated. We are eminently a people of peace, and require no standing Army. In this age of enlightened and civilized evangelization diplomacy and arbitration are to take the place of war, and we therefore want no standing armies. But, if I was wrong in this, no fact has been better developed by the late bloody civil war which drenched our land than that we may rely upon our own citizen soldiery as our surest defense in time of popular need, should the emergency arise to call them out.

I know we have an enlarged frontier to defend, and I am willing liberally to provide for that defense. But surely a regular Army one-third less than that which we now have would be ample for that purpose. I insist that we should not forget the heavy indebtedness under which the entire country is groaning at this time and the heavy taxation to which the people are being subjected at this period of great pecuniary and commercial depression throughout the country. Therefore both upon the ground that large standing armies are unnecessary and are directly opposed to the genius of American free institutions, not less than upon the ground of a retrenchment and economy demanded by popular necessity, I favor the reduction of the Army to the lowest scale which the public interest will allow.

Our frontiers are becoming rapidly filled up with an industrious, brave, energetic people. And although they require protection from the Indians, this need will probably become less and less every year. Before the late civil war I think our Army did not much exceed 12,000 men, and surely ten years after its cessation the Congress of the United States should be taking some steps to its reduction to something like that standard.

I do not profess, Mr. President, to know what that standard is. The decision of that question I shall most willingly leave to the investigation and recommendation of the Committees on Military Affairs in the Senate and in the House. The House of Representatives has already taken the initiative on the recommendation of its committee. I only regret that nearly a month has been permitted to pass without action by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

The House bill, I understand, proposes great retrenchment. It proposes reductions both in the cavalry service and in the infantry service. It proposes to dispense with certain officers and to curtail expenditures in various items of the Army expenditures. If such action is all wrong, if there is nothing practically beneficent in it, I should have been rejoiced to have seen and heard it demonstrated by the committee in this Senate having charge of the House bill. But they do not tell us the House bill is wrong or that the public service cannot safely bear the proposed reduction. The distinguished and experienced chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the Senate tells us to-day that he is not even now prepared to say whether he will or not vote for some reduction of the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. I said I should not commit myself now on the bill before the Military Committee reducing the Army had taken action.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is just what I understood the Senator to say, and it is just for that reason that I claim that the House bill reducing the Army should now be acted upon and passed. If the Senator is not prepared to say that the Army could not safely bear the reduction proposed by the House, then I am willing to act on the recommendation of the House and pass the bill which that body has matured after months of deliberation.

This is the time, this is the place, this is the opportunity by which a large reduction can be made in the Army and in the Navy without detriment to the public service. If the Senate committee would take no action on the House bill reducing the Army, let not Senators blame the House for imitating the example of a dominant republican majority in putting upon the Army appropriation bill reductions in the military service demanded by the country, and which they endeavored to accomplish in the regular Army bill.

As I said, Mr. President, on a former occasion during the present session, our republican friends seem to think it right enough to raise the salaries of Army officers on appropriation bills and even to increase the number of such officers, as I showed was done in 1870, but the moment an attempt is made to reduce salaries by the same process then we are met with the objection and impropriety of legislation upon appropriation bills.

It is a poor rule that does not work both ways.

During the present session existing laws, against the protest of myself and those who act with me in this Chamber, have been repealed by appropriation bills, and it is too late for Senators to interpose their objections now. It was the non-action of the Committee on Military Affairs in the Senate upon the House bill reducing the Army, which went to them on the 2d or 3d of June, that induced the House to place upon the Army appropriation bill in its twelve first sections the proposed reduction in the Army. If the Senate will now direct that committee to report back the House bill (as the chairman [Mr. LOGAN] says he will promptly do if directed by the Senate) and concur in its provisions, we can save $3,151,000 in this branch of the public service during the next fiscal year. If the dominant majority in this Chamber refuse the proposed retrenchment, let them take the responsibility of its failure before the people in the coming canvass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has no further time on this amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to amend by striking out the sixth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is not in order, there being now an amendment in the second degree pending.

Mr. LOGAN. I withdraw the amendment that I moved a moment ago, and move now to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is in order.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire merely to answer the Senator from Kentucky and any others who have unintentionally made the same insinuations. It is very clearly intimated here that the Military Committee are withholding measures that ought to be before the Senate.

Mr. STEVENSON. I made no such intimation.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator said we ought to have reported the bill back and made a report upon it in order to show whether it was wrong or whether it was right. I say to the Senator that the House of Representatives spent seven months in maturing that bill and sending it to us, and yet he would require the Military Committee to report it back here in two weeks; and, if they do not do so, fault is found with them. I understand this thing perfectly. This is a complaining time. Fault is to be found with everybody; nobody does his duty here except certain Senators. I am ready to take any responsibility, so far as I am concerned, that is proper. I did just what I believed to be right with that measure. Although I am stating what was done before the committee, I will say that I presented it to the committee with my judgment that we had not time to consider it at this session, it being so late in the session; and I stand by it; but if the Senate shall vote at any time, by resolution or otherwise, that they are ready for a reduction of the Army, then the Military Committee is ready to report a bill; and then the Senate can make a bill to suit themselves. It might not be such a one as I would make; but the Senate would have the power to alter and change it to suit their own notions. I did say the provision in this appropriation bill was a sham; I did not say the bill reported from the House Military Committee was a sham. I said nothing about that; but I said this was a sham and a pretense. I say now to the Senate that the House, after seven months, passed a military bill. Then for fear that they would not have the thing in a condition so that they could squeeze somebody to agree to it, they put part of it upon an appropriation bill, without knowing what the Senate or the Military Committee of the Senate intended to do with the other bill. That has been the proposition all the time.

In reference to the question mentioned by the Senator from Missouri a moment ago, that his committee had had a bill before it for two months, and the House could not afford to wait, I will state that they sent a bill here in reference to the Indian Department and another in reference to the War Department, and then they put both bills on the appropriation bills besides. Is that the right way to legislate?

I wish to say one thing further in reference to this proposition. A proposal for a reduction of salaries on the Army appropriation bill is no part of the business of the House of Representatives or of the Senate. It is the duty of the Congress of the United States, if salaries are too high, to pass a law regulating salaries; but the very moment that you reduce those salaries on an appropriation bill, without repealing the law, which you do not do, which you have no right to do on an appropriation bill, as I maintain, you leave the salary just as it was before, except that you do not appropriate money to pay it. The General of the Army, or the major-generals, or anybody else, can proceed against the Government for the larger amount which should have been appropriated in the appropriation bill. It does not reduce their salaries; it only reduces the appropriation to pay their salaries. You only allow them so much. You may, it is true, repeal the law in an appropriation bill, but that is not proper legislation.

Mr. WEST. It is not even attempted in this bill as it came from the House, either.

Mr. LOGAN. As I said, it is not provided in this bill. You may do it; you have the power to do it; but it is not proper legislation. It has been decided by the Senate time and again that legislation for the purpose of reducing salaries must be general legislation by an act of Congress regulating the amount of pay that the officers shall receive. Then the duty of Congress in an appropriation bill is to appropriate such money as the law itself provides shall be appropriated for certain purposes. That is the function of an appropriation bill. Whenever Congress goes outside of that to reduce salaries or expenses, unless the reduction is made by law first, it goes outside of that which legitimately belongs to it so far as legislation in an appropriation bill is concerned.

I withdraw the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. BOGY. I will only say that in this case the House did pass a bill to reduce the salaries of these very persons. That bill came here, was laid before the Senate, and referred to a committee of the Senate; but there has been no action upon it. Whether that course was proper or not I do not now discuss. The fact is that the bill did pass the House and was referred to a committee of this body. The House may be forced to another mode of accomplishing the same object; but it does not affect the truth that the House did pass a bill to reduce the salaries of the Army. I say more, that the Senate referred that bill to a committee, and it has gone there, like to the tomb of the Capulets, where there is no resurrection.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Illinois having withdrawn his amendment, I ask if an amendment will be in order at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be.

Mr. MAXEY. On page 12, after line 151 of section [9] 1, I move to insert:

Provided, That the cavalry regiments shall be recruited to one hundred men in each company, and kept at that number; and a sufficient force of cavalry shall be employed in the defense of the Mexican and Indian frontier of Texas.

Mr. WEST. We cannot consider that now.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that the Senator from Texas delay his amendment until we reach that point in the bill.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state that I offer my amendment now in order to perfect the text.

Mr. ALLISON. But the amendment which the Senator now proposes is to come in beyond the portion of the bill which we are considering.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to place the amendment before the Senate at this time in order that the Senate may comprehend thoroughly the condition of the frontier.

Mr. LOGAN. Let the amendment be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to say a word in this connection. I speak with physical pain, and would not speak at all were it not that my people are so deeply interested in the question before the Senate. I have lived upon the frontier for twenty years. I profess to know something of what is necessary for the defense of the frontier, and I cannot appreciate the sentiments of gentlemen who live in the interior, whose people are not exposed, when they oppose a proper defense of the frontiersmen who make up the new States. I raised the same question this morning. I want the cavalry companies increased to one hundred men each and kept at that number. In my judgment that number is necessary for the constitutional duty of protecting the frontier. I believe that ten regiments of cavalry are vitally necessary and essential to the protection of the frontier, if we can provide them, knowing what is told us by the President, by the Secretary of War, and by the General of the Army. They have not now at their command a sufficient number of cavalry troops to protect the frontier, which it is made by the Constitution of their country their duty to protect.

We have in my State a long line of frontier suffering this very day for want of protection. I am told by the President himself that he cannot protect it because he has not got the troops. Would it be honest to my own people for me to come in here and ask for a reduction of the Army, thereby stripping the Government of even the small force which it now has for the protection of the frontier? I believe in the doctrine "Millions for defense; not one cent for tribute." I believe it to be the duty of this Government to protect the frontier, and as a frontiersman I ask that the amendment which I have offered be adopted as a part of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question? Do I understand the Senator from Texas to say, upon his information and observation on the frontier, that the Army of the United States is not now sufficient to protect the frontier?

Mr. MAXEY. I so stated, and in the very little time I have left I will endeavor to make it perfectly clear. I say to the Senator from Vermont that it is apparent to every military man who comprehends the character of service now to be performed by the military in the protection of the frontier from Indian incursions, and notably in the protection of our Rio Grande frontier, that the character of troops necessary for that work is cavalry commanded by intelligent men, cavalry made up of men who have individuality, because you have often to send out little squads of ten and a dozen men under a sergeant. We need intelligent non-commissioned officers. You get that character of men in the cavalry force much more often than you do in any other part of the Army. In many instances the command is thrown into the hands of a non-commissioned officer. They have to act upon their individual judgment. These troops necessarily must move with great rapidity. The character of defense demands rapidity of movement. Thus it happens that you must have cavalry for the frontier defense. As I have stated more than once, I called for an additional force for the protection of my own frontier, knowing as I do that cavalry is the best for that defense. I was told by the President himself that he could not furnish it because he did not have the troops. He conceded the necessity but could not furnish the troops, and so he has stated in his message which was presented to the Senate at the opening of the present session. I called, in conjunction with my colleague and several members from Texas in the House, upon the President. I afterward saw the General of the Army, and he replied that he could not send the cavalry I wanted down to the Rio Grande frontier because they were needed elsewhere. The President gave as a reason why he could not protect the Rio Grande better that the cavalry were necessary in the Black Hills, or Sioux country. Thus it happens that we have this vast frontier unprotected. I state, not as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, but as having some knowledge of military affairs and some experience which it is not necessary to say anything about, that in my judgment ten regiments of cavalry are not sufficient. I do not mean for Texas but for the entire frontier.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, if I correctly understand the Senator, in his judgment, based upon all the information, the present estimate is inadequate to the wants of the service.

Mr. MAXEY. That is my conviction as to cavalry, and therefore I shall oppose a reduction of the force, as I have stated more than once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the Senator proposes an increase.

Mr. MAXEY. I should much rather have a portion of the infantry force made mounted infantry, which is a very good arm of the service. They would be of great aid to the cavalry force. I had rather see that than to see the cavalry reduced. That is my view in regard to the matter.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator from Illinois has somewhat surprised me by announcing that the first eight sections of this bill amount to nothing but a fraudulent deception; that there is nothing in them; that they can mean nothing, and have been intended to accomplish no good result. I confess no great amount of knowledge in military affairs, or as to the size of the various regiments, or as to the arrangement of them and their disposition at this time; but, looking at the bill as it came to the Senate, it strikes me that it is simply carrying out the intelligent action of the House of Representatives on other bills. Taken by itself, without its precursors, there might be supposed to be some buncombe about it; but, inasmuch as the House of Representatives some months ago passed a bill reducing the pay of the superior officers of the Army and sent it to the Senate for action, I can hardly see anything to be complained of that in this appropriation bill they also reduce the pay of those very officers, presuming that the Senate would act in the interest of economy. And knowing, by the warning voice of the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, that the appropriations must be reduced, they had reason to suppose that the Senate, in the interest of economy, would reduce this pay in accordance with the bill which they had already sent to the Senate. I can hardly see any buncombe or any fraud or any pretense in that conduct on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to me a moment?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. I neglected to make one explanation which I think will answer the Senator from Vermont. My present recollection is that eighty-two constitute a cavalry company. My amendment is to increase the number to a hundred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It increases the Army about two thousand, I believe.

Mr. WHYTE. So much for the first portion of this appropriation bill. So far as concerns the objection made by the Senator from Illinois to the reduction of salary on an appropriation bill, it is rather late to make any such objection as that. It is rather late when the statute-book is full of examples of increases of salaries in such bills. In 1870, the two Houses of Congress being composed of members of the same party who compose the majority of the Senate to-day, the salaries of the officers of the Army were fixed in an appropriation bill; and it comes with bad grace to-day from members of that party to say that the House of Representatives is committing a folly or is guilty of buncombe before the country when the House has so excellent an example in the republican party in both Houses of Congress in 1870, and in 1866 also.

That is not all. Other portions of the early sections of this bill are made to comply with the bill for promoting the efficiency of the Army, passed by the House of Representatives, and sent to this body on the 2d of June, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for its action prior to the required action of the Committee on Appropriations on this bill. This bill is made in many respects to conform to that. So far from there being any fraud or buncombe in that bill, it does not reduce the Army by cutting it off as with a sword. Far from it. It proceeds by a gradual process to its reduction. It provides for a commission. It provides a machinery which will not be a disorganization of the Army as of to-day, but a slow and gradual process, under the eye of the President and under the eye of those who know best what will promote the efficiency of the Army. It is to be reduced carefully and systematically for the future and not at the present. Therefore it is unjust to the House of Representatives to charge them with sending a bill here made up of what is denounced as fraud and humbug.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, in this general discussion on the reduction of the Army we are liable to lose sight of what the Senate is required definitely to act upon. The Senate is called upon under a proposition of the Senator who has charge of this bill to strike out eight sections of the bill. I took occasion to say that the attempted reduction of expenditure in this bill was a sham and a deception. The Senator from Maryland thinks not. He thinks that there is a provision in this bill that enables the gradual, the systematic, and the intelligent reduction of the Army. I venture to differ from him, and I will ask his attention and the Senate's attention to the particular specifications of the bill itself, and ask them to consider what will be the operation of it if enacted into a law:

That the number of cavalry regiments are hereby fixed at eight—

They are now ten—

and the infantry and artillery at twenty.

They are now thirty.

And the Secretary of War, as soon as the requirements of the service will permit, holding in view the least expense on account of transportation, shall cause the reduction to be made by the merging of the enlisted men into other organizations.

Not one man goes out of your service; not one officer leaves it; but the officers and men taken out of these regiments are to be put into other regiments. That fails to reduce the Army one man, but it entails the expenditure of a transfer from regiment to regiment, involving, as we all know, a large expense in the transportation of the Army. The Senator's idea is that there is to be a board who are to examine into this thing. That is a proposition applying to the Army the same rule that pertains to the Navy, that if hereafter, for years and years, not this year or next but during the organization of the Army for all time to come, if any officer proves himself deficient or inefficient, according to the estimation of that board, there is a method of retiring him. That is entirely a different proposition from reducing the Army at the present time.

So take the section as it stands—and that is all we have to deal with—or take the eight sections as they stand—and we can go no further—the first proposition is to reduce the compensation to the officers and the next is to transfer the men. The reduction of compensation to the officers will be more than offset by the expense of the machinery to transfer the men. That is all there is of it. There is no board there to accomplish that purpose. You merely take a man out of one regiment and put him into another, and that is what you call reducing your Army; that is the proposition here, and therefore it is a sham.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, as I only used one of my five minutes and three other Senators were talking at the time, I wish to say one thing more with regard to the origination of appropriation bills.

I referred to the Thirty-sixth Congress, when the Senate passed appropriation bills and sent them to the House; but I am informed by authority which goes back further than my own, and which is better—and my recollection also concurs in the same point—that in the Thirty-fourth Congress a resolution was introduced by Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, affirming the right of the Senate to originate appropriation bills; a long debate ensued, the resolution prevailed, and three general appropriation bills were passed by the Senate and sent to the House at that session.

With regard to the right of the two Houses to legislate upon appropriation bills, there is no doubt whatever that the two Houses have a right to legislate upon appropriation bills; but the question which has been discussed here seems to be whether one House alone has that right. Whenever there is legislation proposed by one House on an appropriation bill and the other House agrees to it, it is a perfectly proper mode of legislation—not so good as legislation by separate and distinct bills, for undoubtedly an appropriation bill should be confined simply to the appropriation of moneys to carry out existing laws; but there can be no constitutional objection, and certainly there is none, in practice, to legislating on appropriation bills where both Houses concur in the legislation. But, when one House puts upon an appropriation bill legislation, and the other House does not agree to it, then it is for the House which proposes the new legislation to yield. That has been repeatedly done by the Senate, and it should be done by the other House.

Mr. EATON. Is an amendment in order to the amendment of the Senator from Texas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state that the motion of the Senator from Texas to amend is not now in order. The question before the Senate is the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out the first eight sections of the bill. The Chair holds that it is not in order to amend that by a motion to amend another section not now under consideration.

Mr. EATON. I only wish to say one word in reply to my honorable friend from Rhode Island. All bills for raising revenue must originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills. I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that the House of Representatives has not the sole power under the Constitution of originating appropriation bills; but I submit to the good sense of my honorable friend and the good sense of every other Senator upon the floor that that portion of the Congress of the United States who by the terms of the Constitution have the right to raise revenue know best what the amount of revenue is to be and what the amount of appropriations can properly be under that revenue.

Mr. ANTHONY. Not only the amount, but the objects to which it shall be appropriated?

Mr. EATON. No, no; I beg my friend not to misunderstand me. I do not by any means undertake to argue that the Senate itself has not the power to originate an appropriation bill; but, I say, it seems to be good sense that that House which has the right under the Constitution to originate a revenue bill will, as a matter of course, be better informed as to the amount of appropriations which can be made under those revenue bills.

Mr. ANTHONY. How can that be, inasmuch as we have to consider the revenue bill after it comes from the House, and inasmuch as we have the same right to propose amendments to that as to any other bill? It is different in the British Parliament, where the house that originates revenue bills appropriates money.

Mr. EATON. I understand the difference between our and the English customs perfectly well; but I submit that that body that raises $300,000,000——

Mr. ANTHONY. What is the body that raises $300,000,000?

Mr. EATON. The body that raises revenue.

Mr. ANTHONY. Which is that body?

Mr. EATON. The House of Representatives.

Mr. ANTHONY. I beg pardon; the House of Representatives cannot raise a dollar without our consent.

Mr. EATON. O! I suppose they cannot.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose they cannot, either.

Mr. EATON. Let me read again: "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives."

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. EATON. We cannot originate such a bill. Very well. The House of Representatives go to work, spend three months' time of their ablest committees, of their ablest men, and they arrive at the conclusion that in the condition of the country, as the country now is, with the great depression in the industries of the country, in view of the large amount of revenue by imposts that we shall fall short this and the coming year, the total amount of revenues which can be raised by the country is so many millions of dollars, whether it be one hundred, two hundred, or three hundred millions. Then the House of Representatives originate appropriation bills in accordance with what they say will be the amount of revenue raised. We can amend these bills. We can amend the revenue bill which they originate; we can amend the appropriation bills which they send here; we can originate new ones if we like; but I submit that when the House having the sole power to originate revenue bills come under their revenue bills with their appropriation bills, they are entitled to decent respect at the hands of this body.

Mr. ANTHONY. The argument of my friend from Connecticut is that the House of Representatives is so much superior in wisdom to the Senate that we should yield to it. Now I cannot do my friend the injustice to agree to that.

Mr. EATON. I did not say that. That language cannot be tortured from anything that I said. I said that the House of Representatives having under the Constitution the sole power to originate bills for raising revenue, when they took into consideration the condition of the country, when they originated their revenue bills, when they saw what amount of revenue could be raised—and the honorable Senator from Rhode Island does not undertake to say that the House of Representatives have erred in the amount of revenue which they say will be raised from customs the coming year—their appropriation bills are entitled to a decent respect at the hands of this body.

Mr. ANTHONY. The House of Representatives have sent us a bill that is now before the Committee on Military Affairs which if passed will take half a year's revenue. Are we obliged to pass it because the House originated it?

Mr. EATON. No; certainly not.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I find myself placed in rather an embarrassing predicament with regard to this pending amendment. I have not hesitated heretofore to declare my disapprobation of the principle which has so frequently been acted upon by the Congress of the United States in ingrafting legislation upon appropriation bills; and I have on several occasions voted against clauses of appropriation bills sent here by the House of Representatives because they were legislative provisions, although I approved of the measures which were themselves embodied in those clauses. But it seems to me now, from the attitude taken by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that the only possible mode of getting at the reductions which are proposed by the House of Representatives will be through the medium of this appropriation bill. As an abstract proposition I was opposed to these sections being incorporated in the bill and in favor of striking them out, upon the presumption that whatever changes might be necessary in the organization of the Army, and whatever reductions might be deemed advisable in that branch of the service, could be much better consummated through the action of the appropriate committees of the two bodies than through an appropriation bill. For that reason I favored the striking out of these sections of the bill, presuming that the Military Committee would report a bill, which had been pending for some weeks before them, on this very subject, and that then we should be afforded an opportunity of ascertaining the sentiments of the Senate upon that particular question. But the chairman of the Military Committee, as I understand him, now informs the Senate that it is not the purpose of the committee to afford an opportunity of indicating their views upon this question of a reduction of the Army during the present session of Congress; and if that resolution be carried out, it is manifest that those who favor a reduction of the Army are reduced to the alternative of securing it upon an appropriation bill, or not at all.

It is true that I have but limited experience in the legislation of this body; but it was a new idea to me which was advanced by the distinguished chairman of the Military Committee that he would not report the bill referred to unless instructed so to do by a vote of the Senate. In that event he said he was ready to report it promptly and at once. It struck me as a little singular that the necessary information should be in the possession of the Military Committee requisite to a report of this bill, but that they felt themselves not justified in reporting it unless instructed so to do by a vote of this body. Now, sir, I dissent entirely from that doctrine.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me——

Mr. WITHERS. I hope, unless I have misstated the Senator, he will not interrupt me.

Mr. LOGAN. Go on.

Mr. WITHERS. If I have stated the Senator's position incorrectly, I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. LOGAN. You certainly have, sir. I have been misrepresented here this morning three or four times. I did not say that the committee would have to be instructed.

Mr. WITHERS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I certainly so understood him.

Mr. LOGAN. I said the opinion of the Military Committee was that they did not have time at this late period in the session—the bill has been only before our committee a short time—to examine fully the question. I have already sent to the War Department for all the papers and documents connected with the Army in order to have a full understanding of it. I have not had a return of all of them yet; some I have received. These matters I did not think it necessary to state to the Senate this morning. But the committee on considering the subject, taking it altogether, concluded they could not give it a fair examination during this session, and therefore they postponed it. I also said this morning that any indication of the Senate that they were in favor of a reduction of the Army would bring the report of that bill. A vote on this question this morning by a majority of the Senate saying that they want the Army reduced will of course bring from the committee a report of the bill. The object that the committee had was to get full information. The bill was cooking up in the House for seven months and has been before our committee but a short time; we have not had time to examine it because we have not had the papers; and yet if the Senate desires us to report it, I can report it to-day. I shall not report in favor of it, however. I will report it with my protest against it; but still it can be reported.

Mr. WITHERS. I find——

Mr. LOGAN. I want to say that it seems to me there is a determination here to attack the chairman of the Military Committee for something he has done that is wrong. Now, sir, I have never known assaults made on a committee of this Senate before because they wanted to consider a bill, until this morning. The Committee on Military Affairs consider their matters just as fairly as any other committee of this body.

Mr. WITHERS. I must say that the Senator seems disposed to occupy my whole time instead of suggesting a correction of my remarks, which according to his own statement——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope it will be extended.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator from Illinois has accomplished his purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the Senator from Virginia have five minutes more.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to recommit the bill, and yield my five minutes on that motion to the Senator from Virginia, so that he can have an opportunity of going on and making his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion to recommit the rule of five minutes does not apply.

Mr. LOGAN. Then he can speak as long as he chooses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I do not propose to speak long, and if the Senator had not interrupted me I should not have occupied my whole five minutes, I presume. I will merely state in explanation of what I said that I have no particular attack to make on the committee, further than that I deemed it just and proper to make the remarks I did, in view of the fact admitted by the chairman of the committee that they did not propose reporting a very important bill which had been in their hands for some time, which alone would give us an opportunity of acting on this important question unless we choose to act upon it in an appropriation bill. I find I did not misunderstand his remark; but he, in effect, indicates now that if by a vote the Senate should say that they favor the proposed reduction, the committee would be ready then to report the bill.

Now, sir, as to this policy of legislation on appropriation bills, I do not propose to go over it. As to the abstract right of the Senate, I admit that that is unquestioned in my opinion. But, sir, the action of the two bodies, with very few ex eptions, since the organization of the Government, tends to establish the fact that to the House of Representatives itself belongs the duty of originating appropriation bills, or at any rate they have exercised that privilege with very few exceptions. I think I can say here safely that you will look in vain into the history of the legislation of Congress to find a case where any general appropriation bill has passed both bodies of Congress which originated in the Senate. It is true, as the Senator from Rhode Island has stated, that on a particular occasion this right was asserted by Mr. Hunter and three bills were introduced and passed by the Senate, but they never became laws. According to my understanding of the matter, they went to the House and were laid on the table and the House reported appropriation bills of their own which subsequently became laws. The difference was just then that the House was republican and the Senate was democratic, and the democratic Senate then insisted on the right to originate appropriation bills and send them to the republican House. The republican House denied the right, laid the Senate bills on the table, and subsequently passed appropriation bills of their own.

Now, I beg leave to say to the distinguished chairman of the Military Committee that in anything I have said in this matter I did not design in any way to attack him, beyond the fact that I dissented from the idea which he advanced in his speech that the Military Committee were authorized to retain a bill until such time as they should consider themselves instructed by the vote of the Senate to report it, because I believe myself it is the duty of the committees to report on all bills of a general character which are referred to them wherever it is possible to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate recommit the bill?

Mr. LOGAN. I withdraw the motion to recommit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the first eight sections of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, we have often heard declamation against the propriety of legislation in appropriation bills. It has in most instances come from the majority of this Senate. When I first heard these protests against that legislation I thought that the Senate could never have ingrafted legislation into an appropriation bills; I thought that here was an innovation on the part of the House of Representatives differing in politics from the majority of the Senate, and that it was the first instance of the kind in the history of the legislation of this country; and that thought was confirmed by the repeated protests of distinguished Senators against allowing any legislation to be ingrafted into an appropriation bill. Now, I simply desire to refresh their memories from their own well-considered and matured works. I refer to the act of July 13, 1866, making appropriations for the support of the Army, and I say that there is substantial legislation in that act which is found on page 92 of volume 14 of the Statutes at Large. I then go from that to the act of March 2, 1867.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the legislation in 1866, will the Senator tell us?

Mr. COCKRELL. I cannot point out each act of legislation in all of these various statutes; but I say there is legislation in all these acts that I refer to. I will point it out in one or two acts, so that there may be no dispute about it. I refer next to the act of March 2, 1867, page 487 of the Statutes at Large, volume 14. There is a crime created by that law and a punishment inflicted for its commission. I refer now to section 2 of that act:

> And any officer of the Army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment—

I will read the whole act. It may be refreshing to some of the Senators:

> The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command, or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters, except at his own request, without the previous approval of the Senate; and any orders or instructions relating to military operations issued contrary to the requirements of this section shall be null and void; and any officer who shall issue orders or instructions contrary to the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office; and any officer of the Army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty years, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction.

I refer next to the act of June 8, 1868, page 66 of volume 15. I refer then to the act of March 3, 1869, page 318 of the same volume. I then come down to the act of July 15, 1870, from sections 2 to 25, inclusive, which is an entire re-organization of the Army, fixing the status of the Army as it is to-day and the pay of the officers of the Army. Here it is, fixing the pay of the General, of the Lieutenant-General, of three major-generals, brigadier-generals, and all of them all the way through, an organic law. Then I go to the act of March 3, 1871, page 524 of the sixteenth volume. Then I go to the act of June 6, 1872, page 261, volume 17, and the act of March 3, 1873, page 547 of the same volume. In one of these acts I find that the Court of Claims was constituted in an appropriation bill. The Court of Claims was organized and jurisdiction given to it in an Army appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What bill is that?

Mr. COCKRELL. That was in the act of March 3, 1871:

> That the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint, a board of commissioners, to be designated as commissioners of claims, to consist of three commissioners.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not the Court of Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should have said the commissioners of claims, not the Court of Claims. An act in regard to the Pacific Railroad was also incorporated into that Army appropriation bill in section 9. The act of March 3, 1873, (page 547 of volume 17 of the Statutes at Large,) also contains legislation.

We find, then, that in 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, and 1873 this distinguished Senate, with many of the distinguished Senators now occupying seats on this floor, then members of the body, passed general legislation in appropriation bills making appropriations for the support of the Army, just as we propose in this bill, and I do think that this is a case of estoppel, that these distinguished Senators are now and ought forever hereafter to be barred, estopped, and precluded from making objection to legislation in Army appropriation bills.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I do not rise to reply to the position taken by the Senator from Missouri——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. WEST. Well, I move to recommit the bill, simply to call the attention of the Senate to what they are voting upon. I endeavored when I was up before to show that this attempt to change the organization amounted to nothing. Now I rise to show that the further attempt to reduce this Army to 22,000 men amounts to nothing more. The present organization of the Army, as reported by the Adjutant-General, amounts to 22,796 men, including everybody, all enlisted men. This bill says the number shall not exceed "22,000, exclusive of Indian scouts and the enlisted force authorized for the office of the Adjutant-General by the act approved March 3, 1875." So we have 22,796 men, 357 of them composed of Indian scouts and men on duty in the Adjutant-General's Office. Consequently this economical proposition to reduce the Army of the United States cuts it down the grand sum total of 439 men. There is the economy of the Democratic House of Representatives at the present time.

Mr. BOGY. What is the number of the Army authorized by law now?

Mr. WEST. The number of the Army authorized by law is 25,000, but they only have 22,796, and cannot get any more under the operation of the law. So, if you say they shall not have over 22,000, you only cut down your men four hundred and thirty-nine. That includes the Indian scouts. So you see the whole operation of this section as we have to deal with it, and that is all there is before us, and it is the only thing we can legitimately consider, is a proposition to cut down the Army four hundred and thirty-nine men, in the face of what? In face of the assertion of the Senator from Kentucky that the people of the United States do not require the Army up to its present extent, and the assertion on the contrary of the Senator from Texas, who is where the Army is used in protecting the frontier, that they want sixteen hundred men more. There is the difference in authorities on that side of the Chamber, and the sole proposition is to cut it down four hundred and thirty-nine!

Mr. BOGY. I am astonished at the statement——

Mr. WEST. I withdraw the motion to recommit.

Mr. BOGY. I rise to express my astonishment at the statement made by the Senator from Louisiana. He admits himself that the law now authorizes an Army of 25,000 men. Whether those may all be in active service or not, that is the law. It authorizes an Army of 25,000 men. The bill before us proposes to authorize only 22,000; and he, by a mode of calculation, says that is a reduction of about four hundred men. It is a reduction of three thousand men by the law, and was intended to be.

Mr. WEST. Not in fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the first eight sections of the bill; upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) I understand this is a political question. If it is, I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea," on this motion.

Mr. MITCHELL, (when Mr. SAULSBURY'S name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] I am advised by the leaders of the democracy that this is a political question, and therefore I shall not vote. I would vote "yea," if at liberty to do so, and the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY, (who had voted in the affirmative.) Not considering this a political question, I voted "yea;" but as I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] and am informed that his friends consider this a political question, I simply announce the pair and state that, if the Senator from New York were here, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WINDOM. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] I am informed by his friends that if he were here he would vote "nay." I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPENCER. If this is considered a political question, I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] If present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Booth, Bruce, Conkling, Dawes, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, Maxey, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, West, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Key, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Stevenson, Thurman, Whyte, and Withers—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Ferry, Gordon, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Windom—36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, lines 6 and 7, to increase the appropriation "for expenses of the commanding general's office" from $2,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, line 9, to increase the appropriation "for expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits" from $75,000 to $105,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, to strike out, in lines 12 and 13, the words "22,000 enlisted men, as provided in the sixth section of this act" and insert "25,000 enlisted men, including Indian scouts and hospital stewards. Nothing, however, in this act shall be construed to prevent enlistments for the Signal Service, which shall hereafter be maintained as now organized, and with the force of enlisted men now provided by law."

So as to make the clause read:

And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of 25,000 enlisted men, including Indian scouts and hospital stewards. Nothing, however, in this act shall be construed to prevent enlistments for the Signal Service, which shall hereafter be maintained as now organized, and with the force of enlisted men now provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, to strike out, in lines 25 and 26, the following words from the clause appropriating "for expenses of the Signal Service of the Army:"

And hereafter the number of enlisted men in said serv ice shall not exceed three hundred and fifty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, to increase the appropriation for pay of the Army from $9,154,788.50 to $9,968,574.50.

Mr. EATON. As all these subsequent amendments seem to pass unanimously, no objection being made, I desire to say that I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate by discussing in a factious manner any amendment; but I suppose the first eight sections, having been stricken out as they were by the Senate, nearly all the subsequent amendments, certainly all that have heretofore been read and very many more that I have noticed, become absolutely necessary, because the action of the Senate in striking out the first eight sections. Therefore I do not propose to interpose except to vote against all the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to this amendment? If there be none, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. I object, and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from Kentucky will not insist on that. I will say a word in explanation.

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, I do not want to delay action or consume time, but I will reserve it in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that this is an exact estimate of the amount of pay necessary under existing laws to pay the men of the Army. It is an invariable payment. It is governed by the number of men enlisted in the Army. This change is made necessary by the other changes in the bill, and I trust the Senator from Kentucky will not press his call.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will reserve the call, and reserve the question in the Senate if I choose to call for it there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. BOGY. The record will not be made right in these cases by saying that there is no objection; but we do not desire to detain the Senate by discussion or by vote; but I object to all the amendments proposed by the committee of the Senate. The record will appear as if there were no objection; I want the fact noted that I object to all these amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can state to the Senator that there is one stage of the bill where he can reach his object by voting against all the amendments. When the bill is reported to the Senate the question can be taken on all in gross, and the Senator can vote against all, and so go on the record.

Mr. BOGY. I only want to go on the record correctly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to. The next amendment will be reported.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, to strike out lines 34 to 44, as follows:

And after the 1st day of January next there shall be no more than forty paymasters in the Army of the United States, the reduction being made by dropping from the rolls the junior commissions until the maximum of forty is reached; and so much of section 1182 of the Revised Statutes and of the act of March 2, 1875, and the joint resolution of March 3, 1875, as provides for a greater number is hereby repealed: Provided, That section 1194 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has this bill in charge, what reduction in the expenses of the Army the amendments of the Senate committee would make. If the bill be passed as proposed to be amended by the Senate committee, what reduction would there be in the expenses of the Army?

Mr. ALLISON. As compared with last year?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. The amount of this appropriation is $372,468.60 less than the appropriation bill of last year; but we have already at this session passed a deficiency bill to cover the expenses of the Army for this year amounting to $665,000. The total, therefore, is $1,037,468.20.

Mr. LOGAN. This bill is that much less than the appropriations of last year?

Mr. ALLISON. Less than the appropriations last year including the deficiency bill which we passed this year which will be expended during this fiscal year.

Mr. THURMAN. What was the amount of the deficiency bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Six hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to take any time in the discussion of this bill, which the committee has no doubt given great consideration to, but I must say that while I would be one of the last men to destroy the efficiency of the Army or to vote for any measure that would be unjust either to the officers or to the rank and file of the Army, I cannot help expressing some regret that our committee finds itself unable to make any greater reduction in the expenses of the Army than $1,000,000. There must be, as I had occasion to remark the other day, a reduction of expenses; it must be in every Department, and it cannot be in any Department without operating very hardly, and sometimes cruelly, upon whole classes of individuals, and certainly upon particular individuals. I cannot but express some regret that our committee has not been able to find that it can make in the expenditures of the Army of the United States a greater reduction than $1,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say, in reply to what the Senator from Ohio has said, that the estimates made by the Departments this year, carefully revised by the new Secretary of War, Secretary Taft, are larger than the estimates made for last year; and we have in every instance where it was possible cut down the appropriations to the revised estimates, and in several instances have gone below the revised estimates made at the War Office. Many of these expenditures are absolutely fixed expenditures. The pay of the Army must depend upon the number of men and officers in the Army, and this pay as the bill passed the House of Representatives was $11,700,000, over $300,000 more than was appropriated for the pay of the Army last year. Thus it appears that the House itself, with all its disposition to economize, in this very bill appropriated more than $300,000 more for the pay of the Army than was appropriated by Congress last year. These expenses are fixed expenses.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask how much the House bill reduced the expenses of the Army?

Mr. ALLISON. The House bill reduced the expenses, as compared with the appropriation bill of last year, $3,479,000; but one million of that amount was in a single item of clothing for the Army, and of course the Army has a large surplus of clothing on hand this year, and the Quartermaster's Department can get along with a much less amount. The reduction of three millions is covered by that single item of a million dollars and by some other items of a similar character, amounting to over two millions.

Mr. THURMAN. It seems, then, that the House has been friendly enough to the Army in this, that the House bill provides for the pay of the Army more than the bill of last year. It cannot be said, then, that the House is hostile to the Army; but the House apparently has made a reduction of $3,000,000. Our committee makes a reduction of only one million—two millions difference between the House and our committee. How that happens, I do not know. I hope it can be satisfactorily explained.

Mr. LOGAN. I would suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the necessity for appropriating this year more for the pay of the Army than last year occurs in this way: The appropriation for last year did not pay the Army. There was half a month when the officers did not get their pay at all. There was not money enough appropriated last year to pay the Army, and hence the appropriation is larger this year than last for the pay of the Army.

Mr. ALLISON. Nearly the whole amount of the increase by the Senate committee over the House bill arises from the provision in relation to pay, and where we have increased, as we have an increase in the Quartermaster's Department in some items considerably over the House bill. They have told us at the War Office that these sums are absolutely necessary to maintain the Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You mean by "pay" the pay that is fixed by law, or in what way?

Mr. ALLISON. In the necessary disposition of the Army, the pay for the transportation of troops, the supply of clothing, the subsistence of the Army, and all those general items which cover the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments. For example, the House of Representatives appropriated $3,360,000 for the first item under the Quartermaster's Department, in addition to an unexpended balance. We have increased that to $4,000,000, increasing the sum $350,000. We have no way of ascertaining whether or not this sum will be required, except from the estimates made by the War Department and the average expenditures under these items for the last four or five years. So of other items.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are not on that item now, I believe.

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; I was merely making this statement in reply to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. I was necessarily out of the Senate while the prior amendments were considered. What strikes my eye now—it may be a small matter, I do not know whether any remarks have been made upon it—but I can hardly understand why it is stricken out of the bill. Take section 3 of the House bill:

> That now or hereafter no officer selected, detailed, or assigned to duty upon the staff, or as aid to any general officer, or upon any other duty whatsoever, shall be entitled to or receive any additional pay or allowance by reason of such selection, detail, or assignment.

I have heard it said—I do not know how true it is—that under the laws as they exist an officer who is simply a lieutenant in the line has received for a good while the pay of a lieutenant-colonel because he was on the staff of a general.

Mr. ALLISON. That may be true, and I presume there are some abuses in that respect; but that is a section, as the Senate will readily see, regulating the entire staff corps of the Army, and the Committee on Appropriations having received this bill only last Thursday could not in the nature of things make the necessary examination and come to an intelligent conclusion upon this subject. Therefore they said "We will strike all these provisions relating to a re-organization of the Army, and trust that to the regular committee of the Senate having in charge a bill for that very purpose," and therefore we struck it out without making special examination in relation to it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an amendment for the purpose of retaining the paymasters now in commission, but reducing the number afterward to forty. I shall at the proper time offer an amendment that the paymasters now in commission shall be retained.

Mr. WEST. By striking out this provision of the House bill they are retained.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Very well. Now while I am up I will reply to the Senator from Ohio about a lieutenant getting the pay of a lieutenant-colonel and having the rank of lieutenant-colonel. That may be true in regard to an individual lieutenant on the staff of the Lieutenant-General. It gives him the rank possibly of a lieutenant-colonel. That was a compliment paid to the President of the United States by his friend, the Lieutenant-General. There is no other case but that, and this is an attack entirely upon the Lieutenant-General. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggests to me, if Lieutenant Grant had not been selected for that place a major or a colonel would have been selected.

Is there any other country in this world where the highest legislative body would object to having the son of a man who had rendered such services to his country as General Grant selected for the staff of the Lieutentant-General or the General, if you like? In the time of Marlborough in England, a man not to be compared to many of the generals of this country, he was not only made a duke but got a fortune. He attained to one of the greatest dignities of England. A million or more was given to him at the close of his service, and all the honors of the country were conferred upon him. Afterward, at the close of the peninsular war, the Iron Duke, as he was called, was made a duke because he had, with no extraordinary skill except that of preventing battles, vanquished his enemy. Who ever complained because that great old Iron Duke received honors and received money? Five hundred thousand pounds were given to him in money and all the honors of the country were conferred upon him. If he had happened to have a son selected as an aid-de-camp by the general of that country, who would have thought of complaining of it? Certainly no gentleman with the kindly feelings that gentlemen always have would have complained.

Let us compare General Grant with other great military men. Napoleon was a genius such as the world never saw, I think much greater than Alexander, but he failed; and yet the country that he did save, France, conferred all honors upon him. What are the services of General Grant? He fought more battles and was more successful than Napoleon was in all his wars. I repeat it, of all the military men, no man has fought so many battles successfully as Grant, and history will verify what I say. All the military services of Wellington are not to be compared to Grant's, and yet everybody to the present moment likes to do honor to the Iron Duke. I am sure, if it were left to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] he would be glad to see the son of a general who conferred such honor upon and did such service to his country, although the rank of that son was only that of lieutenant, made a staff officer upon the staff of the second general of the Army.

I do not care especially about these personal things, but there are certain proprieties which do exist in the heart of every innocent, honest citizen, and they ought to exist in a great body like this, where we are selected because we are supposed to have more of the kindly and better qualities than people generally have. The Senator asks, why should Fred. Grant have this special reward; why should he be placed under a shed with a screen put before him? Why does the Senator not say that he wants Fred. Grant removed from the place for which he was selected by one of the greatest soldiers of this country? It is a very small reward compared with the great services of his father. I have nothing to say about him. He is there performing his duty, and you would save probably five or six or seven hundred dollars a year if you should reduce his pay to that of a lieutenant.

Mr. SHERMAN. If a military officer of a higher rank were selected he would have to be paid. We have got to pay them all.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. We have got to pay them all, and as the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] wiser than I, says you save nothing to the country if you dismiss this young gentleman from the place for which he was selected by his friend. Nobody in this country will pretend to say that Phil. Sheridan had not a right to select his staff. I do not want to say an unkind word about the people who contended with him, but I look with admiration and veneration upon his campaign down the valley of Virginia. When he came there the enemy left very soon. He is the man who will always be ready to take care of the country's interest, and see that he does not dishonor himself or disgrace anybody.

I trust gentlemen will not make this little shabby amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very sure that my friend from Pennsylvania, among the many obligations that he owes to me in an acquaintance and a friendship of more than thirty years, will consider it one of those obligations that I have afforded him a chance to deliver so eloquent a speech in praise of General Grant and the Lieutenant-General of the Army, General Sheridan. But looking at the matter in a cool, calm, and unimpassioned manner, I must say that my friend is bad in his history and bad in his logic. He alludes to the rewards bestowed by Great Britain upon the Iron Duke, and he tells us that Great Britain bestowed upon that duke a fortune equal to the fortune of the greatest nobleman of England. That is historically a great mistake. A single year's income of the Marquis of Westminster or of the Duke of Buccleuch is more than ever Parliament voted to Wellington. Therefore my friend is not quite right in his history. He says that Great Britain bestowed upon Wellington the title of Duke. Yes; but the American people bestowed upon Grant a title greater than all the dukes ever held in this world: the title of President of the United States. It will not do to say that the American people have been ungrateful to those who fought for the Union in the last war. It will not do to say that they ever have been ungrateful to General Grant or that he has ever been treated by political friends or political foes with any injustice that merits the rebuke of the American people or of the Senate. No, sir; that will not do.

As to this particular matter, I said nothing about General Grant. I mentioned no name. I spoke of what I had heard, and of what turns out to be the fact, that a mere lieutenant in the Army, a very meritorious young gentleman I have not the least doubt in the world, is made by appointment upon the staff of the Lieutenant-General to rank as a lieutenant-colonel and to receive the pay of a lieutenant-colonel, while men who have grown gray in the service of their country, who have been through more wars than one, who bear on their bodies more scars obtained in battle than one, are still mere subaltern officers in the Army. I must say to my friend that, while I have never uttered an unkind word of the President of the United States in my life, and while I respect him and his achievements as much as my friend from Pennsylvania, this is not the right way to reward him for his services. It is not the proper mode to reward him for his services. It is not by promoting a member of his family, and promoting him over the veterans of the war, the veterans of more than one war, that the President of the United States is to be honored. The people of the United States have shown their respect for General Grant; they have honored him, and they have honored him in a remarkable manner. The country has honored him; and it is not by such a small matter as selecting one of his sons, a bare lieutenant in the Army, in the first or second year of his service, and giving him the rank and the pay of a lieutenant-colonel, that the people of the United States desire to honor the President.

I am sorry to have to make these remarks. I had not the slightest idea of making them, and would not have made them but for the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania, who seemed to think there was something ungracious in speaking about this thing. Mr. President, there is a form of government in this world in which the nation is bound to take care of the progeny of the king, in which the sons and the daughters of the monarch, be he king or be she queen, are to be sustained at the public expense in order to maintain the dignity of the throne. That is not our form of government; and what cannot be done here directly I am bound to say ought not to be done indirectly.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from Pennsylvania can only speak by unanimous consent, having spoken five minutes already.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope my friend will be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The Senator from Ohio seemed to doubt my historic knowledge in the two cases he mentioned, that those two people had higher incomes than anybody else. I know that. I have seen the Duke of Buccleuch's estate. It is the largest in England; and next to it is the estate of the Marquis of Westminster. I have been upon his estate, too; but with those, and with perhaps two or three more exceptions, the Duke of Wellington had an estate equal to any one, and he received it all as a reward for his services in the peninsular war.

I should not object to the principle, if it had been started at the commencement, that a lieutenant should not be the aid-de-camp of a general, but under the law now the General, the Lieutenant-General, and the major-generals can select their own aids-de-camp. In this case the Lieutenant-General selects a lieutenant, and I do object to that small sort of opposition, political, or economical, if you like the term better, which impels you to strike a man who happens to be selected by one of the generals of the Army for a place upon his staff. I say that is too small an opposition for a man whom I have loved and respected as much for the last thirty years or more as I have the Senator from Ohio. I do not believe it. It is not his own heart. He has taken that ground without reflecting, as he has usually done when his heart has acted.

I say again that General Grant (and I do not speak of him now as President Grant, but as General Grant) has performed greater services than any man that we have had in this country; greater services than any other man in the last three or four generations of the world; and he ought not to be attacked through his son only because that young gentleman is his son. That is the ground of my objection to the remarks of the Senator from Ohio. The whole Army probably might be differently reconstructed and re-organized; but, take it altogether, it is a pretty good organization. It saved the country when the country needed all the talents that it had and when some of the ablest men pretending to be in favor of sustaining the Government were found in opposition to it. I say all honor to this Army; and I will do all honor to it as long as I live.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to discuss this question from a sentimental stand-point, but I desire merely to call the attention of the Senate to the law in reference to staff officers. By reading the statutes organizing the Army, Senators will see that there has been no violation either of propriety or of law in detailing any of these staff officers. Section 1096 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

> The General may select from the Army such number of aids, not exceeding six, as he may deem necessary, who shall have while serving on his staff the rank of colonel of cavalry.

The law allows the General six aids-de-camp, with the rank of colonel while serving on the staff. The language of the statute is such that a lieutenant may serve on the staff or any other officer of the Army, and while serving he has that rank. The idea of the organization of an army is to give the general officers of the Army the same character of staff in time of peace that they would have in time of war, for the reason that there is a certain training connected with the general business and duties belonging to the staff that they must become familiar with. The law always provides for them in peace the same as in war. Section 1097 of the Revised Statutes provides:

> The Lieutenant-General may select from the Army two aids and one military secretary, who shall have the rank of lieutenant-colonel of cavalry while serving on his staff.

There is the law authorizing the Lieutenant-General to have two aids with the rank of lieutenant-colonel while serving on his staff. The rank only belongs to them while serving on the staff. It is the rule in all armies that general officers select their own aids, called their military family, from the line or staff of the army. They select such persons as they think will best perform the duty. I will say to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who spoke of persons who had served long and faithfully, who were older men in the Army, that however much the rule may differ in other armies, it has nearly always been the rule in our Army that young men are selected as aids on the staff of general officers. This is almost universally the rule, and there is a reason for it which it is not necessary to mention here. I presume if the Senator himself were commanding an army to-day he would soon find in his experience that he would want young and active men upon his staff. I presume that every general officer has that kind of experience. General Sheridan selected young men. It was perfectly natural that he should do so and perfectly right I think that he should do so, irrespective of who the young men were. They are lieutenants in the Army, and while they serve on his staff they are entitled to the rank and pay of a lieutenant-colonel. I do not desire to make any defense of his action, so far as I am concerned. It is immaterial whom he selects; it is immaterial who the father of one of his staff officers is, or the mother either. They are subject to his choice. He selects whomever he desires belonging to the line of the Army to serve upon his staff, and under the law he has a right to ask that they be detailed on his staff. It is a matter of his discretion.

Mr. THURMAN. If my friend will allow me, I have not said a word against General Sheridan.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not said that the Senator has done so.

Mr. THURMAN. I have not said that his action was contrary to law. What I say is that the law ought to be changed, and that the mere fact that a lieutenant of the line is selected to be the staff-officer of the Lieutenant-General ought not to increase his pay from that of a lieutenant to that of a lieutenant-colonel. It is the law that I am finding fault with, not with the President, nor with General Sheridan, nor with Lieutenant Grant.

Mr. LOGAN. I know that. I was not complaining at all of what the Senator said in reference to that question. As I said when I rose, I merely desired to make my remarks in reference to the law and to give the reasons for it as near as I could. There is a reason why the pay should be increased, and if the Senator will listen to me he will see whether it is a good one or not. No lieutenant of the line with the rank and pay of a lieutenant could serve on the staff of General Sheridan. There are many reasons for that. The duties of the staff officers of the Lieutenant-General are very different from the duties of a staff officer of a general commanding only a brigade in the Army. General Sheridan's duties extend all over the West to the Pacific coast. His staff officers are sent by him to all parts of his military division for the purpose of examining posts, stations, regiments, batteries, and all of his command, and to make reports to him.

Mr. THURMAN. Do they not get transportation?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; they get transportation at so many cents per mile when traveling under orders; but they have to live and they have to entertain. Those who are on the staff of a general are expected in the Army to entertain a little differently from other persons on less pay. That is the custom. Whether the custom is right or wrong it is not for me to say, but it is the custom. They have greater expenses, more duties, and more arduous duties; and for that reason the rank is given.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. LOGAN. Just one word more. I think it is proper that it is given. I think the rank of the officers on the General's staff is not too high nor the rank of the officers on the Lieutenant-General's staff. My experience, however limited, leads me to that conclusion. There are many other reasons which I could give for it. Therefore the law regulates the Army as it should do. The rank is fixed in accordance with the grade of the general on whose staff the officer serves, and I think when the Army was organized that the organization was a proper one.

Mr. THURMAN. One word more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope I shall be allowed to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can proceed by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. THURMAN. We have had the salary of the President of the United States raised on the ground that he had to entertain people; and now it appears that we are to have salaries all the way down to those of lieutenants acting as staff officers on the staff of some general increased on the ground that they must entertain. I think that is going too far.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state to the Senator that he will find, if he will look back and trace the laws organizing the Army of the United States, that the same rank has always been given to the staff officers of the Lieutenant-General. There has been no change. The men who are now general officers have no higher rank on their staff than has existed since the organization of the Army in this country. They have more pay, perhaps, but the rank is not higher.

Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to make a statement. I voted a while ago and did not remember at the moment, and therefore did not advert to the fact, that I was paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON.] I merely wished to say that I recognize the pair, and that my voting was an inadvertence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to say that this subject which the Senator from Ohio has introduced on this pay question (and properly enough, because of course the increased pay to this detail or selection falls under the head of the amendment that we now have under considerations) has two branches for consideration evidently. The first to which the Senator has alluded, although he has rather gracefully retired from it since, is that it was somewhat out of order for Lieutenant-General Sheridan to select the son of the President of the United States for one of his staff, considering that he had only been graduated from West Point a year or two and held the office of lieutenant, while there were war-worn scarred veterans, who had bullet-marks, and so forth, who might have been selected. On that question I only have to say that in one point of view the Senator is right, undoubtedly. The war-worn veterans ought to have honors before those who are not war-worn; but inasmuch as one of the war-worn veterans is General Sheridan himself, who, I believe, the Senator from Ohio will agree did some pretty good service for the country, and he is put in the responsible position of Lieutenant-General of the Army, something is due to him as one of the very people who have served through the entire war, and have borne the heat and burden of the day.

The law says that General Sheridan may select two officers, according to his choice, for his aids, without regard to their rank; but when selected they shall have a certain rank and pay. He goes to the son of his old companion-in-arms, who also had as a warrior something due to him in the very line my friend refers to, and says, as I suppose, "I know that the fighting blood and the executive blood of your family are good; that has been demonstrated; we are old brothers-in-arms; now, let me have your son as one of my staff, although he is young, although he is just out of West Point." Where is any officer in the Army who would say or feel because he was not selected by General Sheridan that any injustice, moral or otherwise, had been done to him? That is a matter that must be left to this war-worn man upon whom the responsibility of Lieutenant-General is placed. General Washington himself, my honorable friend will remember, selected as one of his staff for a considerable period of time in the Revolution Mr. Trumbull, afterward Colonel Trumbull, who was a mere lieutenant in the Army, because he was the son of one of his chief officers in whom he had confidence, and from which he believed that this son would be the very man he wanted, always ready, always quick, always active, always capable. Is it possible that my friend means that there is any ground of reproach or discontent in any respect because General Sheridan has selected this young lieutenant, the son of his old companion-in-arms, to be on his staff? I take it not.

Then we come to the question of pay. The law has fixed the pay, and my friend says he complains of the law. What is the reason of that? As the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] has said more perfectly than I can, a lieutenant attached to his regiment is put with his regiment in quarters somewhere at Fort Leavenworth, if you please, where the United States furnishes him with a log cabin, or something of that kind, to live in, and gives him wood and water and attendance, and a great variety of assistance in living on his $1,200, or whatever the pay may be. How is it with the lieutenant who is attached to the staff of a lieutenant-general of the United States? As the Senator from Illinois has said, he has to travel from Maine to Texas. To be sure, his traveling fees are paid; but when he is living at a hotel, with subsistence at $5 a day and a quarter of a dollar for blacking his boots, &c., his pay, at his rate as a lieutenant, would be absolutely eaten up. Therefore, if you put a lieutenant upon duty which compels him to pay $5 per day for subsistence instead of drawing the commissary beef in a log-cabin that the Government has furnished for him at Fort Leavenworth, or somewhere, is it not right that he should have a higher compensation, so that he will not be tempted to steal or obliged to borrow? It seems to me so; and that is the whole of it.

I submit, therefore, that the law is not wrong which allows an increased rank, and therefore an increased pay, to the persons, whoever they may be, who are obliged to live in a different way, not for the purpose of entertainment, but for the mere purpose of subsistence, from that in which they would be enabled to live if they were attached to their regiments and companies and in the field or in quarters. There is a difference, and it seems to me to be a plain and honest one. When you come back to the other part of it, my friend, I believe, stated that there was nothing in the idea that General Sheridan should not have a perfect right, moral or otherwise, without reproach, to select these young gentlemen.

Mr. THURMAN. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is upon the reduction of the force of the paymasters of the Army, on page 8.

Mr. THURMAN. What is the immediate question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The immediate question is upon the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out lines 34 to 44 on that page.

Mr. THURMAN. In order to get five minutes more, I move to strike out the word "repealed," in the last line of the clause of the House bill proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. President, I said not one word against the President of the United States, not one word against General Sheridan, not one word against Lieutenant Grant. I did not mention the name of Sheridan, I did not mention the name of Grant; I did not allude to any particular general in any way that anybody might know of whom I was speaking; but the bare mention of the fact, which is admitted, that a lieutenant of the Army, in the first year of his service, is promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel by being put on the staff of a general, has aroused all the patriotism and all the gratitude almost that rests in the heart of the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Vermont. I must say to my friend from Vermont that, although he has proved himself to be a very good civil-service reformer, if his speech is a specimen of what kind of a military reformer he would be, then his record will not be quite so bright in the military line as it is in that of civil-service reform. He says that we ought to allow more pay to this staff officer, this lieutenant of the line who is made a staff officer, than we allow to a mere lieutenant of the line. Possibly there may be some reason for that, to a certain extent; but is there any reason in the world why he, a mere lieutenant of the Army, should have the pay of a lieutenant-colonel by being put upon the staff of a general? The Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Illinois say that he may be sent all over the country. To be sure he may, but he gets transportation. The Senator from Vermont says, yes, but he will live at hotels at an expense of $5 a day. I think if he lives long at hotels at the rate of $5 per day, he will be neglecting his duty. I do not think that the Army is constituted for the purpose of sending the aids of the general around to live at hotels at $5 a day. That is not my idea of what is the duty of a lieutenant of the Army upon the staff, or of any staff officer of the Army. But if I were disposed to go into this very particular and individual case, it would not be a record of sending a staff officer all over the United States to live at $5 a day at hotels at his own expense. It would not be a question of that kind at all. It would be a very singular question indeed; a very singular matter of individual history; but I do not see fit to go into that.

The idea that each general of the Army is to have a magnificent military family around him, with grand aids-de-camp, and he himself with magnificent pay so that he may entertain, and each one of his military family may entertain, down to a mere lieutenant of the line, who is constituted a lieutenant-colonel by being on his staff, is not the true idea of an army. Let any man read the account of how Von Moltke, that great military man, lives to this very day, sleeping in a single bed, on a mattress, with an iron bedstead, and living at a less expense than a lieutenant-colonel of the United States does. Let him look at the Prussian army this day, where there are no substitutes, and where, as my friend Schurz told me once, he had seen barons of the empire cleaning their own horses in the cavalry. They were privates in the cavalry and were cleaning their own horses because they could have no substitutes for the service and had to perform the duties of private soldiers. That is the way to make an army. It is not by great military establishments, a great general with a great pay, and half a dozen aids-de-camp or less with pay also, each one to maintain grand dignity and to entertain at the public expense, that the Army of the United States is to be made popular with the people of the United States and to be made invincible when the time of actual service shall come.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out the word, whatever it may be, on page 8, which will enable me to reply to my friend.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator can speak on my amendment to strike out "repealed."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out the word "hereby" just before it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending, upon which the Senator from Vermont is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair is quite right. The Senator says that I am not as good a military reformer as I am a civil-service reformer. I do not know about that. I have tried to maintain the military establishment of this Government since I have been here upon principles of economy, too. I intend to maintain it in order that it may be able to enforce the laws wherever it is necessary to do so. Whether the Senator has done anything in that direction in his public career, it is not for me to say. I will leave a disinterested public, when we are both candidates for some high office at the same time, to measure our respective records in that respect.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not hear what the Senator says.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not of any consequence. It will be a good while hence before the thing occurs. [Laughter.]

The Senator says that the true principle is to go to the Prussian establishment and that we ought not to have great aids-de-camp and great generals, &c., but we ought to have barons who clean their own horses. Suppose we have barons who clean their own horses. I know some Senators who sometimes harness their own horses and are not much worse for it, but it costs just as much, I have found by some little observation, not to say experience, as it would if you hired somebody to do it; decidedly so.

My friend refers to that great Prussian who slept on an iron bedstead; but he forgets that, although he was very economical in what he ate and drank and slept on an iron bed, he nearly ruined his country by taxation notwithstanding. That does not prove economy, Mr. President, by a long deal.

The precise question is as to the fitness of this pay. That is all there is to it. The Senator says he did not import this particular case. He did not in words, and yet every body knew what he alluded to, and he must expect that every body who feels that nothing improper has been done, but quite the reverse, will say so. When you come to the pay, the Senator says the man ought not to live in a hotel. Where is he going to live? The Lieutenant-General of the Army is obliged to move. He has been in the last month half a dozen times from Chicago, where his headquarters are, to other points in the West in order to protect our interests on the frontier. His staff must go with him. They are obliged to live at hotels, and if they live at hotels, if they are honest men they are obliged to pay their bills. They cannot deadhead it. Therefore my friend admits partly that there is a fitness in the pay being larger than that of a mere lieutenant.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend tell me how much the ration allowed to an officer would fall short of his support?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The ration! Do you expect an aid-de-camp of a Lieutenant-General traveling from Chicago to Omaha or to Cheyenne or somewhere to put his pemmican in one pocket and his grog in the other and live on rations?

Mr. THURMAN. Are they not commuted in money?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; that then becomes a question of pay. The Senator admits that the pay of a lieutenant is inadequate for the support of a man who is detailed to serve on the staff of a Lieutenant-General from the very necessity of the case.

Mr. THURMAN. Let me put a question to my friend.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Must it come out of my time?

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator will have plenty of time, because I can move to strike out another word. Suppose a lieutenant is ordered from Omaha or Fort Sanders or anywhere else to a distant point; he is allowed transportation; he has to live, too, just as well as the staff officer, and at large expense.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So he does, and on that particular day or week that he was traveling it would be a drawback out of his pay greater than if he had lived in quarters or in the field. Undoubtedly it would cost him more, and he would have to bear it.

Mr. LOGAN. That would seldom happen.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Seldom; but still it might happen, and therefore that case might apply, I admit. So far as that goes it is a case in point undoubtedly, but that is an exception. For nine months in the year—ten, eleven, eleven and a half months in the year—or fifty months in five years, the regular lieutenant in the Army is with his company. That company is quartered somewhere, and he has quarters and food and all the allowance that is made to the regular line in the performance of their regular duty provided by the United States. The commissary provides him with his food at a price that is altogether below the price that he could live for at a hotel or at the humblest boarding-house. That is the case of a lieutenant of the line. You put a young gentleman on the staff, and what has he to do? He cannot get his food from his commissary; he cannot have his quarters; he cannot have anything, except his regular pay, and he is obliged to move from day to day, performing the duties, going to headquarters at Washington, going to some distant post to inquire and investigate into something that is necessary for the good of the Army; so that the rule with him is that, instead of living in quarters and upon his rations, he is constantly subjected to extraordinary expense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his amendment?

Mr. THURMAN. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee striking out the clause from line 34 to line 44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, line 45, after the word "of," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred;" and in line 46, after the word "scouts," to strike out "twenty-three thousand four" and insert "forty-six thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For the pay proper of three hundred privates employed as Indian scouts, $46,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, line 49, to increase the appropriation "for the pay of contract surgeons" from $107,700 to $215,573.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in reference to this amendment that the Surgeon-General estimated for one hundred and seventy-five contract surgeons, and the House appropriated for about eighty. Our committee communicated with the Surgeon-General, and he stated to the committee that one hundred and fifty was the lowest he could get along with and take care of the Army. Therefore we have provided for the pay of one hundred and fifty contract surgeons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, line 51, after the word "off," to strike out "forty-two" and insert "fifty-two;" in line 52, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty-two;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and ten paymasters' clerks, $6,000, to hold their positions until January 1, 1877;" so as to make the clause read:

For the pay of fifty-two paymasters' clerks, $62,400.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many paymasters are there now?

Mr. ALLISON. There are now fifty paymasters, and some of them require more than one clerk. The House bill allows them fifty-two clerks, as we do, and proposes a reduction of the paymasters from fifty to forty, and therefore provided for ten of the clerks for six months until this reduction could be effected. The committee, having struck out the provision reducing the paymasters, provided for the entire number of clerks through the whole fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, line 55, to insert "and fifty" after "two hundred," and after "stewards" to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "ninety;" so as to read:

For the pay of two hundred and fifty hospital stewards, $90,000.

Mr. EATON. I do not quite see the necessity for raising the number to two hundred and fifty.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill as it came to the Senate provided for two hundred. The revised estimates of the Surgeon-General provide for two hundred and fifty, and he says that number is required. The committee had no better means of information than that derived from the Surgeon-General of the Army, and therefore they inserted the number that he says are requisite.

Mr. EATON. I am very much obliged to the Senator for giving me information. Without the information no one ought to have voted for the increase from two hundred to two hundred and fifty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, line 61, to increase the appropriation for "messengers to paymasters" from $12,000 to $15,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the object of that?

Mr. ALLISON. That is another auxiliary amendment. The House, having provided for forty paymasters, only provided $12,000 for messengers. We, having provided for fifty, add $3,000 to the appropriation for messengers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why do they want any messengers at all?

Mr. ALLISON. The law provides for messengers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law does?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see the law.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to see it myself. I cannot point it out now. I have no doubt it is the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I guess not.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a part of the Army organization. It has been appropriated for from year to year on the ground that these messengers are essential to the proper care of the funds of the paymasters. The paymasters have hundreds of thousands of dollars at a time and are often at remote points where they must have at least one reliable person to stand by the safe at all times in their absence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have their clerks?

Mr. ALLISON. They have a clerk; but this clerk is paying soldiers, paying officers, and looking after the accounts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not go for that. It ought to be stricken out altogether.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, lines 69 and 70, to increase the appropriation "for pay to soldiers for clothing not drawn" from $360,000 to $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, line 79, to increase the appropriation "for postage on letters and packages received and sent by officers of the Army on public service; cost of telegrams; compensation of citizen witnesses attending upon courts-martial, military commissions, courts of inquiry; traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks," from $80,000 to $100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a discretionary item entirely. What is the object?

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment relates to one sort of miscellaneous items and expenditures. I have here a table showing that for the last five years the average expenditure under these items has been $113,000 per annum, some years running considerably over that, and in one or two instances running down I believe as low as $102,000. They asked for $125,000 in the estimates. The committee of the House gave them $80,000. We compromised on $100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The ground which I occupy about this bill is that, while I do not propose to allow the House of Representatives or anybody else to change the law without the consent of the Senate, yet, when we come in the present state of the public finances to items that involve mere discretion and where the appropriation will almost always be exhausted if you make it ever so large, and where the officers will keep within it if you make it ever so small, we ought to go for the smallest sum. This item among other things is "for postage on letters and packages received and sent by officers of the Army on public service." In the War Department you have the celebrated stamp-franking system which covers all that part of it, both for receiving and sending, so that the amount of postage for an officer of the Army where it has to be paid in money must be very small. Then when you come to the "cost of telegrams," of course that is a matter of economy. If you have plenty of money it is easier to send a telegram than it is to write a letter, but yet it may be just as convenient to the public service to write a letter as to send a telegram. When you come to "compensation of citizen witnesses attending upon courts-martial, military commissions, courts of inquiry, traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks," all these can be greatly economized by care in respect to who are summoned and having time when the work can be done at once, and so on.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think this item and others of this class are those wherein without risk of injury to the public service and without being forced to change the laws in an appropriation bill we can meet the House of Representatives in their propositions to make the appropriations much less than they have been hitherto; and if it turns out that we have got them altogether too low there will be time enough to correct it when we meet again—before the fiscal year is more than half out. Therefore I hope this amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one circumstance which induces me to vote for this bill as it stands now reported by our committee. The House of Representatives very politely, I think very properly, sent this bill, after it had been framed, to the new Secretary of War, who came into the office certainly with every desire and every disposition to promote economy. I happen to know that the then Secretary of War, feeling that it was a good deal put upon him to reduce the expenditures as much as possible, did make the most rigid scrutiny into all the items of expenditure, and spent perhaps three or four weeks in doing so, and called to his service every officer of experience in different ranks that was accessible for the purpose of making a careful revision of all these items. He reduced them to what he, a man of economical ideas, regarded as an economical standard, as near as he could get at it from information that came to him. He reduced the estimates below the annual estimates submitted to Congress something like $5,000,000, if I am correctly informed.

Mr. SARGENT. And then the House took his revised estimates and cut them down.

Mr. SHERMAN. They cut the appropriations down below his estimates. As I understood the Senator from Iowa, the committee of the Senate simply restored the estimates made by the Secretary, and in no case have they increased them.

Mr. ALLISON. In no instance have the committee reported beyond anything found in the revised estimates made by Secretary Taft, and in very many items we have reported below his estimates.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under those circumstances, I certainly think we are safe in following this careful examination made by a disinterested officer, who devoted time and labor to making the revision with a view to economy.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say upon this item one word further. For the first time in the Army appropriation bill we have a miscellaneous item for the Pay Department. Hitherto the appropriations for the Pay Department have been made in bulk, amounting to eleven or twelve millions of dollars in a single item. Therefore if one branch fell short the Pay Department could take it from another, and thus use up the whole aggregate sum; but under the instructions of the Committee on Appropriations I think last year the Department was required to make detailed estimates this year of every specific item of expense. The War Department made such estimates, and the House of Representatives have followed the detailed estimates of the War Department. Therefore, having appropriated specifically for these various items, if any one of them falls short, there is no method of reaching an expenditure from any of the other items. Hence it is necessary to appropriate the full amount actually necessary in order to carry on the particular expense provided for. The Paymaster General presented to the committee a statement of the actual expenses under these items for the last five years, showing an average expenditure of $113,000 and in one or two years amounting to $150,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we must reduce it this year.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course it was a question with us whether we shall allow them the $13,000 more. The House recommended $80,000, and it is for the Senate to say whether that shall be increased $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, lines 86 and 87, to increase the appropriation "for subsistence of regular troops, Indian scouts, and Indian prisoners" from $1,908,686 to $2,200,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that be explained, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. That item was carefully examined by the committee. Communication was had with the Commissary General of Subsistence and with the General of the Army. The amount appropriated last year for this item was $2,484,000. The amount estimated for in the revised estimates was $2,575,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are the comparative prices of leading objects that enter into the subsistence of the Army this year and last? Take flour, pork, and beef, and so on.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that I have examined that with much care, but my own opinion is that there would be very little difference, but perhaps a little higher this year than last. All these items are higher this year, although the committee did not go into that subject.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, in the item of appropriation "for the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department," to strike out the following words in lines 103 to 110: "$3,360,667.93, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, which is hereby made available for the service of the year ending June 30, 1877," and to insert in lieu thereof "$4,000,000."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the Senator on that subject, which is rather an open section.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very large item of expenditure of the Quartermaster's Department. The amount appropriated last year was $4,250,000. This year the House provide $3,360,697.93, and provide for a re-appropriation of an unexpended balance of the fiscal year 1874.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which is how much?

Mr. ALLISON. Which is $189,782.07, making a total appropriation by the House bill of $3,550,450. That of course was on the basis of 22,000 men for the Army. The Secretary of War tells us that upon the basis of the Army as it stands he must have $4,000,000. Therefore the Committee on Appropriations have increased this item $450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, line 141, to increase the appropriation for incidental expenses of the Quartermaster's Department from $800,000 to $1,170,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for a division on this amendment. Although my friend from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] has put me down as not knowing anything about the Army, (and I confess that is so,) I will state that all these items that we have been recently talking about are elastic ones. This item, as you will see, is for incidental expenses of all kinds, running through every branch. If there is anything where we can economize by what might be styled a savage reduction, so as to have every officer in the Army perceive that every possible ingenuity must be exerted to retrench and economize expenditures, these are the places to do it, and we can do it without offending anybody, without changing any law, and do it in such a way that no detriment can happen to the public service, even if it turns out that we have appropriated too little, because this will last till next winter in any case. Therefore I hope that the Senate will not persist in increasing these mere discretionary and elastic items for all sorts of incidental matters beyond what the House have proposed.

Mr. ALLISON. These items are perhaps in a sense elastic, and yet they are ascertained items from long experience of the most experienced officers of the Quartermaster's Department. They are items absolutely essential to the Army operating in the field.

Mr. LOGAN. Or in camp.

Mr. ALLISON. Or in camp.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Operating in camp!

Mr. ALLISON. They may be in camp. I thank the Senator from Vermont for his hypercriticism, which I think is about as substantial as some of the criticisms he has made upon the committee. It may be that these items can be reduced; and we have endeavored to reduce them. Last year we appropriated $1,200,000. This year the revised estimates require $1,150,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much was the estimate last year on which we appropriated $1,200,000? Was it not vastly above it?

Mr. ALLISON. I think not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator will find it so.

Mr. ALLISON. Very likely it was. We apply to the only possible place where these expenses can be ascertained, and they say to us these sums are necessary. The other day I heard a great deal on this floor about the prudence and economy of Army officers; that they ought to have the control of everything pertaining to the affairs of this country, because from their education they were men of honor and integrity; that they were economical and prudent in every expenditure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You did not hear that from me.

Mr. ALLISON. Now we are told that these Army officers are making estimates far beyond the necessities of the Government. It may be that it is so; but your committee have no other means than to take their estimates based upon actual expenditures heretofore, and report them to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is the estimate for this year?

Mr. ALLISON. One million one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senator has shown by his own action that he does not rely exclusively upon the estimate of the War Department, because he has chosen to reduce it below that.

Mr. ALLISON. I will explain that to the Senator. The House transferred one item that was estimated for here to another portion of the bill, and increased that item $80,000 above the amount estimated for. The committee adopted the House provision, and therefore struck off $80,000 from this estimate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would not make it come square.

Mr. ALLISON. If not, then the committee made a mistake in their figures. We took $80,000 from $1,150,000, and that left $1,070,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not understand you. That is arithmetic, undoubtedly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont insist upon a division?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; there is no use of it. There is no use fighting the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, to strike out the following words in lines 145 to 151, in the clause appropriating "for the purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery, and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry as may be mounted," "$104,784.89, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the same purpose for the year ending June 30, 1874, which is hereby made available for the service of the year ending June 30, 1877," and to insert in lieu thereof "$250,000."

Mr. MAXEY. I move to amend the clause by adding after the word "dollars," in line 151, the following proviso:

Provided, That the cavalry regiments shall be recruited to one hundred men in each company, and kept at that number; and a sufficient force of cavalry shall be employed in the defense of the Mexican and Indian frontier of Texas.

Mr. ALLISON. The only objection I have to that amendment is that it is legislation and comes under the rule the Senate has adopted.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the effect of adopting the amendment is not to make the appropriations in the bill generally inadequate; whether it is possible for us to increase the force in the manner proposed and pay for it out of the money that is appropriated?

Mr. ALLISON. It would certainly be impossible to get along with the appropriation in this paragraph if we were to increase the number of cavalry to one hundred men in a company, because right here there are $250,000 provided for the purchase of horses. That sum is absolutely necessary now. If you add twelve hundred men, and I believe that is about the number to be added, you would be obliged to supply twelve hundred horses, which would cost $150,000 or $200,000 more.

Mr. SARGENT. I must confess that I look with some apprehension on the prospect of a tolerably general Indian war on the frontier, from the Sioux to the Texas border. I hope that my anticipations will not be realized; but we have some very important operations on our hands there now, and they are likely to extend into the next fiscal year and perhaps grow in importance. This bill in its present shape, even taking all the amendments of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, will not be sufficient to bear the charge of an Indian war, even to the extent which we now have it upon our hands. I suppose that in a case of great emergency the Executive would feel that he was authorized, or that in taking such action Congress subsequently would excuse him for expending more money than this bill allows and calling into the field a force sufficient to protect the frontier. But my impression is that if we provide for a greater amount of force at the present time, we shall have to revise several of the appropriations in the bill and make it much larger than it is now.

Mr. MAXEY. I trust the Senate will agree to the amendment which I have offered. As I have heretofore said, the amount of cavalry force is inadequate. The demand upon the Rio Grande frontier is pressing; it needs immediate action. The country across that river is a foreign country. There is almost a condition of war down there now. The President in his message has said to Congress that he has not an adequate force to give the necessary protection to that frontier; but that by an increase of the cavalry companies from the present number, which I believe is eighty-two to one hundred, the force can be furnished there; and it does seem to me if there is a case on earth where there is reason for immediate and prompt action it is this, notwithstanding the objection the Senator from Iowa urges; and it will not do for either party to talk about a thing of that kind now. It is a time when the people of the country need to be defended; it is a time when the presence of a good cavalry force upon the frontier of the Rio Grande will bring about peace and prevent war. The very object of putting a good and sufficient force on that frontier will be to protect the frontier and secure peace, and thus avoid what may come about if that frontier is illy defended; because every one knows that if the people of that country are left without defense and they have their property stolen from them day after day in broad day-light and driven across that river, they will rise to that point that they will take into their hands their own protection and go to work defending themselves.

Now, sir, as a citizen of Texas, I ask this Government not to throw on the people of my State such a grave responsibility as the one I have referred to. To show that my people are in earnest in regard to this matter, I may mention the fact that we expend annually from half a million to a million dollars for our own defense over and above all this Government furnishes us. I do not think it is justice, I do not think it is honest for this Government to require us to do it. I appeal to the sense of justice and honesty of this Senate to come to the relief of that State, and give us that protection which the President himself has said in his message to this body he is unable to give; and I have asked it in this shape because it is a pressing exigency.

Mr. President, it is only necessary to say, and I suppose that I may be permitted to say, that from the beginning of this Congress the Texas representation in the Senate and in the House, acting in perfect concert, introduced a bill into the House providing for the protection of the Rio Grande, and from various causes that bill has not been perfected or sent to the Senate. I know of nothing which can give us relief promptly and efficiently, such as I think we are entitled to, as the increase I have asked here, which I believe to be right, just, and honest.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. I wish to insert the word "may" instead of "shall," so as to read "may be recruited," in the amendment of the Senator from Texas; and, where the word "kept" is used, to insert "as near as practicable" before "at that number."

Mr. MAXEY. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SARGENT. Let the whole amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment to the amendment is:

Provided, That the cavalry regiments may be recruited to one hundred men in each company and kept as near as practicable at that number; and a sufficient force of cavalry shall be employed in the defense of the Mexican and Indian frontier of Texas.

Mr. WEST. That is an increase of less than six hundred men.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. An amendment ought to be made in line 165, that I find is omitted in the printed bill. I move to strike out the word "hire" and insert "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which was section [9] 1, to strike out in the clause making appropriation "for transportation of the Army" the following words, from line 176 to line 182, $2,817,804.65, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the same purpose for the year ending June 30, 1874, which is hereby made available for the service of the year ending June 30, 1877, and to insert in lieu therof," $3,900,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, to strike out in the clause appropriating "for hire of quarters for officers on military duty," &c., the following words, from line 189 to line 200:

Eight hundred and seventy-seven thousand eight hundred and sixty-five dollars and fifty-two cents, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the same purpose for the year ending June 30, 1874, which is hereby made available for the service of the year ending June 30, 1877; and at all posts and stations where there are no public quarters, officers may be furnished with quarters in kind by the Quartermaster's Department, as now allowed by regulations: Provided, That the amount paid is not in excess of $12 per room per month.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

One million five hundred thousand dollars: Provided, That of this amount the sum of $200,000 may be used for the construction of military posts or depots at such points as may be selected by the Secretary of War; and all existing military posts the maintenance of which may be rendered unnecessary by the erection of new posts shall be abandoned as soon as practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, to strike out lines 208 to 222, as follows:

For hire of quarters for officers on military duty; hire of quarters for troops; of store-houses for the safe-keeping of military stores, offices, and of grounds for camps and summer cantonments, and for temporary frontier stations; for the construction of temporary huts and stables; and for repairing public buildings at established posts, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1871 and prior years, $73,144.82.

For purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery, and for Indian scouts, and for such infantry as may be mounted, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1871 and prior years, $28,397.58.

Mr. ALLISON. I will simply say these items are deficiencies for 1874, and the committee did not deem it proper to put them here.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, to strike out after "hospitals," in line 223, the words "$61,494.42, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the same purpose for the year ending June 30, 1874, which is hereby made available for the service of the year ending June 30, 1877," and to insert "$100,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For construction and repair of hospitals, $100,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee recommend an increase of $25,000 in that item.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, in the clause making appropriation for purchase and manufacture of clothing and camp and garrison equipage, and for preserving and repacking stock of clothing and camp and garrison equipage and materials on hand at the Philadelphia, Jeffersonville, and other depots of the Quartermaster's Department;" to strike out the following words from line 235 to line 241: "$383,221.21, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the same purpose for the year ending June 30, 1874, which is hereby made available for the service of the year ending June 30, 1877;" and to insert in lieu thereof "$500,000."

Mr. ALLISON. The committee recommend an increase there of $98,000. The unexpended balance amounts to $18,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, to strike out the following words in the clause making appropriation "for the pay of seventy superintendents of national cemeteries" from lines 244 to 250, "$42,000; which is hereby re-appropriated from the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $1,000,000 for head-stones for soldiers' graves under the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1874, approved March 3, 1873," and to insert in lieu thereof "$57,750;" so as to make the clause read:

For the pay of seventy superintendents of national cemeteries, $57,750.

Mr. ALLISON. I will explain the amendment briefly. Heretofore these superintendents have been paid under the pay of the Army; but the House for some reason transferred them to the Quartermaster's Department, and I believe with the consent of the Pay Department, and they re-appropriated the sum necessary to pay them out of an appropriation of 1874, which on the 1st of July will be covered into the Treasury. The committee thought it best to make an absolute appropriation of this sum, and let the unexpended balance under the appropriation of 1874 be covered into the Treasury on the 1st of July. The total amount of this unexpended balance is $534,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [9] 1, to strike out the following words in lines 252 to 263:

Which is hereby re-appropriated from the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $1,000,000 for head-stones for soldiers' graves, under the act approved March 3, 1873, being an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1874: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall provide for the care and maintenance of the national military cemeteries, and for this purpose shall submit an estimate with his annual estimates to Congress; and section 4876 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

So as to make the clause read:

For maintaining and improving national military cemeteries, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, line 267, to increase the appropriation "for all contingent expenses of the Army not provided for by other estimates, and embracing all branches of the military service, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War," from $50,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, in line 272, to increase the appropriation "for purchase of medical and hospital supplies, military care and treatment of officers and soldiers on detached duty, expenses of purveying depots, advertising, and other miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department," from $160,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, in line 298, to increase appropriation "for the ordnance service" from $100,000 to $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [9] 1, to increase the appropriation "for manufacture of metallic ammunition for small-arms" from $50,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations. The bill is still open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Shall they be concurred in in gross?

Mr. EATON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of concurrence.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MERRIMON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. PATTERSON, (when his name was called.) On this bill I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea," on this question.

The call of the roll was concluded.

Mr. WEST. Before the vote is announced I would suggest to some of those gentlemen who are equally paired that they be permitted to vote to make a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote lacks three of a quorum.

Mr. MERRIMON. At the request of gentlemen of the majority I will vote. On this question I vote nay.

Mr. ANTHONY. On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM;] but I reserved the right to vote in case my vote should be necessary to make a quorum. I did not suppose this would be considered a political question, but it seems to be so regarded by our friends on the other side. I have adopted their interpretation, but, exercising my right to vote to make a quorum, I vote yea.

Other Senators having voted——

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a quorum without me. I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. MERRIMON. If there is a quorum without my vote, I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without the Senator's vote there is not a quorum.

Mr. MERRIMON. Then let it stand.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, Maxey, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Paddock, Sargent, Sherman, Wadleigh, and West—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Key, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Stevenson, Whyte, and Withers—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Gordon, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wallace, Windom, and Wright—36.

So the amendments made as the Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had appointed the Hon. MILTON SAYLER, a Representative from the State of Ohio, Speaker pro tempore during the present temporary absence of Hon. M. C. KERR, Speaker.

The message also announced that the committee of conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having reported to the House that they were unable to agree, the House further insisted on their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate insisted upon by the Senate to the said bill, and asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER of Illinois, and Mr. JOHN A. KASSON of Iowa to be the managers of the further conference on the part of the House.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the river and harbor bill so called, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I have consulted the chairman and members of that committee, and the predicament of the bill is such that this seems the best disposition to be made of it. I will assign in brief the chief reasons.

Owing to four members of the Committee on Commerce being sent by the order of the Senate to Mississippi, and to the sickness of another member of the committee, which has constrained his absence for some time, it is now some weeks since the Committee on Commerce had a quorum of its members in the city. In the mean time two other members of the committee have felt constrained to leave the city, and that leaves but two members of the Committee on Commerce here now or to be here in time to make a formal report on the river and harbor bill. Being without the power to report the bill, the remaining members of the committee are unwilling to run the risk of accident or loss of the bill by longer delay, and therefore it seems to me the better way is to discharge the Committee on Commerce and refer it to the Committee on Appropriations, they being full in numbers and able to make formal report of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to know what becomes of all the amendments. Do they fall?

Mr. CONKLING. I move of course that the committee be discharged from the bill and all pending amendments, so that the whole subject will be formally and technically in charge of the Appropriation Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 3398) for the issue of coin, and for other purposes.

Mr. BOGY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I got up before the Senator from Missouri. I wish to make a motion that the Senate go into executive session.

Mr. BOGY. I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at six o'clock and nine minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 26, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m., and was called to order by Hon. MILTON SAYLER, Speaker pro tempore. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journals of Friday and Saturday last were read.

CORRECTION OF JOURNAL.

Mr. HURLBUT. I rise to a correction of the Journal. The managers of the conference on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the naval appropriation bill were read as the conferees on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal will be corrected accordingly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, in the Journal and RECORD of the proceedings on the sundry civil appropriation bill I am recorded as not having voted upon the amendment "to strike out the appropriation for the detection and punishment of crimes against the United States." I voted "no" upon that proposition, and desire to be so recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction will be made accordingly.

The Journal, as corrected, was approved.

NOTICE TO SENATE AND PRESIDENT.

Mr. KNOTT. I move the adoption of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SMALLS. I move the reference of that bill to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. LUTTRELL. If it is a claim, it had better go to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SMALLS. I should prefer it to go to the Committee of Claims, but I thought the proper reference was the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I will inform the gentleman that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have determined to send all such cases to the Committee of Claims, and this had better go there in the first instance.

Mr. SMALLS. Very well; I move its reference to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. KEHR. I ask that the bill may be read at length.

The bill was read at length, and is as follows:

Mr. KASSON. I ask that the joint resolution may be referred to the Committee on the Centennial Celebration.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest that the resolution be sent to the Committee on Appropriations as the committee most likely to know whether the time can be spared in the state of the public business.

Mr. KASSON. It may go to the Committee on the Centennial Celebration, with the understanding that that committee will consult with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well.

The bill (H. R. No. 2691) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 525) to extend the time for filing claims for additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, which expired by limitation on January 30, 1875, until July 1, 1880.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 686) supplementary to the present statutes in aid and defense of the rights of citizens, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the second call in the morning hour of Monday: the call of States and Territories for resolutions, at which time bills on leave may be introduced. The call rests with the State of Ohio.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. NEAL. I introduce the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, and demand the previous question on its passage.

Mr. KASSON. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

[A bill to repeal the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875.]

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order that no notice has been given. If I am not correct in that there is another point which I wish to make.

Mr. NEAL. Notice has been given. A notice was filed with the Clerk on the seventh or eighth of this month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the proper notice has been given by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL.]

Mr. KASSON. In that case, I rise to debate the bill, and it goes over under the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all; the previous question has been called on the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. And we are entitled to a vote on the question of sustaining the call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the bill must go over under the rule when a gentleman rises to debate it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] offered the bill he called the previous question on it. The rule of the House is that if the previous question be not sustained, then when a gentleman rises to debate the bill it goes over. I call for a vote on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. I make the further point on the question raised by the gentleman from Indiana that it is not in order to move to suspend the rules at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is not a motion to suspend the rules at all.

Mr. KASSON. I insist that when a gentleman rises to debate a bill introduced under this call it must go over, and it cannot go a step further at this stage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman mean to say that when the previous question has been called and a gentleman rises to debate the bill it must go over although the House has not decided on the call for the previous question?

Mr. KASSON. At any time before the reading of the bill I can rise to debate it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is for the House to refuse to second the previous question on the bill.

Mr. KASSON. You cannot evade the force of the rule in that particular. You do not propose to suspend the rules, and the rule is explicit that when a motion to introduce a bill on leave is made if any one rises to debate the bill it goes over and there is no previous question that can take precedence of that.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the previous question has been called. If it be not sustained, then if a gentleman rises to debate it the bill goes over; but, if the previous question be seconded, the bill is before the House for action.

Mr. KASSON. I refer to a decision on this subject as far back as 1840.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, there is no such decision.

Mr. KASSON. Let the rule be read. Unless my construction be right, the reservation for debate would have no effect whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. You can only rise to debate the bill in case the previous question is not seconded; that is the rule.

Mr. KASSON. That is the very point in dispute. I rise to debate it now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the gentleman is really fair about this matter. There can be no doubt about the parliamentary law. If the previous question is not sustained and any gentleman rises to debate the subject, it goes over; but if the previous question be sustained, the bill is before the House. There is not a shadow of doubt about the question of parliamentary law.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to speak to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana. I desire to state to the Chair that the uniform practice of the House has been——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the line of decisions which seems to the Chair to settle the question. If the previous question be not sustained, of course a proposition to debate the bill would require it to lie over; but, if the previous question be sustained, then it is before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The previous question may be moved on a resolution submitted under a call of the States, and thus prevent the debate which, under the rules, requires it to lie over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question, therefore, is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. The question is now upon seconding the previous question on the motion for leave to introduce the bill, and not on the bill itself.

Several MEMBERS. O, no!

The question was taken on seconding the demand for the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 62, noes 87.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KASSON and Mr. NEAL were appointed.

Mr. KASSON. I submit that this is not upon considering the bill, but upon a motion for leave to introduce it.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask that the bill be again read.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the precise question before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon seconding the demand for the previous question made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Upon the bill itself or upon its consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the question now is on seconding the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. Then if the previous question is not seconded, the bill will go over if any member rises to debate it?

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 100.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to debate the bill if it is before the House; but I would like to have that question settled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa rises to discuss the bill, and it goes over under the rule.

Mr. KASSON. As I understand the question, it was upon introducing the bill on leave. That is what under the rules I understood was what we were voting on.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill have had the same under consideration, and submit a report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
CHARLES FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.
LOT M. MORRILL,
WM. WINDOM,
ROBERT E. WITHERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. RANDALL, Mr. SPRINGER, and Mr. KASSON managers of the conference on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHITE. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw my motion temporarily.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has not yet expired, and the call still rests with the State of Ohio.

REPEAL OF THE RESUMPTION ACT.

Mr. SAVAGE. I submit a bill to repeal the third section of the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payment," approved January 15, 1875.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order that no notice has been given of that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is not before the House.

BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and upon it I call the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and they are hereby, instructed to report to the House immediately after the reading of the Journal on to-morrow, the 27th instant, a bill in reference to the legal-tender notes and the resumption of specie payments; that before the previous question shall be moved upon said bill so reported it shall be in order to submit a substitute for the whole bill, and the bill and substitute shall be the only business in order on that day after being reported, until the whole subject is disposed of or the bill is put on its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] calls the previous question upon the resolution just read.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. KASSON. My point of order is that this resolution proposes a change of the rules of the House, which cannot be done without one day's previous notice.

Mr. HOLMAN. The rules of the House require that notice shall be given of the introduction of a bill, but not of a simple resolution of the House. The only possible strength in the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is that the proposed resolution involves a change of the existing rules of the House. I am not aware that any rule of the House will be changed by the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. It proposes to make a special order, to the exclusion of all other business of the House, which cannot be done in this manner.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The rules of the House provide for an order of business of the House, and this resolution will interfere with that order of business.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not involve any change of the rules of the House, but merely a question of priority of business, and instructions to a committee of this House to make a report at a particular time. All questions of priority of business are uniformly settled by a vote of the majority of the House.

Mr. KASSON. You cannot make a special order, to the exclusion of other business, except by a suspension of the rules or by unanimous consent.

Mr. BANKS. In reply to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has said about determining the question of priority of business, allow me to say that no question of priority of business can arise except when two propositions are immediately before the House. When there is but one proposition before the House no question of priority of business can be raised between that and any other question not before the House; by no possibility under the rules of the House can a question of priority be raised between the two propositions.

Mr. KASSON. This is a proposition to make a certain subject a special order for to-morrow to the exclusion of all other business, which, under the rules of the House, cannot be done except by a suspension of the rules or by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] that the proposed resolution involves a change of the rules of the House.

Mr. BANKS. In addition allow me to say that a resolution to instruct a committee to report at a given time cannot be adopted except by a suspension of the rules or by unanimous consent. The rules require that the several committees of the House shall report in their turn when called. This resolution instructs the Committee on Banking and Currency to report at a given time whether called in its turn or not.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Committee on Banking and Currency are now authorized to report at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] is undoubtedly correct, except as to a committee authorized to report at any time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will modify my resolution so as to avoid the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us hear the resolution read as modified.

Mr. DENISON. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. EAMES. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 8, nays 180, not voting 101; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Hardenbergh, Hurlbut, Lewis, Luttrell, Meade, Southard, Jeremiah N. Williams, and Woodburn—8.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the vote,

Mr. BOONE stated that his colleague, Mr. BROWN, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, stated that his colleague, Mr. VAN VORHES, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. ATKINS stated that his colleague, Mr. YOUNG, was absent on account of sickness.

Mr. HUNTER stated that his colleague, Mr. CASON, was absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. MCMAHON stated that his colleagues, Mr. WALLING and Mr. POPPLETON, were both absent by leave of the House, and that if present they would vote in the negative.

Mr. WIKE stated that his colleague, Mr. BAGBY, was absent by order of the House in attendance on committee service.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

DISTRICT AFFAIRS.

Mr. LORD. If the morning hour has expired I move to proceed to the consideration of the Geneva award bill, which has precedence.

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCKNER. I am directed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to submit a report on District affairs, and to move that it be printed and recommitted. I also ask that the minority of the committee have leave to submit their views, and to have them ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. I now enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee was recommitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion will be entered.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the following resolution with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be, and they are hereby, authorized to print the testimony taken by said committee touching all matters under investigation before said committee.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOUISIANA AFFAIRS.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution authorizing the Committee on Federal Offices in New Orleans, Louisiana, to have testimony printed; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. GIBSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 134) authorizing and directing the President to appoint a commission to provide for the improvement of the navigation and commerce of the Mississippi River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SAMPSON. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is. The Chair was recognizing a few introductions by unanimous consent. If the gentleman from Iowa insists on his motion to suspend the rules, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. SAMPSON. I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia if it gives rise to no debate.

EDWARD O'M. CONDON.

Mr. FAULKNER. I rise to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs in regard to a matter which will not occupy the attention of the House but a few minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will submit his report, there being no objection.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back a joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) for the relief of Edward O'M. Condon, and to move concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the word "early," and insert in lieu thereof the words "pardon or;" so the resolution will read:

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to take such steps as in his judgment may tend to obtain the pardon or release of such Edward O'M. Condon from imprisonment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. SAMPSON. I move to suspend the rules and put the following joint resolution on its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution to provide for defraying temporarily the ordinary and necessary expenses of the public service.

Whereas the ordinary and necessary expenses of the public service in the various branches, comprising among others the expenses which especially pertain to the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, to the consular and diplomatic service, to the postal service, to the support of the Army and to the maintenance of the Navy, are generally met by annual appropriations which expire at the end of the current fiscal year; and whereas no public funds will be available to defray these expenses as the same shall accrue after that period unless appropriations shall have been previously made therefor by law; and whereas to avoid the great embarrassment of the public service that might otherwise ensue it is expedient to make provision for defraying temporarily such of these expenses as would be unprovided for in case some one of the usual annual appropriation bills designed to provide therefor should fail to be matured by the end of the fiscal year now current: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in case any of the following appropriation bills for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, shall not have passed by the commencement of such year, so that the funds to be appropriated thereby may then be available for expenditure, that is to say, the bill providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; the bill providing for the consular and diplomatic expenses; the bill providing for the service of the Post-Office Department; the bill providing for the support of the Army; and the bill providing for the naval service, the appropriation act for the current fiscal year corresponding in its general description and object to such appropriation bill shall extend to the fiscal year next ensuing until such appropriation bill is enacted and takes effect, to the end that the provisions of such appropriation act which apply to the ordinary and necessary expenses of the public service for the current fiscal year shall in like manner be applicable to similar expenses which may accrue during the period intervening between the end of the current fiscal year and the time when such appropriation bill for the next ensuing fiscal year shall be enacted and take effect.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be acted on at this time; there is no necessity for it.

Mr. HURLBUT. I hope that the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 103.

Mr. SAMPSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were ayes 20.

Mr. SAMPSON demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SAMPSON, and Mr. HARRIS of Virginia, were appointed.

The House again divided; and tellers reported ayes 43.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask that the resolution may be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 58, nays 113, not voting 118; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Bradley, Caswell, Conger, Crounse, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Donnell, Eames, Evans, Fort, Frye, Haralson, Hays, Hendee, Hubbell, Hunter, Hyman, Joyce, Ketcham, Kimball, Leavenworth, Lynch, McDill, Miller, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, William A. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Young—118.

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. VAN VORHES, who is absent by leave of the House. If he were here I would vote "no," and he would probably vote "ay."

WILLIAM A. WEBB.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the bill which I send to the desk to remove the legal and political disabilities of William A. Webb, of Virginia, be passed.

The bill was read. It removes from William A. Webb, of Virginia, all legal and political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill (H. R. No. 3791) was passed.

PONTON BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 336) to authorize the construction of a ponton bridge across the Mississippi River from some feasible point in La Crosse County, in the State of Wisconsin, to some feasible point in Houston County, in the State of Minnesota, and that the bill be passed.

The bill was read.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to say that this bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Commerce.

The rules were suspended (two thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

RELICS OF WAR OF 1812, STONINGTON, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. WAIT. I move that the rules be suspended and that the joint resolution which I send to the desk be passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there are now at the town of Stonington, in the State of Connecticut, two eighteen-pounder iron cannon and two eighteen-pounder traveling-carriages belonging to the same which were used for the defense of said town against the attack of British men-of-war in the war of 1812, and which cannon are highly prized by the inhabitants of said town as memorable relics of the bombardment of the town on the 18th day of August, 1814: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That said guns and gun-carriages be, and they hereby are, donated by the United States to the warden and burgesses of the borough of Stonington, to be owned and held by them and their successors in office; and permission is hereby given to said warden and burgesses to place the same on unoccupied land belonging to the United States at the end of the point, so called, in said town and borough of Stonington.

Mr. WAIT. I send to the desk, and desire to have read a letter and petition explanatory of the resolution.

Several MEMBERS. Let them be printed.

Mr. WAIT. Very well; I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The letter and petition are as follows:

STONINGTON, CONNECTICUT, June 24, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to forward you herewith a petition from over one hundred of our citizens irrespective of party or color, praying Congress to donate to this borough the two old guns that were used in the gallant fight for the defense of Stonington on the 10th of August, 1814.

An act of Congress was passed during the present session authorizing the sale of the old arsenal here, which order has been executed. Now, unless the Government will donate us the guns, they will be removed to the Watertown arsenal, greatly to the regret of every man, woman, and child in Stonington. To show how strong has been the attachment of our citizens for those historical relics, I will mention that the Government ordered them to be removed from here in 1836. Not a team could be secured in town to remove them. One, however, from out of town was secured and attached to the guns, and they were started from the arsenal toward the dock. But the whole populace were turned out under the command of Captain Jabez Holmes, the old gunner who trailed them on the enemy during the bombardment and who nailed the colors to the mast. The driver with his team were sent out of the town, and the assembled citizens, assisted by the women and children, applied themselves to the drag-ropes and tooks the guns back to the arsenal, old Captain Holmes riding astride the foremost gun.

We still hold the old flag that Captain Holmes nailed to the mast, and which was riddled by the enemy's shot, and we mean to keep it and nail it to the mast again if occasion requires it; and with your help we will try to stick to the old guns that returned the enemy's compliments.

We will feel under great obligations to you if you will draw the necessary resolutions donating the guns to the borough of Stonington and granting us permission to place them on the unoccupied Government land at the end of the point, where they may stand in honor of the brave men who used them with such telling effect in their gallant fight, and some of whom are still living and who will be thrice happy to have Congress grant our petition.

With very great respect, your most obedient servant,

GEO. D. STANTON, M. D.

Hon. JOHN T. WAIT.

To the honorable the House of Representatives of the United States:

Your petitioners, inhabitants of the borough of Stonington, in the State of Connecticut, would respectfully represent that there are in this borough two old eighteen-pounder iron cannon and two eighteen-pounder traveling carriages which were used for the defense of this town during the war of 1812, and which are about to be removed in consequence of the recent sale of the United States arsenal; and that said guns, by reason of past service, have ceased to be of value to the Government for purposes of defense, and that they are highly prized by our citizens as memorable relics of the bombardment of this town on the 10th of August, 1814.

Wherefore your petitioners respectfully request that the said guns and carriages be donated to the borough of Stonington, and your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) was passed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the preamble and resolution which I send to the desk be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there are now in California and the adjacent Pacific States about one hundred thousand Chinese and other persons of the Mongolian race; and whereas the said population is being increased at the rate of from eight hundred to one thousand a week; and whereas it is estimated that 90 per cent. of said immigration consists of coolies, peons, or persons held in similar conditions of obligation or bondage, having no sympathy and seeking no assimilation with the political, social, or religious elements of the people of said States; and whereas the above-recited facts are becoming the occasion of great complaint, uneasiness, and dissatisfaction in the communities more immediately affected thereby; and whereas the aforesaid character of immigration is not contemplated by the spirit of the Constitution or by the laws of the people of the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a committee of five members of this House be appointed to examine into this subject, with full powers in the premises, and that the same are hereby instructed to report to this House at its next session.

Resolved, That said committee shall have authority to employ a stenographer, and to send for persons and papers.

Mr. LUTTRELL. We simply desire that the people of the United States may know the condition of affairs in relation to the Chinese question on the Pacific coast.

The question being taken on suspending the rules and adopting the preamble and resolution, there were—ayes 37, noes 31; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is further count demanded?

Mr. LUTTRELL. I see an indisposition on the part of gentlemen to deal with this issue. I ask that the preamble and resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CLERICAL FORCE OF THE PENSION BUREAU.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the rules be suspended and that the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the present clerical force of the Pension Bureau by the appointment of so many clerks, not exceeding one hundred in number, of classes two and three as he may deem necessary to complete at the earliest practicable day the arrearage of work in the Pension Bureau, and that the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE. I do not desire to debate this question, but I ask that the correspondence which I send to the Clerk's desk may be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that it may be printed as part of my remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky knows that no debate can be had under a motion to suspend the rules.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 36, noes 77; no quorum voting.

So (further count not being demanded) the rules were not suspended, two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof.

BRANNIN, SUMMERS & CO.

Mr. HILL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3508) for the relief of Brannin, Summers & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky, and that it be put upon its passage. This is a bill which has been reported by two Committees of Ways and Means unanimously, and there can be no objection to it.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay Brannin, Summers & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky, the sum of $8,593.62, in gold, in full for duties paid by them in certain proceedings in rem, brought by the United States against certain sugars in the United States court for the district of Kentucky, alleged to have been fraudulently imported through the custom-house at New Orleans.

Mr. HILL. At the instance of the committee I ask to modify the bill by correcting a mistake accidentally made. I propose to strike out $8,593.62 and insert in lieu thereof $9,588.62.

There was no objection, and the bill was modified as stated.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] be permitted to make the report of the committee on the facts of this case.

Mr. HILL. The report is in writing.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent that the report may be read before we are called upon to vote on this bill.

Mr. FORT. I think the bill ought to go to the Calendar. I object.

Mr. HILL. It is on the Calendar. It was reported last session unanimously by the Committee of Ways and Means and was not passed. It has been reported again this year and has been placed on the Calendar.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

RECEIVER AT HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.

Mr. GAUSE. I offer the joint resolution which I send to the desk, and move that the rules be suspended and that the joint resolution be passed.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution to modify the order appointing a receiver at Hot Springs, Arkansas.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the order of the Court of Claims in the matter of appointing a receiver of the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas, under section 5 of the act of June 11, 1870, be, and the same is, so far modified as to suspend the collection of rents by said receiver until Congress shall direct by law what disposition shall be made of said reservation.

Mr. KASSON. That should go to a committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to this measure being urged under a suspension of the rules.

The question being taken, the rules were not suspended, two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.

Mr. GAUSE. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 136) to modify the order appointing a receiver at Hot Springs, Arkansas, was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR HORSES, ETC.

Mr. TERRY. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 2569) to revive the law and extend the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States.

I will state that the bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the military service of the United States under an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States,' approved March 3, 1849," and which expired by limitation on the 1st day of January, 1876, be, and the same is hereby, revived; and that all claims for horses or other property so lost or destroyed, filed in the proper Department after the 1st day of January, 1876, and before the passage of this act, shall be deemed to have been filed in due time, and shall be considered and decided without refiling.

Mr. CONGER. The words "other property" in that bill ought to defeat it.

Mr. DE BOLT. It is a revival of the old law which has been in force since 1849, in the very same words.

The question was taken, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

CITADEL AT CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SMALLS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the following preamble and resolution be adopted:

Whereas the Government of the United States has had possession and use for military purposes since March, 1865, of the building and grounds in the city of Charleston, South Carolina, known as the "Citadel," a valuable property belonging to the city of Charleston, South Carolina; and whereas no rent or compensation of any kind has been allowed the city of Charleston, South Carolina, for the use of said property; and whereas the city of Charleston, South Carolina, desires to recover possession of said property or to obtain a fair compensation for the use of the same: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House of all the facts connected with the possession and use of said property by the United States, what amount is justly due as rent therefor, and whether the interest of the United States requires the continued use of and possession of said property, and, if so, upon what terms the property can be rented or purchased.

The question was taken, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the resolution agreed to.

CLAIM OF CHOCTAW NATION.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I move to suspend the rules and that the substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 3463) for the relief of the Choctaw Nation of Indians, which I send to the Clerk's desk, be passed.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

A bill for the relief of the Choctaw Nation of Indians.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Choctaw Nation of Indians be, and hereby is, authorized to commence an action in the United States Court of Claims to recover whatever is due, if anything, to said nation from the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, of the 22d day of June, A. D. 1855; and said court is hereby clothed with jurisdiction to hear and determine said action, and shall render judgment for the amount which may be found due, if anything, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the 9th day of March, 1859; and said court shall be authorized, in the determination of such action, to go behind the treaty of 1855, and inquire into the merits of the Choctaw claim so far as the same may be affected by fraud in the making of any treaty with said tribe or ratifying the same, or in any negotiation or official correspondence relating to the same; or by any act of Congress or reports of Departments touching Indian affairs, or any previous settlements with or receipts executed by the duly-constituted authorities of said tribe; and either party may prosecute an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from such judgment, if such appeal be prayed within thirty days from the rendition thereof; and in the hearing and determination of said suit the said courts, or either of them, shall give said action precedence over other cases.

SEC. 2. The said action shall be commenced by a petition stating the facts on which said nation claims to recover and the amount of its claim; and said petition may be verified by either of the authorized delegates of said nation as to the existence of such facts; and no other statements need be contained in said petition or verification.

SEC. 3. That, if final judgment be rendered in favor of said nation, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the same being certified to him under the seal of the court rendering the same, shall pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the proper authorities of said nation, upon their requisition, so much of said judgment as they shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the just liabilities of the tribe to its individual members referred to in said treaty, such costs of suit and attorneys as may be allowed by the court, and shall retain the balance, if any, in trust for said nation, as provided in the thirteenth article of said treaty; or said Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, make such payment aforesaid, to the proper authorities aforesaid, by delivering to them any bonds of the United States which have been or may be authorized by law, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. And the payment of the judgment recovered under this act shall be held to be a full satisfaction of all claims arising under said eleventh and twelfth articles of said treaty; and in the event of a final decision in said courts against the Choctaws, such decision shall be a bar to the further prosecution of said claims.

Mr. HURLBUT. I make the point of order on that bill that it makes an appropriation and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to suspend the rules and pass the substitute for the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I would ask the gentleman to state how many millions there are in that bill?

Mr. RANDALL. "There are millions in it."

Mr. HOLMAN. About seven millions.

Mr. FORT. And it has been beaten two or three times in the House.

Mr. WILSHIRE. The amount due is the question to be submitted to the Court of Claims.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

ISSUE OF ARMS.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. I move that the rules be suspended and that the joint resolution (H. R. No. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms be passed.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause to be issued to the Territories, and the States bordering thereon, such arms as he may deem necessary for their protection: Provided, That such issues shall be from arms owned by the Government which have been superseded and no longer issued to the Army.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. I would state that this is for the protection of settlers on the frontier and its passage is urgently requested by the military authorities there.

Mr. GOODIN. General Sherman strongly urges it.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

BENJAMIN F. REYNOLDS.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds, and that the same be passed.

I would state that the bill only gives this soldier two and two-thirds of a months' pay.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to pay to Benjamin F. Reynolds, late captain of Company K, Forty-eighth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, out of any money appropriated or which may hereafter be appropriated for the pay of the Army, a sum equal to the pay and emoluments of a captain of infantry from the 1st day of March, 1864, to the 22d day of May, 1864.

Mr. SPARKS. I would state that this bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on War Claims and the report is at the Clerk's desk.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ALLEN EDDY.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill (H. R. No. 968) granting a pension to Allen Eddy, a soldier of the war of 1812, be passed with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Allen Eddy, a soldier of the war of 1812, with the same pension to which he would be entitled could he furnish the proof now required by law of his service for the full term of sixty days, to date from January 1, 1872.

The amendment was to add after the words "sixty days" the words "such pension."

Mr. HOLMAN. A bill for the relief of this party has already passed the House, and if it should pass the Senate of course this bill is unnecessary.

Mr. BRADLEY. He received his land warrant and served forty days.

Mr. RAINEY. I object to debate unless we can all be heard.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

RETRENCHMENT AND REFORM.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House retrenchment and reform are now matters of imperative necessity. It is not the mere cry of demagogues, but a problem demanding the attention and worthy the highest ability of the Representatives of the people. No party is fit to govern this country that cannot solve it. It is vain to look to executive officers for reform; their power and influence depend upon executive patronage, and while we grant they will squander. The Senate is neither by the theory of our system nor by its composition fitted for the task. This House alone has the constitutional power to perfect a radical reform. The Constitution provides that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. These provisions were designed to invest in this House the entire control over the public purse, the power of supply. This is invested in the House of Commons, and has been zealously guarded by it; it is a pearl beyond price, without which constitutional liberty in England would long since have fallen under the despotism of the Crown.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon suspending the rules and passing the resolution which has been read.

Mr. HURLBUT. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HURLBUT. There is a reference in the resolution to the Senate, which is forbidden by the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is frequently done on the floor.

Mr. HURLBUT. It is forbidden by the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CONGER. I make this point of order: There are some portions of the Constitution and some rules of parliamentary law that are not fully recited in that resolution. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays on suspending the rules and passing this resolution.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 18, noes 63.

So (one-fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 94, nays 35, not voting 130; as follows:

WM. S. STOKELEY, Mayor.

Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY,

Mr. MORTON. I suggest that that be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Secretary to read again enough of that to show what it refers to. We did not understand from the reading of it.

The communication was again read.

Mr. SHERMAN. They invite the whole Congress to go over and deliver this document.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the document, may I inquire, "Administrators of the United States Government?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands it is a document that has been here in the Senate Chamber as well as in the House of Representatives for the signatures of members of both Houses to be appended to it. Of the literal purport of the document the Chair is not now informed, but thinks it bears the names of all branches, the Executive and Cabinet, the legislative and judicial departments of the Government.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire from whom this communication comes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the mayor of the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. SHERMAN. I inquire if it speaks of a committee composed of both Houses?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read again; let us see just what it is.

The communication was read again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in answer to a Senate resolution of February 9, 1876, a statement of balances due to the United States from public officers and from other parties no longer in the public service which have accrued since January, 1830, have instructed me to report back the same adversely, except so far as refers to a condensed statement which contains a good deal of valuable information and which the committee think may well be printed. I will not ask a vote upon the adverse report in the absence of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] on whose motion the information was called for. I am quite confident that when he comes to examine this voluminous and expensive and utterly useless document, he will not desire that the Government shall go to the additional expense of $2,262 to print it.

It contains a list of all persons, including those not now in the public service, against whom there appears to be a balance on the books of the Treasury. In very many instances the balance is nominal, not real, sometimes so designated; in very many cases it arises out of misunderstanding between the disbursing officer and the accounting officers of the Treasury, which, when they come to be explained and adjusted, may be decided in favor of one party or the other. In very many instances it arises from balances due from officers of the Navy who have gone down with their ships with their papers upon them; officers of the Army who have fallen in battle or died in hospital and whose vouchers have been lost; while it is apparent from the supplies which they had purchased and from the men whom they had paid that the money intrusted to them had been expended for the purposes for which it was appropriated. According to the law these all appear upon the books of the Treasury as indebted for the unsettled balances; for, while the Treasury charges an officer with everything paid to him, it does not credit him with what he has paid out until it is ascertained and adjusted according to regulations of the Department. Many of these are charges for overpayments; that is, where an officer has erroneously paid to some creditor of the Government more than he was legally authorized to receive; and of course the disbursing officer must suffer the consequence of his error. That is a blunder, but it is not a crime. He has not embezzled the money; he has not defrauded the Government; he has made a mistake and paid a man a thousand dollars, for example, when it appears from all the information yet in the possession of the Treasury that he only ought to have paid him $990; and therefore he stands as a defaulter for $10 on the books of the Treasury. This may in many cases remain yet open for adjustment. I am sure that nobody wants to publish the names of such men, living and dead, as embezzlers and defaulters in any criminal sense.

The great defalcations, the criminal defalcations, are all known; they are all made public; they cannot be concealed without criminal complicity of the accounting officers. They are put in suit against the defaulters and against their bondsmen; and other cases are put in suit the results of which do not always show that the officer is a defaulter. There may be cases of honest differences of opinion between the officer and the Department as to the law, which are to be settled by the courts. A great many cases grew up before the present improved system of keeping the accounts, when disbursing officers who were also receiving officers, received the revenues of the Government, disbursed the expenses of their Departments, and turned over the balance to the Treasury. That system prevailed until it was reformed in our day, and under that system the result of every difference of opinion between a disbursing officer and the Department would stand as a defalcation against him. Some of these cases are so trifling that I have collated a few of them. Although I should not read the names of any persons who would suffer by it, I suppose the illustrious name of Washington Irving will not suffer if I say that he stands here as a defaulter to the amount of three cents! Here is another officer in the list whom I was instrumental, among others, in commending to the public service, in which he greatly distinguished himself. I shall hold myself responsible for his defalcation, principal and interest in gold. It amounts to one cent. I do not suppose anybody will think that Robert Walsh was an embezzler or defaulter to the Government, and yet he is put down for a small amount. Here I find an old colonel whom I knew well, who died in 1854, who is marked as a defaulter for $3.60.

Mr. President, I do not wish to impair the credit of the great banking house of this city, but I am bound to say that Corcoran & Riggs stand down here as defaulters under this call for information.

Mr. HAMLIN. What is the amount of that?

Mr. ANTHONY. Seventy-two dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask if the English bankers, Baring Brothers & Co., are there?

Mr. ANTHONY. Baring Brothers are down, and, worse than that, the English government itself is put down as a defaulter. As we have just settled nearly all our old difficulties with England and got into a new one, I do not wish to see the credit of that government impaired, and for its relief I must state that a marginal note reads: "The Secretary of State says he has no doubt this was settled long ago." It occurred in 1813, but it stands on the books as over $1,200 of default by the British government.

Mr. President, I might go over a great many illustrations of the same kind, but I have made quite sufficient to show that, while there are of course in the great operations of the Treasury many defaulters and many embezzlers, nothing could be more unjust than to mix them up with these persons who are marked in default in the Treasury, but who are not defaulters in any sense whatever, and probably do not owe the Government anything. Certainly it is not likely that Corcoran & Riggs, Baring Brothers, and the British government owe the Treasury anything.

The aggregate statement of the disbursements of the Treasury under the list is a paper exceedingly creditable to the American Government. I do not mean to any particular party, but to the financial history of the United States. There have been disbursed since 1834—I can hardly read such big figures—$13,936,870,072.05, of which is marked upon these books $22,263,000, being about half a million of dollars a year, and a great part of this is nominal, not real.

The losses on the $1,000 of disbursements were, in the administration of Jackson, $10.55; Van Buren, $21.15; Harrison and Tyler, $10.37; Polk, $8.34; Taylor and Fillmore, $7.64; Pierce, $5.86; Buchanan, $6.98; Lincoln, $1.41; Johnson, 48 cents; Grant, the first four years, 40 cents; the second four years, 26 cents—showing a constant decline, which is owing in a large degree to the improved manner of keeping the accounts; and that is due very largely to the Committees on Finance and Appropriations, who have introduced legislation here which has compelled much greater accuracy and responsibility. The average percentage of losses during this whole period on the disbursements is $1.59 on the thousand. I do not believe that the aggregate of any class of corporate or private business, banking, commercial, or any other kind, can show so small a percentage of loss as this, and it is gratifying that the percentage of loss is continually decreasing, coming down from $21.55 in the administration of Van Buren to an average of twenty-three cents on the thousand dollars or only about one-sixtieth as much under the present Administration. This is exclusive of the Post-Office, which administers its own revenue. In the Post-Office the loss has gone down from $11.18 on the $1,000 in Jackson's administration, and $26.19 in Van Buren's, to $1.59 for the first term of Grant and $1.01 for the second; with an average of $3.51 for the whole period. I move that this statement, which I think is creditable to the Government and to all parties, be printed; and that the adverse report of the Committee on Printing on the rest of the document lie over until the return of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. WITHERS. In justice to the Senator from West Virgina, under whose resolution the report was made which the Committee on Printing have reported against the printing of, I think it proper to state that he certainly never intended his resolution to parade before the country the names of such parties as have been read by the Senator from Rhode Island, his idea and object being to elicit information with regard to the number of bona fide defaulters to the Government; and the reductio ad absurdum which has been reached this morning through the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island I do not think is fairly applicable to the resolution which was presented by the Senator from West Virginia or to the information which was elicited thereby, his object being, as I say, to secure information as to the number and amount of bona fide defalcations which had occurred in the Government, and those and those only he desired to have printed. I say this in justice to him.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I desire to say is that the resolution of the Senator from West Virginia as originally offered would have called only for those defalcations that occurred under a republican administration, or was limited in point of time from 1865 to this period, and would have included the names of hundreds and thousands of soldiers who died on the field of battle with the very arms used in defense of their country charged to them, and which charges are yet on these books. So with officers of the Navy. The injustice of the resolution of my friend from West Virginia was that it confined itself to a particular period, during which a particular party was in power; and, therefore, it was extended back so as to embrace many administrations of many parties, different phases of our political life from 1834 to this time.

Now, when it comes before us I do not think that the Senator from West Virginia, or any Senator who looks over this list, would do the injustice to publish this list either from 1865 down or from 1834 down; but I did not object to this paper being prepared, because, if there is any defaulter, any man who really has appropriated with bad intent money of the Government of the United States which he has not paid over, he should be exposed. Here is a formidable list, and from that list those cases may be expurgated and published if necessary. As I said the other day, I should be willing to publish on the barn-doors all over this broad land the name of every man who has robbed the Government or betrayed the trust reposed in him by the Government of the United States; but it is manifest that in doing that we ought not to do injustice to the most virtuous, the most patriotic, and the best men in our land.

Mr. WITHERS. That is all that the Senator desired to accomplish, I have no doubt. I think he does not do it by printing such cases as are described.

Mr. SHERMAN. The difficulties will then be in making the expurgation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. When this subject was up in the first instance, on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia, I thought it a matter of sufficient importance to go to the Treasury Department and ascertain precisely what had been the amount of the defalcations there and at the Internal-Revenue Bureau, and I obtained similar results to those which have been read by the Senator from Rhode Island, but based on different dates and presented in a little different manner, but still in a manner of sufficient interest, I think, to warrant me in reading the two communications that I received at that time. First, I read from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 22, 1876.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your verbal request, made on Saturday last, to be furnished with a statement showing the defalcations of customs officers, I have the honor to inform you that the total amount of collections of revenue from customs from April 1, 1861, to June 30, 1875, amounted to $2,136,395,642.42. Total defalcations from March 4, 1861, to June 30, 1875, $355,534.27. The defalcation is 1-60 of 1 per cent. of the amount collected, or $1.60 in every $10,000.

I promised to send these figures to you on Saturday last, but found it impossible until the present moment to get them ready.

Very truly,

CHAS. F. CONANT.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

I also have a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., March 18, 1876.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to submit herewith the following statement taken from the books and records of this Office:

The total of internal-revenue tax returned by the various collectors of internal revenue during the period from September 1, 1862, to March 31, 1865, being from the organization of the internal system to the close of the month preceding the end of Mr. Lincoln's administration is $283,111,131; the ascertained "cash deficiencies" of collectors appointed during that period are $414,50e 10. o- about 13-100 of 1 per cent. of the amount collected. In the period from April 1, 1865, to February 28, 1869, being the period in even months covered by Mr. Johnson's administration, the collections were $817,068,305; ascertained cash deficiencies of collectors appointed in that period, $1,626,302.52, or about 2-10 of 1 per cent. of the amount collected. In the period from March 1, 1869, to February 29, 1876, being from the beginning of the present administration to the close of the last month, the collections are $854,808,237; ascertained cash deficiencies of collectors appointed in this period, $5,272,751.86, or about 69-1000 of 1 per cent. of the amount collected.

As the balances for the last period mentioned are of comparatively recent occurrence and are now in process of collection, it is believed that a large proportion of it will ultimately be recovered, so that the actual ultimate loss will be very much less than herein shown.

Respectfully,

D. D. PRATT,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. S. MORRILL,
United States Senate.

I think under the circumstances the present and past republican administrations since 1861 have no reason to feel ashamed of the exhibit.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I desire, in justice to the Secretary of the Treasury, who made this report, and in reply to the remarks of my friend from Virginia who seemed to think that the report had embodied information not called for by the Senate, to read the resolution, which is:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to furnish the Senate, as soon as practicable, a statement of all balances due to the United States from public officers, and all such balances due from other parties, (no longer in the public service,) distinguishing those whose accounts with the United States have been finally passed upon and adjudicated and those whose accounts are yet unsettled and subject to additional credits, stating the nature of such accounts and the credits in question; the statement to embrace the accounts of all such officers or parties in which such balances have respectively accrued since the 1st day of January, 1830, and to set forth respectively, and as near as practicable, the period over which the accounts extended and the amounts involved therein.

I do not see how, under that resolution, the Secretary of the Treasury could have done less than to send the communication which is before us; and, if it is information that is not needed, it is our fault in calling for it, not his in sending it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The chairman of the Committee on Printing asks that the report which he has submitted lie on the table and that the summary statement which he submits be printed. Is there objection to that? The Chair hears none, and the Senate so orders.

PAY OF RETIRED NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I am directed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 909) to correct an error in section 1588 of the Revised Statutes, to report it back without amendment; and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which amends section 1588 of the Revised Statutes by striking out, in the eleventh line, the word "sea," and restoring in place thereof the word "highest."

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to make this explanation: it relates to the pay of retired Navy officers. As the revision now stands—

The pay of all other officers on the retired list shall, when not on active duty, be equal to one-half the sea-pay provided by this chapter for the grade or rank held by them, respectively, at the time of their retirement.

The act from which the reviser undertook to copy this used the term "highest pay," and this is simply to restore that omission.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to suggest to my friend the Senator from Michigan that I doubt whether this is a proper way to amend a section of the Revised Statutes. I do not believe we ever ought to do it. He proposes to amend that section by striking out a certain word and inserting another. I think the only true way to amend a section of the statutes is to re enact it so as to have it to read as you propose it shall read now. Take this bill as he reports it, and it will be utterly impossible to tell what the law is without going back to the Revised Statutes and comparing the two and thus arriving at the meaning. I think the practice has been since the adoption of the Revised Statutes, and I think it is a practice we ought to adhere to, to re-enact the amended section precisely as we propose to have it, and not propose to amend a section by striking out one word and inserting another. I suggest that to him, and I think it would be better to adopt that course in this instance as well as in all others.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The only alteration made here is in a single word, and not quite that; it is but the half of one compound word. If the committee themselves had drawn the bill, they would very likely have drawn it according to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. I have no doubt myself that that is the best mode of amending sections of the Revised Statutes; but this is simply an obvious error in copying the statute in using the term "sea-pay" instead of "highest pay." The same words had been used in a previous part of the section, or in another law rather; and this was a mere blunder.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest that my friend's argument does not at all change the principle. You can change the entire sense and meaning of a statute by putting in three letters or three words. The objection to it is one of principle in the amendment of the statutes. I suggest to the Senator that it would be better to consent to amend the bill as it stands in the particulars suggested instead of introducing a dangerous precedent, or else to recall the report and have the matter amended in a proper form. I suggest that the matter be recommitted with that understanding. I do not want to interfere at all with my friend's measure; but I think it better to adhere to this as a matter of principle and rule.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I have not the slightest objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 945) granting a pension to Eunice Tripler; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADLEIGH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 946) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. There is very urgent necessity that the action upon that resolution should be immediate. Senators are familiar with the condition of affairs upon the western and northwestern frontier; that an Indian warfare is in progress, and that large extents of territory are already threatened. The military force is insufficient to protect the people in that locality. The Secretary of War is without authority to issue arms to the settlers for their defense and protection. There is in the various arsenals of the country a very large amount of arms and ammunition that have been superseded by subsequent manufactures and improvements, and it is necessary that this resolution should pass, in order to authorize the Secretary of War to issue certain numbers of these arms and certain amounts of this ammunition to the settlers on the frontier. I ask, therefore, that the Senate may concur in this resolution without the formality of a reference to a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause to be issued to the Territories and the States bordering thereon such arms as he may deem necessary for their protection: Provided, That such issues shall be from arms owned by the Government which have been superseded and no longer issued to the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know anything about this measure, but it seems to me there are no safeguards placed around it at all. It is just to issue arms without any limit as to price or number, and without any responsibility. I do not think that kind of a measure ought to pass.

Mr. PADDOCK. It seems to me that there can be no difficulty about that. Of course, if the arms are issued they will be issued in accordance with the present law, which is that they shall go to the governors of the States and Territories. It is only an additional amount to the quotas already allowed the different States and Territories under the present law.

Mr. LOGAN. This would apply to all the Territories.

Mr. PADDOCK. All the Territories have quotas now.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true; but they may have the full number of arms to which they are entitled.

Mr. PADDOCK. Their quota is a mere bagatelle. It amounts to nothing.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think a bill so carelessly drawn as this ought to pass, and I ask that it be referred to the committee. If it is proper that it should be passed, it can there be put in proper form, but it certainly is not now in a proper shape to pass.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not object to a reference.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know that I am opposed to it, but the bill is certainly so carelessly drawn that it ought not to pass as it is. There ought to be some safeguards thrown around it. I do not know that I shall have any objection to it, but I desire that it shall be in proper form if the arms are to be issued. I hope it will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS. The issuance of these arms and of this ammunition is confided to the discretion of the Secretary of War, and certainly it appears to me that this is a sufficient limitation and protection of the rights and interest of the Government. The necessity is very urgent and the Secretary is entirely without power to issue these arms, applications for which are daily made, unless this action is had. I trust the Senator from Illinois will withdraw his request for reference and allow it to pass, because it is certainly apparent that the Secretary of War will not issue the arms unnecessarily.

I may say in addition that upon a personal interview had with the General of the Army a day or two since he said that this was a matter of very great importance; and while, of course, it is not proper to use it as an argument, he thought it was essential that early action should be had.

Mr. LOGAN. If the General of the Army had so said to the Military Committee or to the Senate, then there would be something to base it on; but he has not so said. If either the General of the Army or the Secretary of War thinks this a proper proposition, let him communicate that opinion to the proper authority and not in private conversations. I do not know but that it is perfectly proper but it is not proper in that light; and therefore I ask that the measure be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. If there is any great urgency about it, the committee can report a proper bill promptly; but this is not a proper bill, not such a one as I can vote for.

Mr. INGALLS. As far as the question of etiquette is concerned, of course it is important that a matter of politeness should stand between the lives of settlers on the frontier and immediate action. Of course, I have no objection to make if it is a mere matter of etiquette.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not necessary for Senators to get their knives sharpened on every occasion.

Mr. INGALLS. The Indians have their knives sharpened.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not at all a matter of etiquette; there is no etiquette about it. I only said that which is perfectly proper. If the General of the Army or the Secretary of War has any communication to make he should make it to Congress, and not in private conversations to individuals. That is what I said, and I repeat it. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the committee.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds;

A bill (H. R. No. 2569) to revive the law and extend the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 134) donating cannon and carriages to the warden and burgesses of Stonington, Connecticut.

The bill (H. R. No. 3508) for the relief of Brannin, Summers & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SENATE MANUAL.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk be directed to prepare a new edition of the Manual, and that one thousand copies of the same be printed for the use of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 784) for the relief of Enoch Totten, administrator of the estate of William A. Lloyd, deceased.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to call up the unfinished business of yesterday's morning hour. I think that is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. INGALLS. I think that I am not mistaken in saying that it was the understanding of the Senate yesterday when the bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was recommitted that it was to be reported this morning, after printing, and considered in the morning hour. The matter is one of very great importance, and I think that the Senator from Alabama, the chairman of the committee, is right in asking that it be considered now, and I shall certainly further him with my best efforts and trust the Senate will do the same. I have no objection to the bill offered by the Senator from Iowa; but he is aware that this is very pressing. This is the 27th day of June; the fiscal year expires on the 30th. We ought to have immediate action.

Mr. WRIGHT. I was not present yesterday morning. If there was any such understanding, I will not interfere with it.

Mr. WEST. There was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that was the understanding.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have no wish to interfere with any understanding of the Senate. I knew it would not stand over, as a matter of course; but if that was the understanding, I shall not interfere. I withdraw my motion.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I rise to present the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, submitted the following report; which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

LOT M. MORRILL,
WM. WINDOM,
ROBERT E. WITHERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
CHARLES FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have the action of the House read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the action of the House.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 26, 1876.

The committee of conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having reported that they were unable to agree,

Resolved, That the House further insist on their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, insisted on by the Senate, to the said bill, and ask a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER of Illinois, and Mr. JOHN A. KASSON of Iowa, be managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, on the motion that the Senate insist, and agree to the further conference asked by the House, I had better perhaps make an observation or two, so that the Senate may understand the predicament in which Congress stands upon this question.

It will be remembered, perhaps, that the chief disagreement between the two Houses on this bill resolves itself into two propositions, and the whole action on the bill in both branches ranges under those two distinct propositions. Outside of those there is very little difference of opinion between the two branches, as I understand. Therefore, if we comprehend precisely the two propositions, we shall see the difficulty and embarrassments under which the two branches are laboring. The two propositions are these: first, the general reduction of salaries on a scale of a certain percentage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A universal application of one scale?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. A pretty universal application as to this particular bill, which embraces all the civil service applicable to the several Executive Departments of the Government. Of course, that does not embrace those salaries which are beyond the reach of legislation. That was the first proposition in the bill, because the first amendment in the bill touches the question of salaries. The action of the Senate was to non-concur with the House in that respect.

The other distinct proposition was a general reduction of force, or a reduction touching the numerical force of the Departments applicable to the clerks and to the chiefs of divisions in some respects and to various employés. On that question the action of the Senate was to concur with the House to a certain extent, to concur in part, and non-concur in part.

So, then, the distinct propositions before the conference representing the two Houses were first the salaries, and second the reduction of the numerical force; and of course the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, representing the Senate, would insist upon non-concurring with the House on the question of salaries, while upon the question of the reduction of the civil list the Senate committee must meet the House upon the ground of concessions.

That there might be no misapprehension about it, the respective committees reduced their propositions to writing, so that the differences between them should be distinctly understood; and this is the proposition submitted by the committee of conference on the part of the Senate:

The committee of conference on the part of the Senate will recommend concurrence with the House in the exercise of its discretion in the reduction of salaries which are matters of appropriation simply, and to insist on the amendments of the Senate as a legal obligation as to those salaries which have been established by acts of Congress.

And as to the reduction of the civil list proposed by the House, they will carefully re-examine the bill with a view to concurrence in the utmost reduction that can be made consistent with the absolute demands of the public service.

To that the House conference committee replied with this proposition:

That in reviewing any of the salaries of the clerks and employés of the Departments we should review all, and such a general adjustment of the same, having in view the work respectively performed, giving preference of exception from reduction all salaries of $1,200 and under.

And then a further statement in the way of exception as follows:

On the matter of the pay of clerks of the different grades, the House submits as follows:

That the pay of clerks of class one shall be $1,200.

That remains.

Of class two, $1,350; of class three, $1,550; of class four, $1,700. And the pay of all chiefs of divisions in all the Auditors' Offices, in the Register's Office, and other chiefs of like grade, $1,800.

That reduces them from $2,400 to $1,800.

Pay of chiefs of division in the Comptrollers' Offices, and like grades, $2,000.

Ten per cent. reduction in all other salaries except the Secretaries, and those of $1,200 and under.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why did they except the Secretaries?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Precisely; why they did not include the Secretaries I am perhaps not to be called upon to say. That I prefer the House of Representatives should state for themselves.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask the chairman if in the proposition made by the House committee there is not a greater reduction than was proposed by the House in the original bill as a rule?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is different from the reduction that was sent to the Senate in the original bill, but I cannot speak with any accuracy as to what its relation is to the reduction proposed in the bill.

The Senate are now in possession, I believe, of the propositions as between the two committees of conference, and that gives the Senate

I suppose an apprehension, to say the least of it, of the attitude of the parties.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire whether the Senate are to understand that the House conferees occupy the attitude of saying that they will not appropriate any money to carry out existing law unless the Senate will agree to make a new law upon the subject for the future and for the present?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Well, I should not wish to undertake to say precisely what the House would like to be understood on that subject; but I have no hesitation in drawing the inferences which seem to me apparent. It will be seen that by the proposition of the Senate, which is not specifically replied to by the House, on the second point the Senate puts itself in the attitude of conferring on the question of reducing the civil list with a view of making all proper reductions, on the ground that that is not a fixed quantity, that we have been in the habit of increasing the civil list from time to time, and that that is an open question about which our House may exercise its discretion without the obligation of any law behind either; and therefore the Senate proposes to meet the House upon that ground, and agree by such mutual concession as they believe is consistent with the public service. That is that proposition, and the House do not disagree to it; but when you come to the question of salaries, covering the whole range of salaries, it will be remembered that those established by law in 1854 embrace a very large proportion of the whole salaries, those of the first, second, third, and fourth-class clerks, and also the chief clerks of Bureaus and Departments. Those salaries were established in 1854. There have been additions from time to time since to the public service; but the bulk of the clerical salaries stand upon that exact ground; and that is the law obtaining in regard to the mass of the civil list. The exceptions are in the new service which has been added since and in the new arrangement of the Treasury, where we have created chiefs of divisions to superintend a larger and more extended service. These are the exceptions, and they are exceptions to the general rule as to their numerical relation to the service.

Therefore I do understand that the House of Representatives hold the attitude of standing against the Senate with the right to reduce, or at any rate with the right to propose a reduction as to salaries, which nobody can deny that they have the right to propose; but they do maintain the attitude of impressing upon the Senate—I will not use any stronger term than that, I will not say forcing on the Senate—the consideration of the reduction of salaries, notwithstanding they are the obligation of the law. I would use no word which would imply that the House of Representatives intended to insist absolutely, or adhere in other words, which would shut out of course all further conference; because it is apparent that they have not taken any such ground as that, from the very fact that in reporting this disagreement they ask for a further conference.

Then, Mr. President, I reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont, that as to the precise meaning of the action of the House of Representatives I do not feel called upon to express any opinion as to what they intend; Senators must judge from their action, which I have endeavored to make as explicit and as plain as I could to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I correctly understand it, the present apparent attitude of the two Houses is that the House of Representatives says that it will not appropriate any money to pay the salaries that the law makes due to those who legally hold office under the United States, unless the Senate will agree to change the law as it now stands in respect to those salaries so as to make them less. That is the practical position, whether the House have said it or not. Now what I wish to say is that it appears to me that the two Houses of Congress are bodies that are co-ordinate and that they have equal powers, and that neither has a right to insist upon a condition against the other that the other has not a right in like manner to insist upon against the first. So, then, if it be constitutionally correct that the House of Representatives may say that it will not appropriate any money at all to pay the officers of the Government the salaries that the law entitles them to have unless the Senate will make a new law for a different salary, then the Senate by the same rule may say that it will not pass an appropriation bill at all unless the House of Representatives will agree to some fresh legislation that it proposes; as if we were to say upon this bill that we would not pass it at all unless the House of Representatives would agree to increase salaries or pass the bill that passed the Senate the other day independently, as an amendment to this that the laws enforcing the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution in accordance with the judgment of the Supreme Court should also be put on and passed by the House. Now the question is whether either House can stand upon such a doctrine as that.

It seems to me, if that be the doctrine, that the mere statement of it shows how utterly untenable it is, and how entirely destructive it is of the principles upon which this Government is founded and of the Constitution itself. Of course, it is perfectly plain that the Senate cannot compel, and has no right to insist in the legal sense that the House of Representatives shall appropriate a dollar for any object of public service. If the House of Representatives does not choose to appropriate any money at all for the salaries of the civil officers of the Government, or to support the Army, or the Navy, or the judiciary, the Senate cannot help it; it is not our responsibility; it is theirs. We have no means either constitutional or moral to apply to them; they are absolutely independent; and, as far as I understand it, we occupy exactly the same attitude. So the question ultimately appears to be reduced to this: whether either House shall refuse to carry on the Government as it is unless the other House will agree to something that it does not believe to be right in making fresh provisions of law.

I cannot imagine, Mr. President, when we have a fresh conference and get down to what appears to be the real point, that there can be any difficulty in solving it. When you come to other branches of the service, other questions, where the appropriation of public money depends upon the discretion of Congress, so to speak, we have no right to ask the House of Representatives to appropriate a dollar more than in their reconsidered judgment they think to be right. Therefore, if they appropriate so little that one-half the force that depends upon appropriations has to be discharged or all of it, and they feel bound to insist upon that, we have nothing to say but to concur, just as the chairman of the committee has said in respect to these indefinite and elastic appropriations, depending upon discretion and not on an obligation to carry on the Government. We cannot compel them to do anything; we must take what they give. And here I may say in respect of salaries that while they do not ask us to change the law, if the salary of the President of the United States being $50,000 a year, they only choose to appropriate $10,000 and are unwilling to appropriate more, I think we are bound to take the $10,000 and leave the responsibility with them; because we have done all that we can to carry out the law, as far as it is possible to induce the House of Representatives to agree to carry it out. True, that leaves a deficiency of $40,000; but we cannot help that.

Then I should hope, I cannot doubt, that when the thing comes to be considered on its real bearings, neither House will take the novel attitude of insisting that the other shall make a change in the law as the price of an appropriation that the law requires to carry on the Government.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator will perceive that in the first proposition, as to those salaries which exist by appropriations simply, the Senate committee do not say there is any legal or binding obligation; they are entirely open to the discretion of either House whether to continue the appropriation at all or to continue it in part.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly. I entirely concur with what the chairman of the committee has said, and add the small value of my commendation and thanks to the action of our committee. I think they have presented the proposition in its correct attitude.

Mr. CONKLING. May I be allowed to ask a question? The Senator from Maine spoke of "salaries not within the reach of legislation." I am not sure that I know what he means. Does he refer to judicial salaries?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I refer, of course, to the salaries of the judiciary, and I suppose that of the President is in the same position.

Mr. CONKLING. Shall I understand the chairman that the proposition of the House is that as to all salaries within the domain of legislative control, they propose a certain and even percentage of reduction?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is, I think, apparent from the proposition which I have read. I will read it again if the Senator has any doubt about it.

* Ten per cent. reduction in all other salaries except the Secretaries and those of $1,200 and under.

That is to say, as to the first-class clerks, the $1,200 clerks, they are not touched at all; and so those under that, which are employés, they are to be reached by the provision. But the second-class clerks, $1,400, are reduced to $1,350; and so the third class, the $1,600 clerks, are reduced to $1,550, and the fourth class from $1,800 to $1,700. So the ten-per-cent. rule does not apply with entire accuracy to the clerks, but it does to all other salaries.

Mr. CONKLING. All the higher salaries?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. To all the higher salaries the rule of 10 per cent. does apply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the further conference.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to say one word in regard to some of these salaries of clerks, and my observations will apply also to those of some other officers. So far as the clerks are concerned, it is a matter into which I have looked somewhat, and I am satisfied that there is no class of public servants who are more poorly paid for the amount of labor done than the clerks in our various Departments When we consider that their salaries in most cases were fixed by the law of 1854, long before the war, and in 1860 when payments were made in gold or what was equivalent to gold, and that the expenses of living are much greater now and that these salaries are paid in greenbacks, at least 12 per cent. below the value of gold, the proposition strikes me as exceedingly unjust to cut down those salaries, fixed prior to the war, payable in gold, when it cost less to live than it does now; and the injustice of it is so apparent to my own mind that as one Senator here I will say to the committee of conference that I hope they never will agree to these reductions.

Is there any sincerity in these reductions? Consider where they come from; consider who was in power in 1854 and in 1860. If it is right now to reduce, then it was wrong to have fixed the salaries at the sum they were fixed at at that time; they should have been much lower then. And yet who fixed them? Those who seek now to lower them when every consideration would require their being raised if they were properly fixed at the time they were fixed. The proposition is simply absurd; it is all wrong.

Now if any party or any body of men think they can make any cheap popularity by taking a course of that kind, I am for allowing them an open field. For myself I seek none of that kind of popularity which comes from attempts of this kind. I hope therefore the committee will never yield that principle.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the request of the House of Representatives for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee.

Messrs. MORRILL of Maine, ALLISON, and NORWOOD were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. SPENCER. I hardly think there is any necessity for reading the amendment, as it only re-enacts the old statute with some alterations such as are necessary and have been fully explained to the Senate, as to the change of dates and the like. It is on every Senator's desk printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the bill been read through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been, but not this printed amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was it not read yesterday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Partly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make no call for the reading.

Mr. SPENCER. It is the old law of last year re-enacted with amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does this print show wherein it differs from the law of 1875?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. SPENCER. I will send to the Clerk's desk a brief memorandum showing every change, which, if the Senator from Vermont desires, can be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Secretary had better read the amendment through in the regular way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute of the Committee on the District of Columbia will be reported.

Mr. BOGY. I will state that the silver bill was set for to-day at one o'clock; but knowing how important it is that this measure should be disposed of as soon as possible, I will agree to let this bill go on with the understanding that when it is through the silver bill shall come up. I know it is important that this matter be acted on one way or the other to-day. With that understanding I am willing that we shall go on with this bill, and will not ask for the order of the day at this moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about announcing that the morning hour had expired; but on the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, if there be no objection on the part of the Senate, the consideration of this bill will be continued.

Mr. SHERMAN. Subject to objection at any time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to a call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be according to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont.

The Chief Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, there shall be levied upon all real and personal property in said District, excepting only the real and personal property of the United States and that hereinafter stated, a tax of $1.50 on each $100.

SEC. 2. That the amount collected under the provisions of this act shall be distributed for the purposes required under the various acts in force in the District of Columbia, upon a just and fair apportionment, to be made by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office: Provided, That before any of said fund shall be expended said apportionment shall be established and published by said commissioners at least six times consecutively in a daily newspaper of the District of Columbia; and said published apportionment shall stand as the law for the distribution of the funds herein mentioned: Provided further, That deficiencies in any of said funds enumerated in said apportionment may be supplied from any surplus in either of said funds so apportioned; but, unless a surplus exists, the revenues belonging to one fund shall not be applied to the purposes of any other fund.

SEC. 3. That one-half of the tax levied by this act upon real and personal property shall become due and payable on the 1st day of December, 1876, and the other one-half of such tax shall become due and payable on the 1st day of June, 1877; and in every case where the tax levied by this act shall be paid in installments as herein authorized, each of said payments shall be deemed to have been made on the several funds and for the different purposes indicated in the second section of this act; and an equal pro rata proportion of the payments so made shall be carried to the credit of the respective funds.

SEC. 4. That if one-half of the tax herein levied upon the real and personal property taxed by this act shall not be paid before the 1st day of December, 1876, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent; and there shall be added, to be collected with such taxes, a penalty of 2 per cent. upon the amount thereof on the first day of each succeeding month until payment of said installment and penalty. And if said installment shall not be paid before the 1st day of June, 1877, together with the one-half of said original tax due before said 1st day of June, a like penalty shall be added on said last one half of such tax; and the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax on such part or parcel of land, to be dealt with and collected in the manner prescribed by law.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the collector of taxes in said District to prepare a complete list of all taxes, on real property upon which the same are assessed, in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1877; and he shall, within ten days thereafter, publish the same, with a notice of sale, in the regular issue of a daily newspaper published in said District, to be designated by the commissioners of the District or their successors in office as hereinafter provided, once a week for three successive weeks, giving notice that if said taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale, the property will be sold by the said collector at public auction, at the south front of the court-house in the city of Washington, on the second Tuesday of August following, between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon of said day to the highest bidder or bidders. Upon the day specified aforesaid, the collector shall proceed to sell any and all property upon which such taxes remain unpaid, and continue to sell the same every day until all the real property as aforesaid shall have been brought to auction. Immediately after the close of the sale, upon payment of the purchase-money he shall issue to the purchaser a certificate of sale; and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner thereof within two years from the day of sale, by payment to the collector of said District, for the use of the legal holder of the certificate of the amount for which it was sold at such sale, and 15 per cent. per annum thereon, a deed thereof shall be given by the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, to the purchaser at the tax sale, or the assignee of such certificate, which deed shall be admitted and held to be a good and perfect title in fee-simple to any property bought at any sale herein authorized: Provided, That no property advertised as aforesaid shall be sold upon any bids not sufficient to meet the amounts of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid upon any property is not sufficient to meet the taxes, penalty, and costs thereon, said property shall thereupon be bid off by the said commissioners, or their successors in office, in the name of the District of Columbia; and if within two years thereafter such property is not redeemed by the owner or owners thereof, by the payment of the taxes, penalties, and costs due at the time of the offer of the sale, and 10 per cent. per annum thereon, a deed for said property shall be made to said District, as in cases of individual purchasers: And provided also, That minors or other persons under legal disability be allowed one year after such minors coming to, or being of, full age, or after the removal of such legal disability, to redeem the property so sold, or of which the title has, as aforesaid, become vested in the District of Columbia, from the purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their heirs or assigns, or from the District of Columbia, on payment of the amount of purchase-money so paid therefor, with 10 per cent. per annum interest thereon as aforesaid, and all taxes and assessments that have been paid thereon by the purchaser, or his assigns, between the day of sale and the period of such redemption, 10 per cent. per annum interest on the amount of such taxes and assessments, and also the value of improvements which may have been made or erected on such property by the purchaser or by the District of Columbia, while the same was in his, her, or their, or its possession.

SEC. 6. That the collector of taxes, immediately after he shall have made sale of any property as aforesaid, shall file with the comptroller a written report, in which he shall give a statement of the property advertised and the property sold, to whom it was assessed, the taxes due, to whom sold, the amount paid, the date of sale, the cost thereof, and the surplus, if any, and the lands so as aforesaid sold to the District. Any surplus remaining, after collection of taxes, penalties, and costs on any real estate, shall be deposited by the collector of taxes to the credit of the surplus fund, to be paid to the owner or owners, or their legal representatives, in the same manner as other payments made by the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That when the installment of one-half of the taxes on personal property so as aforesaid due and payable before the 1st day of December, 1876, shall not be paid before said date, or when the remaining installment shall not be paid before the 1st day of June, 1877, then, and in either such event, the collector of taxes may distrain sufficient goods and chattels found within said District, and belonging to the person, persons, association, firm, or corporation charged with such tax, to pay the taxes remaining due under the provisions of this law from such person, firm, association, or corporation, together with the penalty thereon and the costs that may accrue; and thereupon said collector shall immediately proceed to advertise the same, by public notices posted in front of the court-house and in the office of said collector, and by advertisement three times for one week in some daily newspaper published in said District, as hereinafter provided, stating the time when and the place where such property shall be sold, the last publication to be at least six days before the day of sale; and if the taxes and penalty thereon for which such property shall have been distrained, and the costs and expense which shall have accrued thereon, shall not be paid before the day fixed for such sale, which shall be not less than ten days after the taking of such property, the collector shall proceed to sell, at public auction, in front of the court-house, to the highest bidder, such property, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to pay said taxes, penalty, and accrued costs and expense of such distraint and sale. The collector of taxes shall be allowed, for making such distress and sale, the same fees as are now by law allowed to the marshal of said District for making levy and sale of property under execution. Said collector shall report in detail every such distress and sale, in writing, to the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office; and his accounts, in respect of every such distress or sale, shall forthwith be submitted by him to the accounting officers of the District and audited by them. Any surplus resulting from such sale shall be paid into the treasury of the District, and, upon being claimed by the owner or owners of the goods and chattels, shall be paid to him.

SEC. 8. That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following and no other, namely: First, buildings devoted to art, free public library buildings, and churches and grounds actually occupied by such buildings; secondly, houses for the reformation of offenders, alms-houses, buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity, houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers, cemeteries dedicated and used solely for burial purposes and without private income or profit; but if any portion of any said building, house, grounds, or cemetery so in terms excepted is larger than is reasonably needed and actually used for its legitimate purpose and none other, or is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed against the owner of said building or grounds; thirdly, such property as is now exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States; fourthly, goods, chattels, and other personal property owned by persons domiciled in said District, but whose legal residence is out of said District, and which property is taxed elsewhere; fifthly, the stock (so far as the individual owner is concerned) of any corporation which is taxed on its capital in said District; sixthly, all property exempt by law from execution, including all libraries or books in use and not held for sale, not over the value of $500, and all household, store, shop, or office furniture, or tools, not held for sale, not over the value of $500.

SEC. 9. That from the assessed value of the credits only of any person there shall be deducted the amount of any valid and bona fide debt or debts, which any such person shall individually and absolutely owe, upon the same being established by the affidavit of such person claiming deduction as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 10. That the commissioners of said District, or their successors in office, shall cause to be prepared a printed blank schedule of personal property, including bonds, deeds of trust, mortgages, credits, and all other choses in action or possession owned or held in trust or otherwise subject to taxation under the provisions of this act, together with deductions claimed, to which shall be appended an affidavit in blank setting forth that the foregoing presents a full and true statement of all the personal property, bonds, deeds of trust, mortgages, credits, and all other choses in action or possession subject to taxation, together with the amount of indebtedness on account of which deductions are claimed; and the assessors provided for in this act, or other person designated by the commissioners of the District, shall deliver to each person, or leave the same at his residence or known place of business, one of said blanks, and also to the proper officer of each corporation, and to each guardian, executor, administrator, or firm, and the person to whom addressed shall fill up the same, and make and sign the affidavit to the truth thereof as aforesaid before one of the said assessors, who is hereby authorized to administer such oath without charge, or before any person authorized by law to administer oaths; and thereupon said assessor shall assess such property at its fair cash value, and enter the same in a column upon said blank to be provided for that purpose, and the amount thus ascertained, after making the deductions provided for in this act, shall be entered upon the books for taxation: Provided, That if any person, firm, or corporation shall fail to make the list of his or its said property as in this section provided for, the assessor shall from the best information he can procure make an assessment against such person, firm, or corporation, to which he shall add 50 per cent. thereof, and the person so refusing shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, to which may be added imprisonment not exceeding thirty days: And provided further, That if any person shall make a false affidavit touching the matters herein provided for he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties for that offense now provided by law; and if the return provided for in this act shall not be made by any firm, each member thereof, resident of said District, shall be liable to the penalties of this act.

SEC. 11. That the capital stock of all corporations in said District (not herein exempted) shall be appraised in bulk by the assessors, and the corporation issuing the same shall be liable for the tax thereon according to such value; but from the appraised value of the stock shall be first deducted the value of any real estate of said corporation in said District, which shall be separately taxed against said corporation.

SEC. 12. That the assessment of real property made under the provisions of the act of Congress, entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, is hereby ratified and approved as the assessment, except as hereinafter modified, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, shall appoint five competent persons to be assessors, and to hold office for the term of one year, the salary of each of said assessors to be $750 per annum. Said assessors shall, before the 1st day of October, 1876, under the direction of the superintendent of assessments and taxes of said District, assess the value of all the real property not embraced in the assessment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, inclusive of all buildings erected, improved, or enlarged, and not heretofore taxed, and all personal property in said District liable to taxation thereunder, and shall state the same separately in books to be kept in a systematic manner; and such value for taxation shall be the true value, in the lawful money of the United States, of the property so assessed. The assessed value shall have reference to the date of the 1st day of June, 1876, or, in the case of stock in trade, shall be the average value of the stock of merchandise or other articles kept on hand during the year ending June 30, 1876. Said assessors shall, between the 1st day of September, 1876, and the 20th day of September, 1876, hold daily sessions for the purpose of equalizing the assessments theretofore made by them, and for the purpose of hearing and determining any and all appeals from the valuations theretofore made by them. Each assessor shall, at the meetings of the assessors as aforesaid, make full and detailed reports of his acts as such assessor. And during said period they shall have power to revise assessments theretofore made by them, or any of them, or by their predecessors in office, appointed under the act of March 3, 1875, by either justly increasing or justly diminishing any particular assessment. Upon the assessment so as aforesaid made and finally revised, the tax hereinbefore provided for shall be levied, and the collector of taxes shall be in readiness to receive payment of the same on and after the 1st day of November, 1876. Said assessors, before entering upon their duties, shall respectively take or subscribe an oath or affirmation, before any officer authorized to administer oaths or affirmations in said District, to faithfully discharge the duties of their said office; which oaths, when taken, shall be certified by the persons before whom the same shall have been taken, and shall be filed with the commissioners of the District.

SEC. 13. That the treasurer of the District, upon receiving any moneys, shall forthwith deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States; and said moneys thus deposited shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States only in such sums and at such times as the same shall be actually required, and only for the expenditures authorized by law, and only upon warrants of the accounting officers of the District, issued under the direction of the commissioners of the District or their successors in office.

SEC. 14. That the commissioners of the District or their successors in office are hereby authorized to reduce, adjust, and equalize the pay or salaries of all officers or employés payable from the funds of the District government in whole or in part: Provided, however, That the aggregate sum of pay and salaries shall not be increased beyond the present aggregate amount of pay and salaries.

SEC. 15. That the third section of the act of the legislative assembly of the District of Columbia entitled "An act prescribing the mode of assessment for special improvements, and providing for the collection thereof," approved August 10, 1871, shall be, and is hereby, amended so that the sales under said law shall be advertised twice a week for three successive weeks, instead of as heretofore required.

SEC. 16. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the commissioners of the sinking fund of said District shall destroy by burning all bonds, sewer certificates, and other obligations of every kind of the city of Washington, the city of Georgetown, or the District of Columbia whatsoever heretofore paid or redeemed by either of said boards under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall preserve the evidence thereof as shall be prescribed by said Secretary.

SEC. 17. That the period of redemption be, and is hereby, extended for one year as respects the property of which, for the want of sufficient bids, the District of Columbia became the purchaser at the tax-sale under the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," as amended by section — of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and prior years, and for other purposes."

SEC. 18. That all laws and ordinances now in force in the city of Washington relating to the payment and collection of water-taxes, water-rents, and taxation for water-mains be, and they are hereby, extended to and made operative over all parts of the District of Columbia where water taken from the United States Aqueduct is used, and said taxes and rents shall be payable and collectible therein in the same manner and at the same rate as in the city of Washington for the year beginning January 1, 1876, and for each subsequent year.

Mr. SPENCER. There are three or four mistakes in the printed copy which I should like to have corrected. On page 8, line 9, of section 8, after the word "profit" I move to insert the words "and the grounds appurtenant thereto."

Mr. CONKLING. Does that mean land appurtenant to cemeteries?

Cemeteries dedicated and used solely for burial purposes and without private income or profit, and the grounds appurtenant thereto.

Is that the meaning—land appurtenant to cemeteries?

Mr. SPENCER. It is supposed that these words have reference to all the buildings referred to in the fore part of the section.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I suggest that they should not come in after "profit," but should come in before the word "cemeteries." I do not say they should go in at all; but I suggest that if the Senator wants them for the purpose he suggests, he had better put them before "cemeteries" than after, because really it would be very odd if not only cemeteries should be exempt from taxation, but lands appurtenant thereto. I do not know but that it might be my land. The land "appurtenant thereto" must belong to somebody. There will be nothing here to show that it should belong to the cemetery association, if there be one. Moreover, as a matter of fact, I suggest to the Senator that no matter to whom the land belongs, if it is a part of the cemetery, it is covered by the words here now. If it is not covered by the words here now, it is not a part of the cemetery, and therefore really I cannot see why it should be exempt.

Mr. SPENCER. The object I had in moving the amendment was to make the language conform to the old law.

Mr. SHERMAN. The old law was defective in that particular, and to my knowledge a corporation in this town owning about one hundred acres, thirty acres of which were dedicated to cemetery purposes, claimed exemption for the whole tract. They ought to pay taxes.

Mr. SPENCER. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. It is an error to suppose that the old law is so defective. I will read to the Senator from Ohio what he refers to in the old law. It is nothing to compare with this:

Houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers; free public library buildings and cemeteries, secondly, the lands or grounds appurtenant to any said house or building.

Not lands appurtenant to cemeteries; that is not in the present law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If the Senator would propose his amendment after the word "soldiers," it would be right.

Mr. SPENCER. I have withdrawn the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. But it is a very appropriate amendment in the right place, because of the language of the text, "ground actually occupied by such buildings." Of course there must be something more than the actual occupancy.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator can offer the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not offer it, but I suggest to the Senator that it would be appropriate after the word "soldier," in line 7.

Mr. SPENCER. In line 30 of section 12 I move to strike out "September" and insert "October." That is to conform to the rest of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. There ought to be the same change made in line 32.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes, the same change in line 32. I include that in my motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much time does that give these assessors for the purposes of equalization before the tax is to be levied?

Mr. INGALLS. Twenty days.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then will it not turn out just as it did before that as to personal property; there is not time enough to get it adjusted, and the rich people in this district (like all the Senators, as we are all rich here) will go free. I hope this bill will not be so adjusted as to make it practically impossible to carry out the intent of the first and second sections, which is to tax all the property belonging in this District, both real and personal, equally for the payment of the expenses of its government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the paragraph be read and the Senator will see that it does need some amendment, commencing in line 30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the Chair.) The Secretary will report the paragraph.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The assessed value shall have reference to the date of the 1st day of June, 1876, or, in the case of stock in trade, shall be the average value of the stock of merchandise or other articles kept on hand during the year ending June 30, 1876. Said assessors shall, between the 1st day of September, 1876, and the 20th day of September, 1876, hold daily sessions for the purpose of equalizing the assessments theretofore made by them, and for the purpose of hearing and determining any and all appeals from the valuations theretofore made by them.

Mr. SHERMAN. As it now reads in the bill it is between the 1st day of September of one year and the 1st day of September of the same year; it would leave no time at all. The amendment proposes to strike out the word "September" and insert "October" in both places; so as to read:

Said assessors shall, between the 1st day of October, 1876, and the 20th day of October, 1876.

That only gives twenty days.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The same time in either case.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection if it is enough.

Mr. CONKLING. Another thing strikes me, which I venture to suggest. If the change is made, leaving twenty days to transpire from the 1st of October to the 20th of October, then the latter part of the section will provide that the lists shall be ready to receive payment of the taxes on the 1st of November.

Mr. SPENCER. We propose to strike out the 1st of November, and insert the 15th of November.

Mr. CONKLING. That may do; but as it is now it would shorten the time at one end.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do I understand that the amendment to strike out "September" and insert "October" is agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there ought to be a longer time for the sessions to equalize the assessments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The apparent object is, inasmuch as the first part of this section provides for their beginning as of the 1st of June, which has gone by, and I suppose as soon as possible after this act passes, is to give them more time to make the actual assessment. As that, I think, is wise, it strikes me that the amendment to strike out the "1st of September" as the time for the commencing of the equalization and making it the 1st of October is probably correct, and then the next one would naturally follow, as twenty days would probably be enough for equalization. What I wish to get at is to give them time enough so that we shall not fail again in making all the property in this District respond fairly and properly to the public burdens. On looking at the first part of the section, I am rather satisfied that it is wiser to make the "1st of September" in line 30 the "1st of October."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. In the same section, on line 46, page 13, I move to strike out "1st" and insert "15th;" so as to read:

And the collector of taxes shall be in readiness to receive payment of the same on and after the 15th day of November, 1876.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. In section 17, line 7, on page 15, I move to fill the blank by the word "thirteen;" so as to read:

As amended by section 13 of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended, as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I offer the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. That bankers, agents, merchants, and other traders, except those dealing in spirituous or fermented liquors or cordials, engaged in business in the District of Columbia, and who pay under the operation of this act a tax upon their stock in trade or capital employed, shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon the capital invested in their said business required under the provisions of any law or ordinance now in force in said District and relating to the payment and collection of license taxes.

I do not think there will be any objection to this section, and I shall make no remarks about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the law now about license taxes?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The license laws make them pay a tax on their capital invested in their trade.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see that law.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Under this bill they are to pay a personal tax.

Mr. SPENCER. I would say to the Senator from Vermont that such is the case now under some of the old laws and ordinances of the District which are still in force.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Shall all merchants and bankers pay a license tax?

Mr. SPENCER. Some of the merchants pay a tax of $5 on the thousand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But they all pay alike, do they not?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is no hardship in levying a small license tax. I was informed that all bankers and persons having business here have been in the habit of paying a small license tax. There is no great hardship in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is the greatest?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know the amount.

Mr. SPENCER. Five dollars on the thousand.

Mr. DORSEY. It is not a license tax at all. It is ½ of 1 per cent. on all money invested in the business in which the party is engaged. The purpose of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina is to relieve these men from paying that percentage for the reason that they have to pay under this bill 1½ per cent. tax on the average amount of capital in their business and the average amount of stock on hand. Thus, if the present law is permitted to remain, they will pay tax twice—½ of 1 per cent. on the capital invested and then 1½ per cent. under this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a tax on the faculty besides a tax on the property. That is what lawyers have to pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 14.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to understand more definitely the effect of this amendment. As I understand, the bill now proposes a tax of ½ per cent. upon the deposits, &c., of bankers.

Mr. DORSEY. The bill as it now stands without this amendment would compel every business man, every banker, in the city of Washington to pay ½ of 1 per cent. on all the capital invested in his business. Then, in addition to that, when the assessor comes around he will assess over again 1½ per cent. upon the same property exactly.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I want to understand, whether or not, unless this amendment is adopted, a man who happens to be engaged in banking will not be obliged to pay more tax than his neighbor.

Mr. DORSEY. More than anybody else.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is unjust. Some amendment ought to be proposed that will remedy that difficulty.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where is the law which levies this tax? It certainly must be in some statute-book.

Mr. SPENCER. The law has been sent for; it is among the acts of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. CONKLING. As the yeas and nays are demanded on this amendment, I beg to make a remark. I should have no difficulty in voting for it on the statement make by my friend from Arkansas. If it is true that one statute imposes a percentage of tax on what he calls the capital of merchants and traders, and the statute we are about to enact on top of that imposes another tax upon the same subject of taxation, that would be manifestly unjust; but I do not understand the fact in that way. Here it is alleged a statute somewhere exists which imposes upon the capital invested in trade a percentage of tax. Here is a bill which does not propose anything of that sort as I understand, but which proposes as a personal tax to levy a percentage upon the average stock in trade. Every man knows that that is not capital stock invested in business. Certainly we all know that in the case of any dealer in the street the number of goods found upon his shelves on a certain day is not the measure of the capital invested in his business. It might happen to be, but the case would be the exception, not the rule.

Mr. BOGY. It is part of it.

Mr. CONKLING. It is part of it, as the Senator says. Therefore it would be a very bad exchange for us to exempt all capital embarked in merchandise in order to get a tax levied upon the stock in trade, the calicoes, prints, and silks, which may at a certain time of the year be on the shelves of the dealer——

Mr. SHERMAN. This requires the average during the year.

Mr. CONKLING. It is to take the average through the year, as the Senator says. It is not to take it when it is highest or lowest, as I understand, but to take the average quantity of stock in trade. It seems to me that the true way is to tax the money, the property of citizens engaged in merchandising just like other citizens; and that is what this bill does; and that is what the Senator from South Carolina proposes this bill shall not do because of another statute which somewhere, as he understands it, has a different provision. I should suppose the true remedy would be to lay a tax on the capital as it is laid in this bill, and then if there be some other law which lays a different tax upon that same capital, to repeal that law, and thus treat everybody with equality in this bill. This amendment is that bankers, &c., "shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon the capital invested in their said business."

Mr. DORSEY. This is not a tax; this is a percentage, which is entirely a different thing. This is on capital used in business. In addition to that they pay 1½ per cent. on all their property.

Mr. CONKLING. The difficulty is just here: My friend says there is a provision of law by which they are to pay a percentage on capital. Now you propose by this amendment to keep that provision of law alive, and because of that provision to exempt that capital from taxation under this bill. Then what will the effect be?

Mr. DORSEY. The effect will be that this bill will tax that property just the same as all other property in the District. They pay ½ per cent. more now.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me see if that is true. Let me read the amendment.

Mr. DORSEY. I have not seen this amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. That is what I am talking of; I have it in my hand.

That bankers, agents, merchants, and other traders, except those dealing in spirituous or fermented liquors or cordials, engaged in business in the District of Columbia and who pay under the operation of this act a tax—

On what? On their capital? Not at all—upon their stock in trade or capital employed—

"Their stock in trade or capital." There is a provision in this bill which levies a tax on the stock in trade. All the men who do that are to be exempt from what?

Shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon the capital invested in their said business.

If I can read it, it means this: You show me a man in this bill who is assessed on his stock in trade, and, if he is one of the merchants or bankers described, I will show you a man who is assessed on nothing else.

Mr. DORSEY. Just finish reading the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING—

Shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon the capital invested in their said business required under the provisions of any law or ordinance now in force in said District and relating to the payment and collection of license taxes.

Mr. DORSEY. What is the effect of that?

Mr. CONKLING. What is the effect of it?

Mr. DORSEY. The effect is to repeal any ordinance or law now existing in this District requiring these men to pay a special tax, and it puts these parties on a par with every other property-holder in this District.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well; let us see if that is it. It is not, as I understand it. The effect of this amendment will be, when it becomes a part of the bill, first, to assess the people generally on their property; second, to assess the sort of dealers here described upon their stock in trade; and third, to provide that they shall pay no other tax. Now, I ask the Senator whether that is not obviously the meaning of it. Let me repeat, first, all men generally are to be assessed; secondly, dealers here described are assessed upon their stock in trade.

Mr. DORSEY. On their capital.

Mr. CONKLING. On their capital, yes; but if this amendment prevails it will provide that all men who are assessed upon their stock in trade, provided they be these dealers, shall pay no other tax upon personal property. Why? Because you have exempted them from every other law which requires them to do it. In this bill you have assessed them on their stock in trade, and therefore you have not assessed them upon the capital embarked in that business. Now what I submit is that they ought to be assessed like everybody else, that they ought to be put in the bill on an equality with everybody else, and ought to pay upon their property, be it real or personal, and should pay 1½ per cent. like everybody else. Then, if there is any other provision which can be found which would impose an additional tax upon them, that ought to be repealed. That is not the effect of this amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. MORTON. If I understand the purpose of this amendment, it is to exempt certain traders and persons doing business from a special tax. The first section of the bill provides for a tax upon all real and personal property. Another provision fixes it upon all real and personal property held at a particular time. Now, when they come to make the assessment, take the case of a merchant: they assess the value of the goods he has in his store; they take his indebtedness, that which is due to him, and, averaging it with what he owes, he pays a tax on what is due over and above what is coming to him. That was the general provision in all the States, I believe. In that way he is taxed, say, on the 1st of July, 1876. Now if, in addition to that, he pays a tax upon the capital invested in those goods, in that stock, it is a special tax, an exceptional tax; he is taxed over and above what other people are, very clearly.

Mr. CONKLING. That is not right.

Mr. MORTON. I understand that the purpose of this amendment is to repeal that special tax, so that all shall be on equality at the time fixed.

Mr. CONKLING. The question is whether it does that. I say it does not, and the Senator, if he will examine it, will say it does not. Manifestly they ought to be on an equality, but this amendment does not put them on an equality.

Mr. MORTON. I know that is the purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Whether a person ought to pay a special tax on the particular business he is engaged in depends on different principles than the taxation of property, because when you tax property you tax it without regard to the use to which it is applied, whether it is making money for the owner or not, unemployed capital, vacant lots, everything. When you put a tax upon property, whether a piece of property is available to its owner in respect to producing income or not, it bears the same burden. Now when you come to special taxes, they are based upon the theory, referring to certain trades and occupations, that the property of the person in question is employed in some profitable way, and you call it a license tax, and in this very amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina the fitness of leaving this principle I have stated to apply to those dealing in spirituous or fermented liquors, as a tax upon a certain occupation, is admitted. The other part of it in the old law is also a tax upon occupations, upon the occupation of a banker, upon the occupation of an agent, which means an insurance agent who may have no capital at all substantially and yet he is engaged in a business which produces large emoluments. So upon the policy of the license-taxation theory various trades and occupations are called upon specially to pay a tax measured either absolutely by so much for each operator or measured in some other way, and it appears the present law is based upon the amount of business they do, the amount of stock they have, or the amount of capital employed.

In my opinion that is not inconsistent with the true principles of taxation, although when you come to tax capital alone, productive and unproductive, you should put that tax upon everybody alike. In the particular case, the man who is applying his capital to a productive use does happen to be obliged to pay more into the Treasury for the general good than the man who has capital that is not employed at all. That is not necessarily unjust. It is philosophic. Whether it is wise to apply it in this particular instance to a merchant, for instance, is open to great question, in my mind; but, in order to obviate the objection suggested by the Senator from New York, which I think is a perfectly sound one, I suggest that the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina be amended by inserting after the word "upon," in line 4, the word "all," and by striking out, in line 5, the words "stock in trade or capital employed" and inserting "real and personal property;" so that part of the amendment will read:

And who pay under the operation of this act a tax upon all their real and personal property shall be exempt.

That brings the amendment, except as to dealers in liquors, into harmony with the first section of the act which imposes a tax upon all the real and personal property of the District. If this amendment to the amendment be agreed to, the proposition will then be that those persons who pay the tax provided for in this bill upon all their real and personal property like everybody else shall be exempt from the faculty tax.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I accept the modification of my friend from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina accepts the modification.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the amendment be read as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, will be reported

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That bankers, agents, merchants, and other traders, except those dealing in spirituous or fermented liquors or cordials, engaged in the business in the District of Columbia, and who pay under the operation of this act a tax upon all their real and personal property, shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon the capital invested in their said business required under the provisions of any law or ordinance now in force in said District and relating to the payment and collection of license taxes.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask any Senator who knows about this law of which we have heard to state what the law is or to read it. I am advised by Senators who have looked at the volume containing the laws of this District that no such thing is referred to there.

Mr. SPENCER. I will state to the Senator from New York that the commissioners inform me that there is such a law in force. It is in the acts of the territorial Legislature. I have sent for the acts of the territorial Legislature.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Two or three times the assessors that were appointed to make the assessments for this District, not only of real estate but of the personal estate, have been very sharply criticised. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that they were limited as to the time of making the appraisal of the real estate and also the investigations as to the personal estate, and it was not possible for them to go through and make a personal examination throughout all this city of the real estate and place it on the proper books within the time if they attempted to do anything in relation to the personal estate; and they had very scant time, working night and day, in order to complete the tax for the real estate. It was confided to some very reputable men here, and I hardly think that any criticism ought to have been thrown upon them for the part they acted at that time. I think they did their whole duty and all that it was possible for men to do within the time within which the tax was to be levied.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Senator should also state that they spent considerable of this time in Lincoln Hall, resolving that the personal property should not be taxed. To do exact justice, I think the Senator should state that considerable time was spent in that way.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I only know that I was in the office about a week before the time expired, and I found them then very diligently engaged and almost overwhelmed with the amount of work.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt that so far as the Senator states he does it accurately, but he probably was not aware of the time that was spent resolving that it was improper to tax personal property.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I know nothing about that.

Mr. MORTON. I ask the Senator if he thinks the present law allows the number of assessors permitted by the law sufficient time to make the assessments of real and personal property?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I cannot say that I have given this bill special attention, and I am unable to inform the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. The real property is not to be re-assessed. I understand the old assessment is adopted, so that real estate does not have to be re-assessed.

Mr. SPENCER. The old assessment of real estate is adopted. There will be a new assessment of personal property.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, if I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] it is to strike out in lines 4 and 5 certain words of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. ROBERTSON] and insert, so that it will read, that those who under the operation of this act pay a tax upon their real and personal property "shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon the capital invested in their said business." The capital that a merchant has invested in his business is certainly personal property; and it appears to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont makes the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina inharmonious, if not insensible. And I would say further, in connection with this matter, that the language used in the last line of the section implies that there is a percentage required now by the provisions of some existing law or ordinance upon capital invested in business by bankers, agents, merchants, and other traders, except those dealing in spirituous or fermented liquors or cordials. I have examined with some minuteness the statutes in force in regard to the District of Columbia, and am unable to find anything upon that subject; and if there is anything, it must be in the territorial or District laws that I have always understood were now inoperative and ineffectual. I am not able, therefore, to see, without further explanation, why this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas in respect to the criticism he has made on what I suggested to the Senator from South Carolina, to the last two lines of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, which provides for excusing the people before described from paying "any percentage upon the capital invested in their said business required under the provisions of any law or ordinances now in force in said District relating to the payment and collection of license taxes."

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont is certainly aware that a license tax and a percentage on capital are two entirely different things.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know they may be two entirely different things; but if the license tax is based, as it may be as a measure of amount, upon how much capital the man has employed, that refers not to capital invested, but is a reference in respect to his paying a license tax, as it says in its very language.

Mr. INGALLS. It would be immaterial whether the license tax was ten, or fifty, or one hundred dollars, based upon the amount of capital employed; it would still be a license tax; but if there is, in addition to that, a percentage imposed upon the capital invested, that is not a license tax, although it may be imposed in the same law that provides for the license. I suggest that the payment of a percentage upon capital is a personal tax, and that therefore this provision is rendered certainly inharmonious by the terms employed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am quite unable to see it, because the terms employed by the Senator from Vermont are that bankers, for instance—in order to make my statement short, I will merely take them—

That bankers * * * engaged in business in the District of Columbia and who pay under the operation of this act a tax upon all their real and personal property—

That is, this act providing that they shall pay in the first section a tax upon all real and personal property in the District, if they do that under this act, as this act requires, then a tax by percentage upon capital invested, as distinguished from property in general, shall be remitted. I do not see the want of harmony.

Mr. INGALLS. That is, to untangle and unravel it and take it one shred at a time, if he pays a tax on all his personal property, he shall be exempt from the payment of any tax on his capital, which is also personal property.

Mr. CONKLING. If I may interpose, it means this, that if under the operations of this act, like everybody else, he pays his tax, he shall not be taxed under any other act. That is what it means, whereas the amendment as it was offered means, as I understand it, that if he pays a tax on his stock in trade, he shall not be taxed under any other act on his capital. That is the difference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here are the District laws. I have the volume. Here, in the laws of that celebrated concern called the government of the District of Columbia and its Legislative Assembly, under date of 23d of August, 1871, is an act imposing a license on trades, business, and professions practiced or carried on in the District of Columbia. I ask that the Secretary may read it in order that everybody may hear it from the desk, and then I will see if there is any additional act.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, That no person shall be engaged in any trade, business, or profession hereinafter mentioned until he shall have obtained a license therefor, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That every person engaged in any trade, occupation, or profession for which a license tax is imposed by the laws of the District of Columbia, shall, at the time for procuring the same, make application to the register, and shall state, under oath or affirmation, such facts as may be applicable to licenses, as apothecaries; commercial agents, bankers, banks; bar-rooms, sample-rooms, and tippling-houses; billiard, bagatelle, and Jenny Lind tables, bowling alleys; brokers; dealers in merchandise, distilled and fermented liquors, wines, and cordials; hacks, carriages, cabs, omnibuses, and street cars; hotels; fire and life insurance companies; livery stables; manufacturers; peddlers, resident or otherwise. The register shall then issue to the applicant a certificate stating the particular kind of license for which application has been made and the amount of money required by law to be paid therefor. Said certificate shall be delivered to the collector, who shall, upon the receipt of the sum of money stated therein, give a certificate of deposit, stating the amount of money paid and the kind of license required, and it shall be the duty of the register to issue said license. Every license shall state the name of the person to whom granted and the number of the house and street where it is desired to carry on such business or occupation, when such business or occupation has an established location, and the kind of business for which it is required, and shall be signed by the register and impressed with the seal of his office. Licenses may be transferred to persons to continue the same business in the same house, or to remove a place of business, under the same regulations as the original license. All transfers shall be certified by the register.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all licenses for produce brokers, peddlers, non-resident dealers, and commercial agents shall date from the 1st of April of each year and expire on the 31st of March following. All licenses for carts, wagons, and drays, and for hacks, carriages, cabs, omnibuses, and street-cars shall date from the 1st of July of each year and expire on the 30th of June following; and all other annual licenses shall date from the 1st of November of each year and expire on the 31st of October following. And the license of every person liable for license tax after the 1st of April, July, and November aforesaid shall date from the 1st of the month in which the liability began, and payment shall be made for a proportionate amount; Provided, That all licenses heretofore granted by the cities of Washington and Georgetown and the levy court shall continue in force for the period named in the same.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That every person liable for license tax who fails to pay the same within thirty days after the same has become due and payable, for such neglect shall, in addition to the license tax imposed, pay a fine or penalty of not less than five nor more than fifty dollars, and a like fine or penalty for every subsequent offense: Provided, That every non resident trader, managers of every theatrical performance, exhibition, ball, and concert for gain, not including exhibitions and concerts by or for religious or charitable institutions, shall procure a license before undertaking those several objects; and failure to do so shall subject the person so offending to a fine or penalty of $250 for each offense, to be imposed and collected as other fines are imposed and collected, one-half to the use of the informer.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That in every case where more than one of the pursuits or occupations hereinafter described shall be pursued or carried on in the same place, by the same person, at the same time, except as hereinafter provided, the tax shall be paid for each according to the rates severally prescribed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Secretary can now go on to section 21, which fixes the sums apparently to be paid by all sorts of people for licenses. I do not know that the Senate would care about having that read either.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose there is no doubt about the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senator will see that there is a license law still in force here as such; and on page 95 there is this provision:

Dealers in merchandise of any kind whatever, not otherwise provided for, shall pay annually $4 on each $1,000, or fractional part thereof, of capital invested in business: Provided, That no license shall be for a less sum than $5.

That is a tax upon capital employed, and so would be a double tax so far as the capital was employed in respect of the general taxation of this capital; but there still remains the general license system, that all people trading at particular places, auctioneers, &c., shall take up a license and shall pay a certain fixed sum in gross which is estimated for the license as such. Then the committee wish to repeal this tax so far as relates to a pure license.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the date of the passage of the act?

Mr. EDMUNDS. August 23, 1871. Then there is an amendment passed to it by the Legislative Assembly on the 20th of June, 1872, which merely changes the sums which are to be paid for these licenses.

I suggest that probably the best way, if that is all the committee mean and my friend from South Carolina means, to admit this double taxation of capital, is to merely repeal the twentieth clause in the act, leaving the license proper still in force. I think the merchants of the town, taking the merchants alone, would wish to have the license remain, because persons are in the habit of coming in here, as I understand, for a very short time and setting up an auction or a private-sale place and making large sales and then going away, whereby they escape taxation entirely unless they are taxed for a license.

Mr. ROBERTSON. My object is to prevent persons from being taxed twice upon their personal property, and not to abolish the license law, by any means. If my friend will frame the amendment to meet that object, I shall be satisfied with it.

Mr. SPENCER. I think there are only three cases in the act of the Legislative Assembly which it is the object of the amendment to cover. Section 21 of that act provides:

First. Apothecaries shall pay annually $4 on each $1,000, or fractional part thereof, of capital invested.

Also the fourth clause of the twenty-first section:

Banks and bankers shall pay annually fifty cents on each $1,000 of capital invested.

That would be a double tax also. The twentieth paragraph of this same section provides that—

Dealers in merchandise of any kind whatever, not otherwise provided for, shall pay annually $4 on each $1,000, or fractional part thereof, of capital invested in business.

The object is, as I understand the Senator from South Carolina, to cover those cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then we had better say that as long as this tax is paid they shall not pay that specific one, naming it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not know that I understand this question. The amendment as first introduced, I understand, was to obviate a possible difficulty or rather a possible double assessment. That is to say, whereas it was assumed that as the law stands now there is a percentage of taxation upon capital, it was intended by this amendment to provide that in such instances there should not be any other assessment under this law. In view of the language used, however, "stock in trade or capital employed," it was regarded as susceptible of a construction that would exempt property from taxation beyond what was contemplated by the amendment or what is intended by the law. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is to strike out the words "stock in trade or capital employed" and insert "real and personal property," and then to insert the word "all" before "their;" so as to read:

A tax upon all their real and personal property shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon the capital invested.

But it will be seen by reference to the concluding part of this amendment that it refers to the "laws or ordinances now in force in said District and relating to the payment and collection of license taxes." A license tax is one thing and a tax upon capital is quite another thing. I suppose it is not intended to exempt these persons from the license tax as it stands now, but only to exempt them from a double assessment upon capital.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Upon personal property.

Mr. WRIGHT. Therefore I suggest, in harmony with the Senator's amendment, that he strike out all the words after the word "District" in the eighth line, omitting the words:

And relating to the payment and collection of license taxes.

As that stands it might be construed to mean that they are exempt from license taxes as well as a tax upon capital.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be better to add a proviso that it shall not be construed to affect license taxes.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same thing would be accomplished, as the Senator suggests, by inserting a proviso that it shall not be construed to exempt them from their liability to pay a license tax. I suggest to the Senator also that his amendment might be helped by making it read:

A tax upon all their real and personal property, including their capital, shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon capital under the law as it now stands.

Mr. INGALLS. I profess that I have learned something in the course of this debate that I did not know before. I supposed that this District was under the control, at the present time, of the Congress of the United States; but I learn that its unfortunate inhabitants are not only governed by the laws of the United States, but that they are also subject to the provisions of acts of a legislative assembly, to the common law of England, to the statute and common law of Maryland, and to a vast number of traditional ordinances which have descended from the remotest antiquity. I am advised by one of the commissioners that the only statute or act under which licenses are now imposed upon the business of this District is the one which has been referred to and partially read by the Senator from Vermont. I would therefore suggest to him that the object he desires to accomplish can be best obtained, in my judgment, by providing that when this property has paid its tax under the bill that we are now considering it shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon the capital invested, required under the provisions of the act of the Legislative Assembly passed upon such a date. Inasmuch as that is the only act under which licenses are now imposed or a tax upon capital demanded, as I am informed by the commissioner, the exemption of that one act will meet the object that the Senator from Vermont desires to attain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are two acts.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will allow me, I will offer to insert as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina—

That the first, fourth, and twentieth paragraphs of section 21 of the act of the Legislative Assembly, entitled "An act imposing a license on trades, business, and professions practiced or carried on in the District of Columbia," approved August 23, 1871, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose they have paid this license in advance?

Mr. SPENCER. In that case the money might be refunded.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a case of a very serious character.

Mr. SPENCER. They have not collected this tax at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we should be legislating very blindly about a matter of that kind, and there ought to be a provision by which the tax might be refunded.

Mr. SPENCER. It is very large in some cases. For instance, the twentieth paragraph provides that—

Dealers in merchandise of any kind whatever, not otherwise provided for, shall pay annually $4 on each thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, of capital invested in business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The first paragraph is a license tax on apothecaries, although it is measured, however, it must be admitted, by the amount of capital employed. I do not know but it is all that way. The fourth is bankers. They are measured fifty cents on each thousand dollars of capital employed. By the twentieth paragraph, dealers in merchandise not otherwise provided for pay $4 for every thousand dollars of capital employed. Whether dealers in merchandise are otherwise mentioned I do not know. Let us see. The enumeration is, apothecaries, auctioneers, commercial agents, bankers, bill-posters, proprietors of bar-rooms, &c. As to "dealers in merchandise," that would entirely exempt those who make incursions into this District for temporary purposes between the assessing days. I doubt whether that would be right. It would be wrong to those who are regular dealers and who have to pay rents all the year round, in the bad part of the season as well as in the good. I am rather inclined to think that the proposition of the Senator from South Carolina is the best, with the proviso to be added to the end of it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move to strike out in the first line of the amendment the word "agents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from South Carolina modifies his amendment. The amendment will be reported as now modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That bankers, merchants, and other traders, except those dealing in spirituous or fermented liquors or cordials, engaged in business in the District of Columbia, and who pay under the operation of this act a tax upon all their real and personal property, shall be exempt from the payment of any percentage upon the capital (not including deposits with banks) invested in their said business required under the provisions of any law or ordinance now in force in said District and relating to the payment and collection of license taxes; but this provision shall not exempt any person from the payment of any license tax.

Mr. MORTON. We are having a very fine illustration to-day of the futility of Congress attempting to legislate for this District without understanding anything about it; where there is no one member of the Senate or House who has time to understand it or cares enough about it to try to understand it.

Mr. SPENCER. I withdraw my proposition and accept the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think the amendment is now unobjectionable.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. ROBERTSON as modified.

Mr. WRIGHT. Allow me to suggest to my friend from South Carolina whether, if the amendment was in this form, it would not meet all that he contemplates:

The tax imposed and to be collected under the operation of this act upon the capital of bankers, merchants, and other traders, except those dealing in spirituous or fermented liquors, or cordials, shall be in lieu of any percentage upon such capital under the provisions of any law or ordinance now in force in said District.

I suggest whether that does not cover the whole thing. The object of it is that they shall not pay a double tax.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The object is not to pay a double tax on personal property.

Mr. WRIGHT. If you say that the payment of this tax shall be in lieu of taxes under any law or ordinance now obtaining in this District, do you not reach the whole object?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think so.

Mr. WRIGHT. Unless there be some objection raised to it, I do not see why the substitute which I propose does not cover the whole ground. I propose to substitute the words:

The tax to be imposed and to be collected under the operation of this act upon the capital of bankers, merchants, and other traders, except those dealing in spirituous or fermented liquors, or cordials—

Following the language of the amendment—shall be in lieu of any percentage upon such capital under the provisions of any law or ordinance now in force in said District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The only difficulty that I have with the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, and that difficulty occurs in the pending proposition in exactly the same way, is as to the meaning of the word "traders." I see on looking into these District acts, if I can call them such, of the Legislative Assembly, that all apothecaries pay what under the general head is called a license tax; but they pay it just as the merchant does upon the capital invested, upon the property they have in the business. If it is not right in respect of the merchant to make him pay a license tax measured in addition upon the capital, why is it right as to the apothecary? And whether an apothecary would fall under the head of "traders" in the exemption is, considering the phraseology of the District law, in my mind open to a great deal of doubt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I withdraw the call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection and the call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn.

Mr. WRIGHT. I offer this as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina:

The tax imposed and to be collected under the operation of this act upon the capital of bankers, merchants, and other traders, except those dealing in spirituous or fermented liquors, or cordials, shall be in lieu of any percentage upon such capital under the provisions of any law or ordinance now in force in said District.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think the amendment I have offered is quite perfect now and I think it is in a better shape than any substitute would place it in; but of course I must leave the Senate to judge of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT.]

The substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fifth section of the bill, which provides—

That it shall be the duty of the collector of taxes in said District to prepare a complete list of all taxes on real property, upon which the same are assessed, in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1877, and he shall, within ten days thereafter, publish the same with a notice of sale, in the regular issue of a daily newspaper published in said District, to be designated by the commissioners of the District or their successors in office, as hereinafter provided, once a week for three successive weeks.

I move to strike out in line 6 the words "a daily," and insert "some weekly;" and then in line 7 to strike out all after the word "District" down to the word "provided" in line 9, in the following words:

To be designated by the commissioners of the District or their successors in office, as hereinafter provided.

And insert:

Or the city of Baltimore, being the lowest bidder for the work.

So as to read:

With a notice of sale in the regular issue of some weekly newspaper published in the said District or in the city of Baltimore, being the lowest bidder for the work.

None of us have forgotten, I suppose, the bill that was sent in last year or at the beginning of the current year, for publishing the list of delinquent tax-payers, preparatory to the sale of property for delinquent taxes. It amounted to a very large percentage of the money collected. It was so enormous as to strike everybody with surprise. I have looked carefully through this measure to see if there is anything in it to prevent the recurrence of a like bill coming up this year. I can see nothing. It is left to the discretion of the commissioners to select a newspaper for the advertising of the list of delinquent tax-payers, and it is absolutely at their discretion.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that he must speak of the tax-list of two years ago, and not this year.

Mr. HAMILTON. I said of the current year, or the last year.

Mr. SPENCER. I will state to the Senator that the publication of the last tax-list cost the Government $8,250, and it covered twenty-seven closely printed pages. That was not considered as an unreasonable price. The list two years ago cost $40,000 or $50,000.

Mr. HAMILTON. Ninety-six thousand dollars.

Mr. SPENCER. Ninety-six thousand dollars was the bill, but the amount paid was $50,000. The whole difficulty has been obviated.

Mr. HAMILTON. I do not see that it can be obviated under this bill at all. It depends upon the discretion of the commissioners altogether. There is no objection to giving the thing out to the lowest bidder, and if the papers of the District of Columbia combine together in order to bid more than the work is worth it should go to the city of Baltimore. The Baltimore papers circulate as freely and as numerously here as the Washington City papers, and if the list were published in a weekly paper instead of a daily I believe it would be sufficient. It might be put in a Sunday paper, and there are more people who read the Sunday papers, three to one, than read the daily papers.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Texas will not be adopted. The price of this printing is not exorbitant.

Mr. HAMILTON. What objection has the Senator to my amendment?

Mr. SPENCER. I object to this printing being done in Baltimore papers. The Senator says the Baltimore papers circulate as largely here as the Washington papers do. He is certainly mistaken. The Baltimore dailies circulate very freely, but we seldom see the Baltimore weekly papers. I do not even know the name of a Baltimore weekly paper that is in existence.

Mr. HAMILTON. It could be given to a daily paper and published once a week.

Mr. SPENCER. I suggest to the Senator that the New York City papers circulate in New Jersey fully as much as the New Jersey papers do, but that is not the case with Baltimore and the District.

Mr. HAMILTON. The bill only provides for a publication once a week if put into a daily. I have no objection to striking out the word "weekly," so as to publish it in a daily newspaper once a week, but undoubtedly it ought to be given to the lowest bidder.

Mr. SPENCER. I have no objection to giving it to the lowest bidder, and to a paper in the city of Washington.

Mr. HAMILTON. For one I find it is necessary to specify what shall be done in this District very carefully. Otherwise we are likely to have some things done which we do not expect. It has been so all the time, and if it is to be differently hereafter there will have to be a new beginning.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the government of the District of Columbia for the last year was the cheapest and most economical that they have ever had in the District.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let me suggest to my friend from Texas that he omit from his amendment reference to the Baltimore papers.

Mr. HAMILTON. I have no objection to doing that.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think it is unusual to have such a publication outside of the city concerned.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will strike out Baltimore, I will have no objection to his amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON. Very well; I will modify it in that respect.

Mr. SPENCER. The amendment is accepted, provided it is confined to papers in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAMILTON. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair.) The amendment, as modified, will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, section 5, line 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "a daily" and insert "some weekly" before "newspaper."

Mr. SPENCER. I suggest to the Senator that he had better say "a daily or weekly newspaper." Some of the daily papers do not publish any weekly editions, and they might be the lowest bidder.

Mr. HAMILTON. I accept that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend that portion of the substitute so as to read:

And he shall within ten days thereafter publish the same, with a notice of sale, in the regular issue of a daily or weekly newspaper published in said District, being the lowest bidder for the work, once a week for three consecutive weeks.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At the end of section 4, page 3, there is this clause:

And the whole together—

That is to say, certain taxes that have not been paid—

shall constitute the delinquent tax on such part or parcel of land, to be dealt with and collected in the manner prescribed by law.

I do not know what is meant by "such part or parcel of land." There does not seem to be any antecedent to which it refers. I notice that it is in the old law in exactly the same way, but that does not make it any better sense than before. I suppose it is intended to mean "all such part or parcel to which the tax relates," that that is the particular part out of which the tax grows.

Mr. SPENCER. That is what is meant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is what it means, I move to insert on page 3, line 14, section 4, "as such tax relates;" so that it will read:

And the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax on such part or parcel of land as such tax relates, to be dealt with and collected in the manner prescribed by law.

Mr. SPENCER. I accept that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot accept it. We have to put the question, because it is out of your committee now.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAPERTON. The House bill in the first section makes discriminations between property in the city of Washington and in Georgetown and in the country outside of the two cities. The House bill provides for imposing—

A tax of $1.50 on each $100 of the assessed value of the same within the city of Washington; of $1 on each $100 of the assessed value of the same within the city of Georgetown; and of seventy-five cents on each $100 of the assessed value of the same in that part of said District outside of said cities of Washington and Georgetown.

This was the principle upon which the Senate acted when the last tax bill was passed. Why it is not incorporated into this bill I know not. It is so obviously just and proper that I think it should become a part of this bill. I therefore offer this amendment to come in at the end of the first section of the bill as now proposed by the committee:

Of the assessed value of the same within the city of Washington; of $1 on each $100 of the assessed value of the same within the city of Georgetown; and of seventy-five cents on each $100 of the assessed value of the same in that part of the said District outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I cannot conceive of any reason why the city of Georgetown should pay a tax of $1 on the hundred dollars and the city of Washington pay a tax of $1.50 on the hundred dollars. Georgetown certainly has all the privileges and all the protection that the city of Washington has. If this amendment were adopted, the result would be that the city of Georgetown upon its real estate would only pay $58,000 tax next year, while the city of Washington would pay about a million and a quarter of dollars. I cannot conceive any reason for this amendment, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. CAPERTON. I do not know what would be the practical operation of the amendment, but certainly the figures of the Senator from Alabama seem to me to be very extravagant. I understand that this has always been the principle upon which those assessments were imposed up to 1876. It never has been allowed in the history of this country that the country adjacent to a town should be assessed with a view to pay the expenses of the city or municipality. A city imposes a tax for its own special benefit, a special tax which does not cover the adjacent country. It is well known, and the Senator from Alabama I presume, who has had experience on this subject, knows that Georgetown participates very slightly in proportion to the amount assessed upon her in the improvements that are made under the direction of the commissioners

Mr. SPENCER. I should like to correct that mistake. That is a common error and a great many people have fallen into it. It is not the case. The streets of Georgetown are paved more in proportion to the population, size, and area of the city than the streets of the city of Washington are.

Mr. CAPERTON. I have been informed from a very creditable source that while the law contemplates that Georgetown shall participate in the improvements in proportion to the amount of her assessment, she has not received one-tenth of the amount to which she is entitled. That is my information. The Senator from Alabama may have different information. When was it ever proposed in legislation of this sort that you should impose upon the country outside of the limits of the city the same tax that is imposed within the limits of the city? There is generally a State and county organization and there is a tax imposed for general purposes, but if there is anything to be raised for special corporation purposes there is a special tax laid by the corporation. The country outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown bears the same relation to those cities that a county does to an incorporated town, and it never has been contended that a tax should be imposed upon the whole county which was to go to supply a particular corporation, town, or city for municipal expenditures. I think the amendment I have offered is entirely just and proper and I hope it will be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. If the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia were to prevail, why not put that part of Washington around the navy-yard and east of the Capitol upon the same equality with the city of Georgetown? I do not see any reason why it should not be so. I cannot conceive why a horse on one side of Boundary street should not pay the same rate of taxation as on the other side of the street. The city of Georgetown and the county combined pay only one-sixth of the amount of taxes under a uniform rate.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I ask the Senator from Alabama what relation the assessment of property in Georgetown bears to the assessment of property in the city of Washington?

Mr. SPENCER. It is about $5,800,000 in Georgetown.

Mr. RANDOLPH. What is the value of the property in the city of Washington?

Mr. SPENCER. Seventy-eight millions of dollars.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Senator will see, therefore, himself that it would not be a greater proportion.

Mr. SPENCER. I will try to explain. If the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia should prevail, the total amount of taxes paid by the city of Washington would be $1,182,000; Georgetown would pay $58,000 only, and the county would pay $65,000. If the amendment should not prevail, the city of Washington would pay $1,182,000, the city of Georgetown would pay $87,000, and the county would pay $131,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to take up time, but I wish to say one word on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. It does appear to me, situated as this District is, while some things can be said in its favor, to be one that practically will do more harm than good. In a mere point of justice, of course it is impossible to adjust taxes in such a way that in every respect they are uniform, because one man has a piece of property out of which he is getting a great income, and another has a piece of property right by the side of it on which he gets nothing, but both have to pay alike. You cannot, in adjusting taxes, keep everything absolutely equal. In this city the legal limit of the city, I believe, is what is called Boundary street on the north and Rock Creek, near Georgetown. It is built up in a greater or less degree, gradually crossing that street, which is a mere ideal line, buildings of various kinds on one side and the other, just alike, only like all suburbs of a town, it gradually grows thinner and thinner until you get to the boundary of the District and then to the country.

The bill, as it stands, proposes, first, to make an assessment according to value upon all the property in the District, personal as well as real. The great mass of the personal property is in the city alone, accumulated personal property. The capitalists and all that sort of people who have accumulated large sums reside within the limits of the city. There are very few outside of it. When you take it all together and make this assessment according to value, the man who lives at the uttermost part of the District and has his little farm there, has his farm assessed according to its value and the man who owns his block of stores in town has his stores assessed according to their value. Of course the value of the stores and the land here, although not the tenth part of what the farmer owns in point of area, is a hundred times greater than the property on the remote sides of the District. Therefore the man in the city upon the same kind of property has an assessment which is infinitely greater than the assessment upon the man outside. That regulates it practically. I do not say it regulates it in every case. Then when you come to the payment of the tax on valuation, the man who has paid but little, being in a remote part of the District, gets comparatively little benefit it is true, because he only has one road, about once in a mile, and in the administration of justice, or anything, he does not get so much benefit; but he does not contribute so much money. That comes as near to justice, in my opinion, as practically you can come. On the other hand, if you fix this arbitrary geographical line through Washington and Georgetown, and assess Washington and the county, as the rest of the District is called, you make a cordon on every side that to the man who lives on the opposite side is excessively offensive and excessively unjust. On one side of a street property may be worth just as much as on the other, but it is worth more generally, for the reason that the site happens to be better, it is higher ground, is more healthy, commanding a better prospect. They would only pay half as much tax as those who lived on the lower side of the street. That makes a just complaint, because everybody who lives on that whole line sees that it is not fair and it is not honest between them. On the other hand, if you put it on value, then each man's value, wherever it is, is graduated by the nearness to the center of operations, and he contributes a little in proportion to distance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WITHERS. Do I understand the Senator from West Virginia to say that this discrimination had existed for many years?

Mr. CAPERTON. It did exist up to last fall.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But that was when they were separate and independent organizations, where each one raised its own money and applied its own money.

Mr. WITHERS. By the distinction made by the Senator from Vermont manifestly it is a very different condition of things; but I understand that the Senator from West Virginia insists that subsequently to that this discrimination has been observed.

Mr. SPENCER. It has not been.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not so understand it. If so, it was wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAPERTON] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not know that I understand the first clause of the first section of the bill:

That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, there shall be levied, upon all real and personal property in said District * * * a tax of $1.50 on each $100.

Each $100 of what?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Of real and personal property.

Mr. OGLESBY. "A tax shall be levied on the real estate of $1.50 on each $100." I move to add "of the value thereof."

Mr. SPENCER. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment to the amendment will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. OGLESBY. Then section 5 provides:

That it shall be the duty of the collector of taxes in said District to prepare a complete list of all taxes on real property upon which the same are assessed.

Taxes are never assessed on real property. Taxes are levied on real property. The assessor assesses the value and the law levies the tax. That word, it seems to me, ought to be changed to "levied."

Mr. SPENCER. I have no objection to that modification. That was the law of the last session.

Mr. OGLESBY. When the collector proceeds to advertise this for sale, it seems to me it ought to be in the language of statute law. If the gentleman accepts it, that is the end of it. It is a mere verbal amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. LOGAN in the chair.) That amendment to the amendment will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORTON. I do not propose to offer an amendment, because I want this bill disposed of; but I wish to make one suggestion. I am told that there are about twelve thousand people in this District who live outside of either Washington or Georgetown, who live in the country. The water is not carried to them, nor is the gas. To tax those people at the same rate as the people in the city is manifestly unjust. People who live in the city have benefits which the people in the country do not have, and it is right that they should pay for them; but to make those who live in the country and do not get the benefit of these expenses contribute is manifestly unjust, which will not stand argument for a moment. To tax the people who live in the country and who get no protection from police, when streets are not made for them, and who are deprived of the very benefits to be derived from the city expenses, and make them pay at the same rate, is so manifestly unjust that it requires no argument. I am told the bill of the House made a difference in that respect, and in that respect it was just and proper. I have no amendment to offer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think there ought to be what is in substance a verbal amendment in part on page 4, line 15 of section 5, relating to the advertisement of property:

The property will be sold by the said collector at public auction, at the south front of the court-house in the city of Washington, on the second Tuesday of August following, between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon of said day.

There are six hours of open space, and an honest bidder may go there, and if there is anybody playing games about the sales of real estate, he may be obliged to wait for the whole six hours. I think the advertisement ought to state a definite hour to be named in the advertisement at which the sale will take place. So I move to amend by inserting after the word "following," in line 15, "at a fixed hour," so as to read "at a fixed hour between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon."

Mr. SHERMAN. There are a great number of pieces to be offered for sale.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. It may take the whole day to sell them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you want to put the hour of four over to six, very well; but he need not advertise any more for one hour than he likes, and others for another hour; but as it stands, it strikes me that it is an invitation to fraud.

Mr. SHERMAN. If you change it, the only embarrassment will be that you have one hundred or two hundred pieces, and there are in this list many hundred items of property to be offered for sale, and it will take the whole day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but each individual parcel has got of course to be offered by itself, because it relates to each tax-payer that owns it; and as to each tax-payer he has a right himself to know, and his friends have a right to know, and the buyer has a right to know that that property is going to be sold, and going to be sold at some definite hour. Now, when you have opened a sale at a definite hour, that hour exists until the sale is over, as everybody knows. A justice's court is to be opened at a particular hour, but the justice goes on and performs his duty, and if it takes two days that hour lasts during all that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On line 15 of section 7, on page 7, the word "court-house" is used without stating what court-house. I do not know that there is more than one, but in a previous part it is described as "the court-house in the city of Washington." Therefore, for safety it is better to say "court-house in the city of Washington." They did have a court-house in Georgetown once, and they may have it yet. It is only a mere verbal matter of description.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I should like to call attention to section 9 about exemptions:

That from the assessed value of the credits only of any person there shall be deducted the amount of any valid and bona fide debt or debts, which any such person shall individually and absolutely owe, upon the same being established by the affidavit of such person claiming deduction as hereinafter provided.

Is that intended to include a debt which the person owes as a surety?

Mr. SPENCER. I suppose not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose not; and yet a surety does individually and absolutely owe the debt upon which he is a surety.

Mr. SPENCER. He may owe it. We cannot tell.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move some amendment which shall not enable people who have plenty of riches and who are sureties or guarantors, the indorsers for somebody, where the principal is good, to get their heads out from paying taxes for the reason that their name is on another man's paper, because on that theory my friend and I, if we were rich, might exchange notes just before assessing day for $100,000, indorsing each other's notes, and neither of us would have any taxes to pay because we should be individually and absolutely liable for all the debt. Of course the committee do not mean that, and I should like to propose some words to obviate that. With a view to getting at it, I move after the word "owe," in line 4, to insert "in respect of which he has no remedy over against any other person."

So that it makes it his own debt for him to pay. That is of course what is intended.

Mr. WRIGHT. I can very well see the object my friend has in view; but it seems to me that his amendment will be going quite too far. Suppose it occurs that the liability is no longer as mere surety, but a judgment has been recovered against both the principal and the surety, and it now becomes a judgment against both, and they are both treated as principals so far as the judgment is concerned for most purposes, though not for all purposes. You have that judgment, and he becomes absolutely liable. It may be true that he has a technical remedy over against the principal, but the principal may be entirely worthless. Now his liability is fixed by judgment upon the debt. He may have a technical remedy over against the principal notwithstanding the judgment, and yet the principal may be entirely worthless, and it may be as absolutely and entirely a debt against him as if he was owing it as principal. I suggest, therefore, that there may be difficulty in the amendment as the Senator proposes it. I do not know what language ought to be employed. I agree with him that if it is a mere conditional liability as a surety, it ought not to be included in his liabilities; but if you say "in respect of which he has no remedy over," it would apply to the case I have supposed and many others that I think might be supposed where his liability would be just as absolute as if he were the principal in the first instance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But where the principal is responsible, the fact that his liability is fixed by a judgment ought not to make any difference. But where the principal has failed——

Mr. WRIGHT. That is what I suggested; that in case the principal is worthless the man's liability is as absolutely fixed as if he were the principal himself.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On page 10, section 10, on the subject of perjury, I think there would be the same difficulty that has been pointed out several times in our discussions in referring generally to the penalties for the offense of perjury, as there are several in the existing statutes. On page 10, in line 40 of section 10, the language is that upon conviction of perjury for a false affidavit, the party shall be "subject to the penalties for that offense now provided by law." The law is various, and it would be difficult to know what penalty you are to apply. To correct that, I move to amend by striking out the word "law" and inserting "by section 5392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," which is the general statute.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia as a substitute for the House bill as it has been amended.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. There are some amendments which I wish to propose. I was in the act of writing them out. I will simply call the attention of the Senate to the points. There seems to be a necessity for one amendment here and I think two. Section 5, on page 4, in lines 31, 32, 33, need amending, as I think. I will begin a little ahead and show what is intended. After speaking of the certificate on which the deed is to be executed, the section proceeds:

A deed thereof shall be given by the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, to the purchaser at the tax sale, or the assignee of such certificate, which deed shall be admitted and held to be a good and perfect title in fee-simple to any property bought at any sale herein authorized.

As that section stands I think it would be entirely void. It takes away from the judiciary and undertakes to dispose by legislation of a title without trial, and leaves nothing open to a trial. It does not leave the question of the regularity of proceedings, or the legality of the tax, or anything else open to investigation in a court. A provision of that kind, it seems to me, is entirely and totally void. The utmost limit to which we can go in cases of that kind as to make the deed prima facie evidence of a good and perfect title in fee-simple, and then to provide that all proceedings prior to said deed shall be presumed regular until the contrary be proved. This throws upon the parties claiming against a tax title the burden of proving irregularities or illegalities affecting the proceedings and sales. It seems to me, therefore, this section needs the amendment which I propose. I have written out the amendment in the printed bill before me, but had not yet fully perfected it.

There is another matter to which I will call attention while I am up. I refer to the proviso at the end of this section.

And provided also, That minors or other persons under legal disability be allowed one year after such minors coming to or being of full age or after the removal of such legal disability to redeem the property so sold, or of which the title has, as aforesaid, become vested in the District of Columbia, from the purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their heirs or assigns, or from the District of Columbia.

This is a provision authorizing the District to bid off property which is not bid for by other parties, and it gives the same length of time for redemption, of course, under the previous portion of the section as if it had been bid by individuals, and then it brings in this saving clause in reference to minors and persons under disability. That is a fatal objection to purchasers at a tax sale. Unless they have examined into all the titles and see that the property is not held by minors or persons under disability they never would bid it off. The consequence is that no sale would take place, and the property would go to the District just in that way. In almost all the State laws with which I am acquainted which provide for the sale of property for taxes no such saving clause is inserted. That is a saving clause which is very proper to be inserted in a statute of limitations in all ordinary cases, but not on a sale for taxes, because it prevents purchasers at the sale. The object should be to encourage the sale of these lands when they are offered for sale as delinquent for taxes, and no such saving clause as this ought to accompany the provision.

I move to amend section 5, line 31, by inserting after the word "be" the words "prima facie evidence of;" and in line 33, after the word "authorize," inserting "and all proceedings prior to said deed shall be presumed to have been regular until the contrary be proved;" so as to make the clause read:

A deed thereof shall be given by the commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, to the purchaser at the tax sale or the assignee of such certificate, which deed shall be admitted and held to be prima facie evidence of a good and perfect title in fee-simple to any property bought at any sale herein authorized; and all proceedings prior to said deed shall be presumed to have been regular until the contrary be proved.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I also move an amendment to strike out the proviso at the end of the section saving the rights of minors and other persons under disabilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Clerk will report the words proposed to be stricken out.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And provided also, That minors or other persons under legal disability be allowed one year after such minors coming to or being of full age, or after the removal of such legal disability, to redeem the property so sold, or of which the title has, as aforesaid, become vested in the District of Columbia, from the purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their heirs or assigns, or from the District of Columbia, on payment of the amount of purchase-money so paid therefor, with 10 per cent. per annum interest thereon as aforesaid, and all taxes and assessments that have been paid thereon by the purchaser, or his assigns, between the day of sale and the period of such redemption, 10 per cent. per annum interest on the amount of such taxes and assessments, and also the value of improvements which may have been made or erected on such property by the purchaser or by the District of Columbia, while the same was in his, her, or their, or its possession.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. It all relates to that saving clause.

Mr. WRIGHT. Do I understand the Senator from Alabama to accept this amendment?

Mr. SPENCER. I have no objection to it.

Mr. WRIGHT. It seems to me this would be most extraordinary. I do not know of such a statute in any State of this Union that does not have what is in the nature of a statute of limitations in reference to tax sales and to save the rights of minors and persons under legal disability. To say that they are to be precluded and held to the same rule as persons of full age and laboring under no disability, it seems to me, would be most extraordinary. I never have known a tax law in any State of this Union, so far as I can now remember, that did not save the rights of minors or persons under legal disabilities. If the Senator from Alabama consents to this amendment I do not want to interfere with the bill, but it seems to me that to strike out the proviso would leave the rule so harsh and so unjust, and so much in the face of our legislation in the States, that I cannot consent to it.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The Senator from Iowa says he is not aware of any State in the Union that does not make a similar saving clause in behalf of minors and other persons under disabilities. I will say, on the other hand, that I have not now a knowledge of any one which does make such a provision in such a connection as this, although there may be, and I will not deny that there are. I have no doubt that the Senator is correct as to the State of Iowa, because he is familiar with her laws; but I will say that the statute of Michigan has not had for the last twenty years, certainly, any provision of that kind. It was found that while any such provision as that remained in the statute the people would not bid at the tax sales, because they got no right. Here is a child, for instance, that is but a year old; you must wait for twenty-one years before you can tell whether you have got anything by your purchase or not. Two years are allowed for redemption. But this is not a statute of limitations, as designated by the Senator from Iowa. Two years' redemption is allowed, and that in my opinion is sufficient. We have never found any difficulty arising out of it in our State, nor do I believe it will create any difficulty here; but I believe by striking out the proviso that persons would be induced to bid at the sale who otherwise would not bid at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia as a substitute for the House bill as it has been amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In section 8, line 3, I move to strike out the words "buildings devoted to art." I do not see why they should be exempt.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I know of but one building here that is devoted to art, and that is the building donated for that purpose by Mr. Corcoran. I think it would be very ungracious on the part of the Senate to subject that building to taxation. It is solely for the benefit of the nation, and I should hope that there would be no disposition to strike out that when there are so many other buildings exempted.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I will say to my honorable friend from Vermont that there are several buildings here used as art galleries, and whole buildings may be exempt on that ground. If the Corcoran gallery was the only one, I should not move to strike it out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask as a matter of fact—perhaps some Senator can inform me—whether there is any but one building "devoted to art," in the language of the act. I am about as strict in my construction of the principle of exemption from taxation as any one; but certainly I would not desire to vote to levy a tax upon a building given to the public at large, dedicated to public art, owned by trustees who have no personal interest in it, no one of whom derives a profit from it, where no money is levied even for entrance fees, except to pay the light and to compensate the person in charge of the building. It is like the British Museum or any other building devoted to public uses. It is like the Library of Congress. It seems to me that if that is the only building of the kind—I refer to what is called the Corcoran Art Gallery—it ought not to be subject to taxation.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator define to me the words "buildings devoted to art?" What do they mean?

Mr. SHERMAN. I would say they meant a building devoted by its title to the cultivation of art, from which no one can derive a profit, which imposes no tax, no admission fees, but is devoted to art, not to private profit. An art gallery may be for private profit, but that is not a building devoted to art. But to avoid any controversy about it, I think it ought to made clear. Would the Senator from New York suggest any language that would confine it to this single building in the city of Washington? There is only one that I know of which I should like to see exempt.

Mr. CONKLING. Take libraries.

Free public library buildings.

That is one way of stating it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose we say:

Buildings devoted to art and from which no private profit is derived.

How would that do?

Mr. CONKLING. That would cover the case, I suppose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Probably that would answer the purpose of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That would answer the purpose I have in view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina accepts the modification of the Senator from Ohio. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather myself name the Corcoran Art Gallery, because that is descriptive.

Several SENATORS. That would be better.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would then just say:

First, the Corcoran Art Gallery.

Then go on—

Free public library buildings, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROBERTSON. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment of the committee will be so modified.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, as amended, was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 26th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 320) to reduce the number and increase the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the United States Army;

An act (S. No. 546) to further the administration of justice in the State of Colorado;

An act (S. No. 773) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Jenifer, late first lieutenant Second Cavalry, United States Army; and

An act (S. No. 863) to change the name of the steamship City of Brashear to Lone Star.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. INGALLS, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. MORRILL of Vermont, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SILVER AS LEGAL TENDER.

Mr. WEST. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 809) referring the claim of George E. Payne to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. BOGY. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair now lays before the Senate the special order, which is the bill (H. R. No. 3398) for the issue of coin, and for other purposes, on which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WEST. I did not know that there was any regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3398) for the issue of coin, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That there shall be coined at the mints of the United States a silver dollar of the weight of 412.8 grains troy of standard silver, the emblems, devices, and inscriptions of which shall conform to those prescribed by law for the gold and silver coins of the United States, with such modifications thereof as may be necessary to render the said dollar readily distinguishable from the trade-dollar; and in the coinage and delivery thereof the same deviations from standard weight and fineness shall be allowed as are prescribed by law for the trade-dollar; and the said dollar herein authorized shall be a legal tender at its nominal value for any amount not exceeding $20 in any one payment, except for customs duties and interest on the public debt, and shall be receivable in payment of all dues to the United States except duties on imports.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to exchange the silver dollars herein authorized, and also the subsidiary coins of the United States, for an equal amount of United States notes, which shall be retired and canceled and not be again replaced by other notes. And all United States notes redeemed under this act shall be held to be a part of the sinking fund provided for by existing law, the interest to be computed thereon as in the case of bonds redeemed under the acts relating to the sinking fund.

SEC. 3. That the silver bullion required for this purpose shall be purchased from time to time at market rate by the Secretary of the Treasury with any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but no purchase of bullion shall be made under this act when the market rate for the same shall be such as will not admit of the coinage and issue as herein provided without loss to the Treasury; and any gain or seigniorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury, as provided under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage: Provided, That the amount of money at any one time invested in such silver bullion, exclusive of such resulting coin, shall not exceed $1,000 000.

SEC. 4. That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit, from time to time, the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, whatever may be the fate of the amendments to the bill of the Senate Finance Committee offered by me, I shall rejoice that this discussion has taken place in this body and from here has gone to the country. The subject is one of the most interesting in the whole range of political science, and is as important as it is interesting. It cannot be denied that, for some reason difficult to be explained at this day, the true position of silver as one of the coins of the Constitution had been entirely overlooked, and indeed I may say that it was forgotten by the public mind of the nation. The fact that it could be made useful even as a subsidiary coin was also forgotten, and the greater fact that it could be made a legal tender, as now proposed, was in a manner not known. This discussion has brought these important facts to the knowledge of the people, and a spirit of inquiry has thereby been created. Why the act of 1873, which forbids the coinage of the silver dollar, was passed no one at this day can give a good reason.

As we see this question at this time no possible harm could have resulted in permitting silver to occupy the position it had held before. The amount coined from 1870 to 1873 was $3,336,348. This could have done harm to nobody. Therefore the quantity of silver then on hand or being coined was not large enough to justify the legislation of that day. We must look for the reason for this legislation elsewhere. We will find this to be part of the idea, starting in England in 1816, and which has spread to the countries of Europe and also to this country: that gold was the only true standard, and silver, after a glorious reign of thousands of years, beginning in the very twilight of civilization and continuing down the ages to the period of its meridian splendor, had to be dethroned. The visionary theorists of England, these men of new ideas as to the origin of man as well as his final destiny, have by noise and clap-trap inoculated the one-idea men of the continent, and therefore one standard has at this day many advocates over all Europe, and, strange as it may appear, the practical mind of this country was for a time, and until this discussion took place, under the complete sway of this class of men.

The practical mind of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is yet under this influence. I am happy to say, judging from his last speech, that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is fast abandoning this school of theorists. I regret I cannot say as much for the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTH.] Judging from the speech he made on this subject I think that he belongs to this class of theorists.

My object on this occasion will be to place before the country the necessity for us to return as soon as possible to what is generally known as the double standard; that is, a standard composed of the coins of gold and silver.

The Senator from Ohio in his last speech has admitted many of the positions assumed by me in my former speech—that is, that our obligations, in the shape of bonds and otherwise, issued before the act of 1873, being payable in coin, could legally be paid in silver, as this metal was a recognized coin up to that time; and so with the duties on imports. He now admits that these could be paid in silver. That is all I advanced at the time I made my speech, and for which I was held up before the country as a sort of repudiationist, having no regard for the public credit.

At the time I proposed an amendment to the committee's bill that duties should be payable in silver equally as in gold, I was well aware that we had no silver in the country; that, it having been unwisely demonetized some years before, none had lately been coined, and consequently there was none here. My object was to have silver recognized; and, as I understand the Senator from Ohio who is chairman of the Committee on Finance, this fact is now admitted. I have accomplished one of the objects I had in view at the outset of this discussion, which was to have silver recognized as one of the constitutional metals, and with which we could pay our obligations, and that it was also receivable in payment of duties. It is said by the Senator from Vermont, and others who oppose my amendment, that to pay the interest on our public debt or our bonds in silver would be an act of bad faith. It is virtually admitted by this Senator that according to strict law this could be done, as the bonds and coupons are payable in coin, and at the time they were made silver was a legal coin, but that outside of the letter of the law it was understood that gold alone was contemplated. If silver can be made as valuable as gold—that is, if a silver dollar of a given weight can be made as good as a gold dollar of a given but lesser weight—where would the bad faith be?

The answer to this question presents the only solution of the problem. If it be true that silver can be made to be as valuable as gold, then there would be no bad faith, for the creditor would receive as much in one way as the other. The arguments of both the Senators from Vermont and California in opposition to making silver a legal tender are based on the fact that silver is of much less value than gold, and is subject to great variations in value. While it is true that silver is intrinsically of less value than gold, and has been so in all ages, nevertheless until recently it was used by all nations with perfect success, by establishing a certain ratio or relative value between the two metals.

The relative value of silver to gold in the days of the patriarch Abraham was	8 to 1
One thousand years before Christ	12 to 1
Five hundred years before Christ	18 to 1
At the commencement of the Christian era	9 to 1
A. D. 500	16 to 1
1100	8 to 1
1500	11 to 1
1557	2 to 1
1600	11 to 1
1613	13 to 1
1700	15½ to 1
1816	14 to 1
1847	15½ to 1

It will be observed from this table that the relative value has been pretty uniform, and it is now the same that it was in the year 1700, which is one hundred and seventy-six years ago. Thus for this long period of time this relation has not changed, and it will be observed that this was during the period when the condition of the social and political world, as well as the commercial world, was changing from the bottom to the top. This period also witnessed the greatest difference in the production of the two metals. Yet during all these disturbing causes this relation has remained stationary.

Up to near the close of 1874 the price had been remarkably steady, as may be seen from the following statement taken from the annual circular of PIXLEY & ABELL, London. The prices are for standard bar silver, and are the average annual price for each year named:

Years.	Average price per oz.	Years.	Average price per oz.
1845	d. 59½	1860	d. 61 11/16
1846	59 5/8	1861	60 13/16
1847	59 11/16	1862	61 7/16
1848	59½	1863	61½
1849	59⅜	1864	61⅜
1850	60 1/16	1865	61 1/16
1851	61	1866	61⅛
1852	60½	1867	60 15/16
1853	61⅛	1868	60⅞
1854	61⅛	1869	60⅞
1855	61 5/16	1870	60 15/16
1856	61 5/16	1871	60⅞
1857	61⅜	1872	60 15/16
1858	61 5/16	1873	59⅞
1859	62 1/16	1874	59 5/16

From the latter part of 1874 the price has continued to decline, until now the quotation is about 53¼*d.*, against about 60*d.* during the thirty years given above. The truth is, that in 1837 we placed too high a value on silver compared with gold; that is, we made the difference 16 to 1, and, as a consequence, our silver dollars were more valuable than gold, and passed out of the country or out of existence rapidly. Hence since 1853 we have coined no silver dollars under this old law, although the authority to do so has remained in force until the act of 1873, when it was taken away by the following provision: "That no coins, either of gold, silver, or minor coinage, shall hereafter be issued from the Mint other than those of the denominations, standards, and weights herein set forth." But even after 1873, and until the Revised Statutes of 1874, the old silver dollar remained a legal tender to any amount.

From this table, taken from an authentic publication issued in London, it will be seen how steady and regular has been the value of this metal until very recently. The cause of this depression is easily understood, and it is only surprising that it has not been greater. This metal is now demonetized in England, Germany, and the United States, besides several other countries. The demand for it, therefore, for coinage is very limited; not only is this so, but the large amount of old coin in the different German kingdoms and principalities, amounting to the large sum of three hundred and fifty millions, was thrown on the market to be exchanged for gold. France and the other Latin nations were compelled, as a measure of protection against this foreign silver invasion, which would have drained them of their gold, to pass laws limiting the amount of silver coinage.

The Senator from Ohio stated in his last speech that this limit to silver coinage in France and other southern countries was owing to the fact that silver was gradually becoming less valuable than gold, hence the necessity of limiting the quantity. This is not the fact. This limit was made necessary to prevent the German silver from flooding the country and taking away the gold in its place. Indeed, all these laws limiting the amount of silver annually coined is owing to the fact that England and Germany and other countries using nothing but gold would in time absorb all the gold from the other countries, and these would retain nothing but the silver. It is a measure of protection as against foreign countries. But if all these countries now having but one standard had the two, these protective measures would not be necessary.

If silver was made a legal tender in this country for all amounts and for everything, including the payment of the public debt and duties on imports, there can be no doubt that it would at once be as valuable as gold, provided the relative value between the two was correctly fixed by law. In Europe this is 15½ to 1, and my first amendment fixed it at this rate. I did so at the time not with the view of adhering to it, but because this was the relation in Europe, and my object was to discuss the question on the European basis. This was evident from the fact that I did not propose to change the weight of the silver dollar. I believe that the relation should remain at what it was when we had the double standard; that is, 16 for 1. The silver dollar proposed to be coined is 412.8 grains troy. The gold dollar is 25.8 grains. Now, sixteen times 25.8 is 412.8. By adhering to this relation no change is made.

Much has been said about the faith of the nation and the national honor. The Senator from California gave wings to his imagination when speaking of this. This would be all very well if any one here or elsewhere proposed to do anything to tarnish it or to place on it a speck the size of the dot of a pin. I am for maintaining the national honor, and am ready to make as many sacrifices to do this as any man. This is not done by mere declamation. Tropes and figures of speech or hyperboles are not coinable. In war this honor is maintained on the field of battle, and in peace by a strict compliance with all engagements, public and private, for they go together; for the individual who has no private honesty cares not for the public faith, however much he may prate about it.

To pay in silver is said to be bad faith. And why? Because it is said not to be of equal value to gold. But if made of equal value to gold will it not answer the same purpose? If a silver dollar can be made as good as a gold dollar, certainly the home bondholder would lose nothing by taking silver; and as to the foreign bondholder, the facts are entirely different. No one, I presume, is so ignorant as to believe that we send gold in kegs to Europe to pay our semi-annual interest. This is effected by buying of exchange on London, Paris, or Berlin, as may be required. If silver is as good as gold in this country, this exchange would cost no more if paid for with silver in the place of gold. Yet the Senator from Vermont dwelt at length on the fact, that as soon as the European bondholders were informed that we were paying our bonds in silver, these bonds would at once be sent home to be paid. The Senator could not have thought much before he wrote this part of his speech. According to him, these foreign bondholders would be in a hurry to send their bonds forward to be paid in silver; or does he mean to say that these bonds would be sent here to be sold at any price for gold? Such arguments are not well founded. The foreign bondholder would receive his interest the same as he does now.

The question arises, then, why introduce silver to pay this character of debt if no one is benefited or hurt by it. In this aspect the subject assumes proportions that are world wide. As silver and gold have been the precious or roya' metals used by all nations, civilized, semi-civilized, and barbarian, in all ages, all the world over, those who advocate it being used yet for this purpose cannot see any good reason why it should be discarded. Owing to the introduction of steam for ocean navigation, and the use of the wondrous improvement of modern times, the telegraph, now circling the earth, commerce, previously somewhat restricted as to space and limited as to amount, is now co-extensive with the globe, and the amount so vast as to be nearly beyond the limits of computation.

There is at this day no sea, broad or narrow, bay or inlet, no valley or mountain, point of land or elevated peak, on the earth's surface but is now visited by the agents of commerce. Hence, as commerce has extended over a larger space and has increased in amount to an extent which may be called enormous, it does not seem wise to curtail the means of exchange by one-half. The effect of this attempt has by necessity brought about the use of paper as money, and this necessity has given rise to different schools of paper philosophers or paper financiers. At the outset the paper men believed in a convertible paper at all times and everywhere; but now, as coin is less by one-half than formerly, and consequently hard to procure, these paper promises are never to be converted, but to be exchanged as the fancy of the party might dictate—a short promise for a long one—that is, a greenback, which is a promise to pay on demand, but which promise is never to be redeemed, for a bond of 3.65, payable years after date, with the understanding that when these years roll round it is not to be paid, but is to be taken up with another bond. This is called a financial system founded on the public credit or the faith of the nation, and is advocated by the Senator from California; yet that Senator spoke at length and eloquently about national honor

How long would the honor of the nation last under such a system? To avoid the necessity of the use of irredeemable paper as money we desire to restore to its place the old silver metal. There being about as much silver as gold in the world, to demonetize silver one-half of the circulation of the world is destroyed, and this at a time when the needs of commerce require a larger amount. The effect has been to centralize wealth, first in a few favored nations that are creditors of the balance of the world, and then in the hands of few individuals in each of these nations. The capitalist and the receiver of fixed rent, the bondholder, and all men of fortune are made richer by it, as the purchasing power of a dollar is doubled by destroying the one-half of the money of the world; whereas the laborer, and indeed all persons who depend on their daily labor for a living, are reduced, for the same reason, to one-half of what they received before. The result is plain and is now before our eyes in our own country as well as abroad. There are at this day as many really poor people as as ever before—indeed I may say many more—while individuals in this country and in Europe are very numerous who count their private fortunes by many millions. We have some men in this country who are worth to-day one hundred millions. In addition to this, these men of large fortunes pay no portion of the public debt in the way of taxes, the bonds they own, and for which they want gold, paying no taxes.

There are two sides to this question of national honor. The man who receives his regular interest on his bond represents only one class; there is another class, who has no bonds, and pays a portion of taxes. It is for the interest of this last class that silver should be made a legal tender, because by increasing the circulating medium of this country and of the world you increase its means of payment, and at last it is this class on which your bondholders, capitalists, and wealthy men depend; they are like the foundation of the house, supporting the whole edifice; destroy them, and you destroy the foundation, and the whole falls to the ground.

The Senator from Vermont appended to his speech a table showing the amount of silver dollars coined since 1792 While this table is correct, it is only so to a very partial extent. It gives only the amount coined in dollars, but not the total amount of silver turned out of the Mint. From 1792-'93 to 1853, $85,486,379.90 in fractional silver currency was turned out by the Mint of Philadelphia. From 1792 to the present time $178,324,745.90 of silver money has been turned out by the mints of this country, as per the following table, furnished by Dr. Linderman, the Director of the Mint:

H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director of Mint.

The Senator from California said that the coinage capacity of all our mints was fifteen millions a year. The Director of the Mint informs me that this capacity is equal to thirty millions a year. In eleven months of this year, as per the table above, upward of seventeen millions has been coined, two-thirds of this being in small coins.

The national honor, the public faith, the necessity of restoring prosperity to the country, the further necessity of giving stability to our financial system, all point to one direction—the increase of the metallic basis in the place of the purely artificial system, now resting alone on promises to pay, and which are never redeemed, and founded alone on what the Senator from California calls the public credit. In this respect the national credit does not differ from the credit of a private person, who, however honorable he may be, however upright, however honest, if he issues his promises to pay and does not redeem them, or does so by issuing a new promise, his credit will go down in spite of his honor.

The coin basis can be increased only by the use of silver, of which we are now producing some forty millions annually, with the good promise that when our silver-producing fields in Colorado, Montana, Arizona, and New Mexico, in addition to those already known in Utah and Nevada, are sufficiently developed, the quantity produced may be quadrupled. While this is so as to silver, the reverse is known to be fact as to gold, as the annual production is now diminishing, and without any prospect for an increase. The total product of silver from Nevada from 1861 to 1875 is $215,000,000. This country now furnishes one-half of the silver and one-fourth of the gold produced in the world. The annual product of silver has doubled within a quarter of a century.

A London journal makes the following computation of the annual production of gold and silver, stated in pounds sterling, in the quinquennial periods terminating with and including the years named:

Annual average for five years.

Year.	Gold.	Silver.
1856	£20,900,000	£8,100,000
1861	24,500,000	8,200,000
1866	22,700,000	9,900,000
1871	23,000,000	10,500,000
1875	20,400,000	13,900,000

These computations correspond with those ordinarily made. Exact accuracy is not to be expected in statements of this sort. As given the table shows a relative advance in the silver production since 1851, which is undoubtedly considerable. In the first five years the silver production was only a little more than one-fourth that of gold In the last period this proportion had risen to two-thirds.

Now let us see how this compares with the relative gain in the gold production which resulted from the California and Australia discoveries. In a very meritorious work, entitled "Money," published in 1863 by Charles Moran, it is computed that the gold produced in the world prior to the new discoveries was to silver as 1 to 46 in weight, which would be the same thing as 1 to 3 in value, but had become in 1853 as 1 to 4 in weight, which would be the same thing as 4 to 1 in value. This is probably correct as to 1853, and it is probably so as to the times preceding the California discoveries, except after the discovery of the Siberian mines in Russia in the reign of the Emperor Nicholas. But even after that no estimate of gold production makes it equal to that of silver before the days of California. M. Chevalier (Fall in Gold, 1857) reckons the then annual production of silver (in pounds sterling) at 8,850,000, and states that it had not much varied since the commencement of this century, when it stood at 7,965,000. As to the annual gold production, he fixes it at the beginning of this century at 2,484,000, and makes the average from 1800 to 1848, which includes a part of the period of gold development in Siberia, at 3,250,000.

On these figures, in the twenty years following the California discovery, as compared with the forty-eight years prior thereto, the gold production was multiplied about seven times, while that of silver scarcely increased at all. On the other hand, the gain in silver during the last ten years, as compared with the preceding twenty years or fifty years, is only about 50 per cent. The silver gain within ten years is, it is true, relatively greater than that, because the production of gold has recently declined; but even with that allowance it falls far behind the relative gain of gold from 1848 to 1858. In fact, if one may assume that the gold production will hereafter not decline, that of silver, now fourteen millions sterling, must be carried up to sixty millions before it will recover the ratio to gold which it maintained for probably a century before the Siberian discoveries. As we shall see, the gain in gold after 1848 did not sensibly affect the equilibrium of the two metals. Why, then, should we believe that the much smaller gain in silver does so now?

The proposals of the Paris conference of 1867, re-enforced by the practical interests which looked for sinister gains from an appreciation in the value of money, bore fruit in the decree of the newly constituted German Empire of December, 1871, prescribing the steps leading to an exclusive gold standard, and resulting in the casting out from its circulation of $350,000,000 silver. Several adjoining small states have judged themselves unable to resist this example of a great and powerful neighbor. Hence the treaty of Sweden and Denmark of 1873 for an exclusive gold standard to come into operation January 1, 1874. Hence the apparent acquiescence of opinion among the Dutch, who still avow their preference for silver, that they too must soon adopt gold as the only standard. Hence the suspension by Belgium in 1873 of the coinage of silver, and the demand made by Switzerland in the same year for a new conference of the four states (called the Latin union) of Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, and France, bound to the double standard by the treaty of 1865, not expiring by its terms until 1880. Hence the new conference at Paris in January, 1874, as demanded by Switzerland, at which, although the double standard was still maintained, the annual coinage of legal-tender silver was prescribed for each country; an arrangement which, with slight modifications, is still in vogue.

In addition to this legislation of European countries, the fall in silver has been somewhat aided by the apparent concurrence of the United States in 1873 in the single-standard scheme. The fall may have been accelerated and perhaps aggravated by a temporary diminution of the demand for silver from India.

In the eleven years from 1853 to 1863, both inclusive, when the combined streams of gold from California and Australia were at their fullest height, $100,000,000 per annum, the average price during each year of an ounce of bar silver in London stood at five shillings one penny and a fraction of a penny in gold. The whole range of the fluctuation was in the magnitude of this fraction of a penny, which never went below one-fourth and never went above seven-eighths. Thus the extreme variation of the gold price of one ounce of silver from 1853 to 1863 was only five-eighths of a penny. Now is it for one moment credible that the fall in the price of the ounce of silver in London to three-fourths of a penny below five shillings in 1873 (the lowest price reached in any one of the forty preceding years) and the still more astounding fall to seven pennies below five shillings in March, 1876, are the results of variations in the relative production of gold and silver, when we know that variations vastly greater in times past have produced no such disturbance of price or any approximation to it?

It is not any excess of production of silver past, existing, or probably impending which has depreciated it, but it is the movement to deprive it of its ancient function as money, inaugurated at the international conference held at Paris in 1867, a mixed body of diplomats and savants with a large proportion of visionaries, theorists, and impracticables.

When properly viewed, this fact of the low price of silver is a most alarming thing; and if it is not arrested, and that speedily, all the nations of Europe, the Latin nations as well as the others, and the Indies too, will be compelled to resort to gold as the only standard. This will become a necessity as a measure of self-defense, and not because it may be desired by those nations having now the double standard. I said this fact was most alarming; and this is true. Germany was thrown into a perfect state of paralysis by demonetizing silver, and in this country, partly from the same cause, we have but a limited quantity of precious metal. Make the single standard the law throughout the world, you thereby reduce the medium of exchange one-half, and a monetary crisis will consequently be created, not confined to one country or one hemisphere, but to all countries and both hemispheres; and this not for one day, but for a generation or more. Poverty, squalid poverty, will be the lot of the laboring population of the globe, while the already rich will become richer by increasing the purchasing power of the gold dollar. In time this would lead again to the restoration of the double standard. All nations would be compelled to restore it as the only way and the only means to maintain social order and preserve the autonomy of the different states now composing the family of nations. The laboring-man, he who earns his living by the sweat of his brow day by day, has an interest in this question which true wisdom should teach us not to overlook.

A joint resolution has been introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] pledging our readiness at any time to join in a conference of the European powers on the subject of the relation of gold and silver and of the double standard. While I would prefer that we should at once invite these parties to join us at an early day, I am willing to give my support to the resolution already introduced. I hope this convention will assemble soon, otherwise France and Belgium, from necessity produced by outside pressure, will be compelled, as the only measure of self-protection against the silver invasion from England and Germany, to adopt the single standard. Neither one of these powers is disposed to this as a matter of choice, but I repeat the necessity may be forced on them. While this may not include either Italy or Austria, nevertheless it will be equivalent to making gold the only standard in the commercial world.

Although, as I have already said, all the commercial nations would in time be compelled to abandon this and return to the double standard, for the simple reason that there is not gold enough to supply the demand for it, if it be the only standard; nevertheless this point of a return to the double standard would not be reached before a long and bitter trial of the single standard, which would be the most dreadful and terrible ordeal which at present and in the now condition of the world could afflict the human race. We know how scarce the precious metals were during the Middle Ages, and for this reason how perfectly dependent on the wealthy land-owners and great barons, who then held sway, were the masses of the people. But the condition of this class is now different, and would, if reduced again to dependence, be infinitely worse now than at that time. Then he had a protector in his liege lord, and was willing to submit because his condition had been one of submission for generations, as was the case in Rome, where the equestrian order had its clients and dependents. But now, with the air of liberty surrounding him, his manly spirit will not brook dependence upon any lord or protector; he claims to be able to protect himself; and the consequence would be that a spirit of resistance would be created and let loose throughout the world, brought about by this forced condition of poverty, not only inimical to social order, but utterly destructive of everything like free government. Make this class of men pariahs, and they will make themselves pirates; war on them, and they will in self-defense war on you. The attempt to subdue them would lead to rebellion and revolution and consequent subversion of free government, and social and political chaos would be the necessary result. Leaders would spring up with genius and ability and selfish ambition, and, wielding this great power of the masses, the wealthy class and free governments would be destroyed; and for ages again the world would be thrown back to the condition it was in ages past, and man again would be plunged into slavery.

This subject, which has for some years been overlooked, engaged the attention of the statesmen of this country as early as 1828. On the 29th of December, 1828, a resolution was adopted by the Senate "requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain, with as much accuracy as possible, the proportional values of gold and silver in relation to each other." On the 4th of May, 1830, S. D. Ingham, then Secretary, submitted to Congress his report in answer to this resolution; it is Document No. 117, first session Twenty-first Congress. It is truly able and exhaustive, and worthy the study of any one investigating this subject. Appended to this report I find two papers, one from Mr. Gallatin and the other from Alexander Baring, a member of the British Parliament, and ranked among the most eminent and practical financiers of his day in England. I will here give extracts from the papers of these two distinguished men:

ALBERT GALLATIN IN FAVOR OF THE DOUBLE STANDARD.

On the 31st of December, 1829, at the request of the Treasury Department, Albert Gallatin submitted his views upon the relative value of the two precious metals, and upon various coinages, concluding with a defense of the double standard of this country, and in opposition to the British system of a single gold standard. Gallatin, during the first epoch of our national history, had no rival as a financial authority except Alexander Hamilton, the suffrages of the country being divided between them by party preferences, but the eminence of both being acknowledged by all. On the question of the double standard, fixed by the Constitution, they were in perfect harmony. Hamilton's views were given in his report of 1792 on the Mint. If those of Gallatin will weigh more at this day, it is because they were given after the British system had been introduced in 1816, and had been tried in practice. In 1829 he had retired, full of honors, from public life, and had become the head and pride of the bankers of our commercial metropolis, and this is what he then said:

"Great Britain, till the year 1797, when the suspension of cash payments took place, and all other nations to this day, have used the two metals simultaneously without any practical injury, and to the great advantage of the communities, though in many instances sufficient care had not been taken to assimilate the legal to the average market value of the two metals. A fact so notorious, so universal, and so constant is sufficient to prove that the objection, though the abstract reasoning on which it is founded is correct, can have no weight in practice.

"The whole amount of inconvenience arising from the simultaneous use of the two metals consists in this: Their relative value being fixed by law, if this changes in the market the debtor will pay, in the cheapest of the two metals, at a rate less than the standard agreed on at the time of making the contract."

Upon this Mr. Gallatin observes that it will not be true that the debtor pays less than was agreed, unless "the change in the market price is due to a fall in that of the metal in which he pays his debts," and that "if the change is due to the rise" of the other metal, he pays all that was agreed. But, answering further, he says:

"But the true answer is that the fluctuations in the relative value of the gold and silver coins, arising from the demand exceeding or falling short of the supply of either, are less in amount than the fluctuations, either in the value of the precious metals as compared with that of all other commodities, or in the relative value of bullion to coin, and even than the differences between coins, particularly gold coins, issued from the same mint; and therefore that those fluctuations in the relative value of the two species of coins are a quantity which may be neglected, and is, in fact, never taken into consideration at the time of making the contract.

"The simultaneous rise and fall of the true metals, in relation to all other commodities, though not susceptible of being precisely valued, does often take place to a greater amount than any of the other fluctuations. It is evident that whenever such rise does take place, whether generally or on the spot, it is an advantage to be able to resort to both the metals, and that if the rise is only on one of the metals, for which there happens to be a greater demand, and that should be the sole legal tender, it will be exported, and diminish in a most inconvenient way the whole amount of specie; a diminution which, in that case, cannot be remedied by resorting to the other metal which is not a legal tender. That inconvenience is still greater when gold is the metal selected for currency to the exclusion of silver, the annual supply of this last metal being much larger in value than that of gold."

Commenting upon the English policy of demonetizing silver, Mr. Gallatin says: "But not only has England by that experiment, in the face of the universal experience of mankind, gratuitously subjected herself to actual inconvenience for the sake of adhering to an abstract principle, but in so doing she has departed more widely from known principles and from those which regulate a sound metallic currency. While pretending to exclude silver, she admits it, and makes it a legal tender for all that multitude of daily purchases and contracts under forty shillings at an overrated price.

"Even if the precedent were good, it could not be conveniently adopted in the United States. To the exclusion of silver there are great objections. The American dollar of 371¼ grains of pure silver is the unit of money and standard of value on which all public and private contracts are founded."

What would have been the amazement of Albert Gallatin if he had lived until 1873, when public, corporate, and individual debts had attained a magnitude never dreamed of in his day, the national debt two thousand millions, State and municipal debts as much more, and other debts perhaps ten times as much, but all founded on "the American dollar, or 371¼ grains of pure silver," as "the standard of value," and all payable in that standard; to have witnessed the spectacle of a Congress of the United States, enacting in carelessness that all debtors, including the nation, should be deprived of their plain and essential rights and condemned to pay in the single metal of gold, certain to be carried by the universal scramble for it to an unheard-of price as measured in all property, real and personal!

Extracts from minutes of evidence taken from the committee for coinage at the board of trade April 26, 1828.

ALEXANDER BARING, esq., M. P., examined:

Question. Is it your impression that it is possible and desirable to maintain in this country a silver currency as a legal tender founded on the proportion of silver to gold established in the currency of France, or something very near it, at the same time that we maintain our present silver currency, which is obviously not in that proportion, and that there would be an advantage in that system?

Answer. I have always thought so, and certainly think so still. I have no doubt about it.

Q. The circulation of the country would then consist of a silver coinage of tokens being a legal tender only to a limited amount, and a silver coinage being a legal tender to an unlimited amount, and a gold coinage.

A. Exactly so.

Q. What are the advantages which you contemplate from the addition to our present currency of a silver currency consistent with the token silver issued in the manner you have described?

A. The value of a medium of circulation in a country where it is necessarily combined with much paper, and especially when the paper forms the larger portion, depends on its flexibility, on its power of contraction and expansion to meet the varying circumstances of the times. * * * A sudden change from peace to war, a bad harvest, or a panic year, arising from overtrading and other causes, immediately imposes upon the Bank of England, which is the heart of all our circulation, for the purpose of protecting itself, to stop the egress of specie; sometimes even to bring large quantities into the country. These indispensable remedies are always applied with more or less of restriction of the currency and consequent distress. * * * No care or prudence can enable the great bank to avoid occasional resort to those measures of defense; and that system of currency is the best which admits of their being made the least frequently, and with the least effort and derangement. Now, it is evident that the bank, wishing to re-enforce the supply of specie, can do so with infinitely increased facility, with the power of drawing gold or silver, than if it were confined to one of the metals. * * * That medium of legal tender is best which affords the best security against these forced operations. The greater the facility of the bank to right itself in these constantly recurring ebbs and floods in its specie, the greater will be the facilities of those who depend upon it, and the less frequent will be those sudden jerks and changes so fatal to credit and commerce. * * * That the efforts of the bank in 1825 for self-preservation made great havoc among its dependents throughout the country is well known; and I believe it is equally so that, while it was rumaging every corner for gold, which could alone answer its purpose, it was sending large sums of silver from its coffers, which were perfectly useless.

To the question whether it was possible to fix a legal ratio of the two metals, to which the market ratio would always correspond, he replied that it was not. He said that the market ratio "will vary with the variations in the relative value of the metals, however wisely you may adjust the difference," and that, as a consequence, under the double standard, "the practical currency may change from one to the other." But there was nothing in this which seemed to alarm him or shake his conviction that the double standard was the best. He said:

"In these matters practical experience is worth all the theories of mere speculation. The variation in France is seldom above 1-10 per cent.; it sometimes runs up to a quarter per cent. It has been, I am told, something higher on particular occasions. When the Bank of England was running all over the continent for gold, this was the case."

The country is at this moment in a terrible crisis. We hear every day of new failures. The largest manufacturing establishments, the heaviest mercantile firms, the most enterprising men—those men who have done the most to employ labor and to create wealth—are going down before this terrific storm. Those large establishments and heavy firms are like the tall trees of the forest, around whose heads the lightnings have played for a century and whose majestic branches and thick foliage have given shade and shelter to the animals of the woods for many long years; but their great height also invites the lightning's stroke and their thick foliage and wide-spreading branches expose them to the winds and storms that sweep around the earth. Those tall trees go down, torn by the roots, when the small and delicate shrub remains unharmed.

Mr. President, some time ago I offered three amendments to the Senate bill. I will take them in the inverse order. The first one was fixing the rate or ratio between silver and gold at 15½ to 1. As I stated in my speech, this was not correct, and I knew it was not at the time. It is not necessary to fix any rate at all, because the rate fixes itself. The relation of 16 to 1 would remain, because the silver dollar is 412.8 grains, the gold dollar being 25.8, and 25.8 multiplied by 16 makes 412.8. That amendment I desire to withdraw. Another amendment which I desire to withdraw is that which provided that duties on imports might be paid with silver, and also the interest upon the public debt. I will not detain the Senate by giving the reason at this late hour; but I am willing to concede that it would be better for the time being that the duties and the interest should be paid with gold. Indeed, I may say briefly that it is better for us at this time that silver should not be too valuable. I believe that we have a right to pay in silver, but silver will be very scarce for at least one year to come, and we shall have ample time. It will be much more desirable that silver may not be too valuable. If you make it too valuable you at once make a merchandise of it, and it will cease to be in circulation. I will confine all my amendments to one point, to strike out the words "not exceeding $20," so that silver shall be a legal tender for all sums, except for duties on imports and interest on the public debt.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to submit some remarks on this bill, but it is getting late, and it is evident it cannot be completed to-night. I will therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LOGAN. Before that motion is put, if the Senator will allow me, I should like to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORTON. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

ISSUE OF ARMS TO WESTERN STATES AND TERRITORIES.

Mr. LOGAN. The joint resolution (H. R. No. 129) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms was referred to the Military Committee this morning. I have consulted with enough members of the committee to authorize me to report it back with amendments; and, inasmuch as the parties interested in the question are very desirous that the measure should pass, if satisfactory to the Senate, I ask that it may be put on its passage now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments.

The first amendment was to insert after the word "protection," in line 4:

Not to exceed one thousand to said States, each, and not more than five hundred to each of said Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 4, after the word "only," to insert the words "shall be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add:

Provided, however, That said arms shall be issued in the following manner and upon the following conditions, namely: Upon the requisition of the governors of said States or Territories, showing the absolute necessity of arms for the protection of the citizens and their property against Indian raids into said States or Territories; also, that militia companies are regularly organized and under the control of said States or Territories to which such arms are to be issued, and that such governor or governors shall give a good and sufficient bond for the return of said arms, or payment for the same, at such time as the Secretary of War may designate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to amend the title so as to make it read "an act" instead of "a joint resolution."

Mr. SHERMAN. That has to go through a different form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) It came from the House as a joint resolution and could hardly be amended in that respect without confusing their records.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator from Indiana to withhold his motion to go into executive session to enable me to give a notice. I do not think it reasonable to ask the Senator from Indiana to speak to-night at this late hour; we are all quite tired and fatigued; but I shall ask the Senate to-morrow to close and finish this bill, so that we may get it out of the way. I give notice that at one o'clock to-morrow, according to order, I shall insist that this bill shall go on, against any bill that may be pending, at the expiration of the morning hour. I appeal to the Senate to let us finish this bill and get it out of the way to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORTON. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 27, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

Mr. DURHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3792) fixing the compensation, &c., of United States attorneys; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and ordered to be printed.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.

Mr. RUSK. I ask, by unanimous consent, to report back from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill (H. R. No. 1516) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others, with an amendment, so that it may be acted on at this time.

There was no objection, and the report was received.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that every person who in the line of duty, in the military or naval service of the United States, shall have lost a limb or sustained bodily injuries depriving him of the use of any of his limbs, shall receive once every five years an artificial limb or appliance, under such regulations as the Surgeon-General of the Army may prescribe; and the period of five years shall be held to commence with the filing of the first application after the 17th day of June, in the year 1870.

The second section provides that necessary transportation to have artificial limbs fitted shall be furnished by the Quartermaster-General of the Army, the cost of which shall be refunded out of any money appropriated for the purchase of artificial limbs.

The third section of the bill provides that every person entitled under the laws of the United States to a pension on account of a leg or arm which is wholly disabled and cannot be rendered serviceable by any mechanical appliance shall be entitled to receive the same pension as if said leg or arm had been amputated at or above the knee or elbow.

Mr. RUSK. The amendment of the committee is to strike out that third section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings a copy of the present law in regard to artificial limbs and a statement upon the subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to having printed in the RECORD anything the gentleman may want to present as an argument, but to print a law that is already on the statute-books——

Mr. RUSK. It is very short; it is only two sections. I desire to print it in this connection to show the necessity for the passage of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. If it is short, I have no objection.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

The following are the papers referred to by Mr. RUSK:

SEC. 4787. Every officer, soldier, seaman, and marine, who was disabled, during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, in the military or naval service, and in the line of duty, or in consequence of wounds received or disease contracted therein, and who was furnished by the War Department, since the 17th day of June, 1870, with an artificial limb or apparatus for resection, who was entitled to receive such limb or apparatus since said date, shall be entitled to receive a new limb or apparatus at the expiration of every five years thereafter, under such regulations as have been or may be prescribed by the Surgeon-General of the Army.

SEC. 4788. Every person entitled to the benefits of the preceding section may, if he so elects, receive, instead of such limb or apparatus, the money value thereof, at the following rates, namely: For artificial legs, $75; for arms, $50; for feet, $50; for apparatus for resection, $50. (Revised Statutes.)

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. TERRY. I am recorded in the Journal as not voting on the yeas and nays taken yesterday upon the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution offered by him. I voted in the negative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction will be made.

ELEANOR ARMSTRONG.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3793) granting a pension to Eleanor Armstrong, widow of Jacob D. Armstrong, a soldier who served the United States more than twenty-five years; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

RETIRING ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. FORT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3794) to retire an Army officer from active duty on account of age and distinguished services; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPRINTING REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. CUTLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 137) for reprinting the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1875; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

MICHAEL EMMET URELL.

Mr. STEELE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3795) for the relief of Michael Emmet Urell, late a second lieutenant in the volunteer service of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CATTARAUGUS AND ALLEGANY RESERVATION IN NEW YORK.

Mr. GOODIN. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the communication from the Interior Department relating to the survey of the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservation in the State of New York, have directed me to report the same back to the House and to move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with the recommendation that the sum of $15,500 be appropriated to pay for the surveys, as estimated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now call for the regular order. I think it is better to have business proceed regularly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin at twenty-nine minutes past twelve o'clock. The first business in order is the call of committees for reports of a public nature. The unfinished business from the last morning hour is the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HURLBUT. The Committee on the Judiciary has already occupied their two morning hours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is true, but this is pending unfinished business in the morning hour, and must be disposed of.

Mr. HURLBUT. I understand that it was postponed until Monday next.

Mr. SAMPSON. This bill was in charge of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the exact position of the bill as shown by the Journal. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed. Subsequently the gentleman withdrew that motion, and it was renewed by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. SAMPSON,] who is entitled to the floor upon the bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. And then the postponement was made.

Mr. SAMPSON. By an arrangement with Judge LYNDE, who has charge of this bill, it was agreed that it might be passed over until next Monday, and would not be called up before that time.

Mr. HURLBUT. That is the fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is now before the House. Does the gentleman move that its further consideration be postponed until Monday next?

Mr. SAMPSON. I do.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not certain that the House will be in session on Monday next.

Mr. REAGAN. The Committee on the Judiciary have but one or two bills more to report, and I ask consent that they be allowed to report them now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would require unanimous consent, the Committee on the Judiciary having occupied the two morning hours to which they are entitled under the rule.

Mr. LYNDE. I wish to say that there was an arrangement made between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] and myself, so far as we had power to make an arrangement. Anticipating that there would be a thin House, that many members would be absent attending the Saint Louis convention, I agreed with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] that so far as he and I were concerned his motion to reconsider should not be called up until Monday next. I am disposed to keep that arrangement; if ratified by the House, well and good. I do not pretend to make any arrangement that would control the action of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] that the motion now pending is that of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Monday next.

The motion of Mr. SAMPSON was agreed to.

HEIRS OF GERARD WOOD.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the heir and legal representatives of Gerard Wood, deceased.

Mr. HURLBUT. I make the point of order that that is not a public bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HURLBUT. If the House chooses I do not wish to stand in the way.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 3796) was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be allowed to make an additional report at this time of a joint resolution (H. R. No. 24) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay over to the State of Texas the balance remaining of the fund appropriated by the acts of September 9, 1850, and February 28, 1855, for the payment of the creditors of the late republic of Texas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on the Judiciary had already had two morning hours, and the gentleman from Texas now asks unanimous consent that they be allowed to report further at this time.

Mr. SEELYE. How long will that bill occupy?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not informed.

Mr. SEELYE. There are other committees with very important business requiring the attention of the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not think it will occupy more than ten minutes.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the gentleman can get unanimous consent to introduce that bill at some other time. There are other committees with pressing business at this time, and I think they ought not to be set aside.

Mr. REAGAN. I will not insist if any objection is made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is objection made?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. I object at this time.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest, then, that the report be allowed to be made to-morrow morning. [Cries of "Regular order."]

COLLECTION OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Public Expenditures, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2816) to reduce the expenses of collecting customs.

The bill was read.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order on that bill that it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. It provides for making contracts requiring a disbursement of money.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It is evidently in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. KASSON. That makes no difference in reference to the rule requiring bills involving expenditures to be first considered in Committee of the Whole. It touches the whole system of revenue, and provides for a new mode of paying the officers engaged in the collection of revenue.

Mr. DIBRELL. Under Rule 85, on page 184 of the Digest, this bill was properly before the Committee on Public Expenditures.

The rule is as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Committee on Public Expenditures to examine into the state of the several public Departments, and particularly into laws making appropriations of money, and to report whether the moneys have been disbursed conformably with such laws; and also to report from time to time such provisions and arrangements as may be necessary to add to the economy of the Departments and the accountability of their officers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is not upon the propriety of the original reference to the Committee on Public Expenditures; that reference was made by the action of the House; and the Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to Rule 112, on page 191 of the Digest.

Mr. DIBRELL. I would say, in response to the gentleman from Iowa, that the bill does not make any appropriation of money at all, and therefore it is not necessary that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill evidently makes provision for an appropriation of money, and the Chair is constrained to hold that under Rule 112 it must be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RUSK. I think the bill belongs to the Committee on Commerce, and should go there and be considered by them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order has been made and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, under the rules of the House.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Manufactures, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3202) providing for a commission of skilled mechanics to attend the centennial exhibition.

The bill was read.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I make the point of order on that bill that it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the reference will be made.

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. SEELYE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3797) to amend section 2139 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read.

It provides that section 2139 of the Revised Statutes be amended by striking out the phrase "except an Indian."

Mr. SEELYE. The reason of this bill is that the exception which it proposes to abolish permits the introduction of spirituous liquors by Indians into any part of the Indian Territory.

This results in very great mischief. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred by the House, have unanimously reported this bill excluding that exception, and I ask its passage.

Mr. LUTTRELL. How will the section of the Revised Statutes read with this amendment? Will it provide that there shall be no introduction of spirituous liquors?

Mr. SEELYE. The section now provides that no one shall introduce spirituous liquor in the Indian Territory except Indians, and the bill strikes out that exception.

Mr. KASSON. As I understood the law when it was first framed, I got the impression which the gentleman from Massachusetts seems to entertain, that an Indian could introduce liquor into the Indian country. But, on the contrary, the first section provides that no ardent spirits shall be introduced under any pretense into the Indian country. The section then goes on to provide that "every person, except an Indian, in the Indian country who sells, exchanges, gives, barters, &c., shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years and by fine not more than $300;" so that the effect of the provision (and I mention it for the purpose of seeing whether I have the same understanding as the gentleman from Massachusetts) is to make this identical punishment apply to an Indian as well as to a white man. Am I right in that construction?

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Speaker, this section of the Revised Statutes was intended to prohibit the introduction of ardent spirits among the Indians. The prohibition was universal except as to Indians; but this exception has opened the door by which all the evils that the statute was designed to guard against have been permitted. The Committee on Indian Affairs unanimously recommend that the Indian in this matter be placed upon precisely the same footing as the white man.

Mr. GUNTER. Does not the statute to which the gentleman refers prohibit absolutely all persons, both white and Indian, from introducing liquor into that country, while the exception is as to the punishment for trafficking in liquors in that country? As I understand, all persons are prohibited from introducing ardent spirits there; but after their introduction it is made punishable for all except Indians to trade in them.

Mr. SEELYE. That is exactly true; and that makes the prohibition wholly nugatory as relates to the Indians.

Mr. GUNTER. The exception has reference to the sale after the liquor is introduced.

Mr. SEELYE. Of course; but there is no punishment, and thus practically there is no prohibition.

Mr. GUNTER. My understanding is that there is a punishment applicable to all for the introduction, but not for trafficking in or selling the liquor after its introduction.

Mr. SEELYE. As to the introduction, there is no punishment applicable to the Indian.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Under the existing law an Indian can go off the reservation, buy liquor from a white man, and take it upon the reservation. Why not prevent the sale of liquor to the Indians either on or off the reservations?

Mr. SEELYE. That I have no doubt would be wise; but that was not the point to which the Committee on Indian Affairs had their attention directed by the House. This is an important step in the right direction.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The courts in our country have decided that outside the Indian reservation they have no jurisdiction over the liquor traffic with the Indian. Why would it not be well to provide for punishing that traffic outside the reservation?

Mr. SEELYE. I think that would be desirable; but that is not a matter to which the attention of the committee has been called by the House. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SEELYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. BOONE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas certain lands in the State of Kansas, known as the Cherokee strip, being a strip of land on the southern boundary of Kansas, some two or three miles wide, detached from the lands patented to the Cherokee Nation by the act known as the Kansas-Nebraska bill, in defining the boundaries thereof, said lands still being, so far as unsold, the property of the Cherokee Nation; and whereas an act was passed by the Forty-second Congress, which became a law on its acceptance by the Cherokee national authorities, and which fixed the price of the lands east of the Arkansas River at $2 per acre, and west of said river at $1.50 per acre; and whereas portions of the same have been sold under said law and portions remain unsold, the price being too high: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary shall offer for sale to settlers all of said tract remaining unsold at the passage of this act at the local land-offices in the districts in which it is situated, at $1.25 per acre; and all of said lands remaining unsold after one year from the date at which they are so offered for sale at the local land-offices shall be sold by the Secretary of the Interior for cash, in such amounts as he may best find purchasers for, at not less than $1 per acre.

SEC. 2. That the proceeds of said lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and placed to the credit of the Cherokee Nation, and shall be paid to the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation, on the order of the legislative council of the Cherokee Nation, or a delegation thereof duly authorized, and until it has thus been paid shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, to be paid as interest of other moneys due the Cherokee Nation.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from the date of its acceptance by the legislature of the Cherokee Nation, or of a delegation thereof duly authorized, who shall file certificate of such acceptance.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 9 and 10 of section 1 strike out at "in such amounts as he may best find purchasers for" and insert "in quantities or tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres."

In the second section strike out all after the word "authorized," in line 5.

Mr. BOONE. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. BROWN.]

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. The strip of land which this bill proposes to dispose of is two or three miles wide and about two hundred miles long, extending along the southern boundary of our State. It belongs to the Cherokee Nation; but under the law as now existing it was provided that the lands lying east of the Arkansas River should be sold to actual settlers at $2 an acre and those west of the river at $1.50 an acre up to a certain time, which time expired something over a year ago. At that time it was made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to offer the entire strip for sale under sealed bids. It has been offered under sealed bids, but so small a portion was sold that it is stated in the Indian Bureau to be the fact that more than one-half of the proceeds of the portion sold was taken in order to pay for the advertisements. The Indians who are present here representing the Cherokees and myself and others, in consultation, agreed on this bill opening the lands once more to settlement for one year at the rate of $1.25 per acre, provided after that time they may be again sold by the Secretary of the Interior under sealed bids at that price. It is satisfactory, as I understand it, to the Indians. They have agreed to it. The bill cannot take effect until it is agreed to by the council of the Cherokees or a delegation of that tribe. It is also recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In my judgment the bill is right in every particular and ought to pass.

Mr. BOONE. I am well satisfied the bill ought to pass, and therefore demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments of the committee were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOONE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIM OF CHOCTAW NATION.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back for bill H. R. No. 3463 a substitute (H. R. No. 3798) for the relief of the Choctaw Nation of Indians; which was read a first and second time.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

A bill for the relief of the Choctaw Nation of Indians.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Choctaw Nation of Indians be, and hereby is, authorized to commence an action in the United States Court of Claims to recover whatever is due, if anything, to said nation from the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians of the 22d day of June, A. D. 1855; and said court is hereby clothed with jurisdiction to hear and determine said action, and shall render judgment for the amount which may be found due, if anything, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the 9th day of March, 1859; and said court shall be authorized in the determination of such action, to go behind the treaty of 1855, and inquire into the merits of the Choctaw claim so far as the same may be affected by fraud in the making of any treaty with said tribe or ratifying the same, or in any negotiation or official correspondence relating to the same; or by any act of Congress or reports of Departments touching Indian affairs, or any previous settlements with or receipts executed by the duly constituted authorities of said tribe; and either party may prosecute an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from such judgment, if such appeal be prayed within thirty days from the rendition thereof; and in the hearing and determination of said suit the said courts, or either of them, shall give said action precedence over other cases.

SEC. 2. The said action shall be commenced by a petition stating the facts on which said nation claims to recover and the amount of its claim; and said petition may be verified by either of the authorized delegates of said nation as to the existence of such facts; and no other statements need be contained in said petition or verification.

SEC. 3. That if final judgment be rendered in favor of said nation, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the same being certified to him under the seal of the court rendering the same, shall pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the proper authorities of said nation, upon their requisition, so much of said judgment as they shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the just liabilities of the tribe to its individual members referred to in said treaty, such costs of suit and attorneys as may be allowed by the court, and shall retain the balance, if any, in trust for said nation, as provided in the thirteenth article of said treaty; or said Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, make such payment aforesaid to the proper authorities aforesaid, by delivering to them any bonds of the United States which have been or may be authorized by law bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. And the payment of the judgment recovered under this act shall be held to be a full satisfaction of all claims arising under said eleventh and twelfth articles of said treaty; and in the event of a final decision in said courts against the Choctaws, such decision shall be a bar to the further prosecution of said claims.

Mr. FORT. I raise the point of order on that bill that it makes an appropriation, and must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay the bill on the table. We might as well kill it at once.

Mr. FORT. Perhaps that is the better motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the House refuse to lay it on the table the next question would be on its passage. By refusing to lay it upon the table the point of order sending the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would be waived.

Mr. RANDALL. We might as well kill it at once. It involves the expenditure of over $2,000,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But if the House refuse to kill it, you waive the privilege of sending it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the point of order.

Mr. FORT. It has been killed already.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The motion to lay on the table is not in order if the point of order is insisted upon, because the motion to lay upon the table is consideration.

Mr. FORT. If the motion to lay on the table fail, will the point of order then lie?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the point of order I raised, that the point of order will not lie.

Mr. FORT. Then I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being raised that the bill provides for an appropriation of money, the Chair sustains the point of order; and the bill, under the rule, goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I rise to move that the bill be made the special order for July 6.

Mr. FORT. I make the point of order that that cannot be done unless by unanimous consent, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be done by unanimous consent, and objection is made.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Does this make an appropriation by Congress?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; several millions.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The object of the bill is to allow certain parties to bring suit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not before the House, but has gone to the Committee of the Whole under the rule.

INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3799) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain Indian funds, to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in payment of 6 per cent. United States bonds; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to deposit in the Treasury of the United States any and all sums now held by him, or which may hereafter be received by him as Secretary of the Interior and trustee of the various Indian tribes on account of the redemption of United States bonds, or other stocks and securities belonging to the Indian trust fund, whenever he is of the opinion that the best interests of the Indians will be promoted by such deposits in lieu of investments, and the United States shall pay the interest semi-annually, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of the deposit of any and all such sums in the United States Treasury; provided, that the amount so deposited shall be used in the payment or extinction of the bonds of the United States now bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum.

Mr. MORGAN. There are now in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior about $425,000 in coin checks which have arisen from the redemption of 5.20 bonds belonging to various tribes of Indians. Under the present law, the Secretary of the Interior is required to invest this money in Government bonds. At the present time the premium upon Government bonds is greater than the premium upon gold coin, so that he cannot make investments without diminishing the principal. The Secretary of the Interior recommends that he be authorized to deposit this money belonging to the various tribes of Indians with the Secretary of the Treasury to be invested at the amount of 5 per cent. interest. The bill was proposed by the Secretary of the Interior and met the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I think under the circumstances it should be passed. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. KASSON. If it is not too late, there is one point in the bill which I do not understand. These are sums that are received for the redemption of United States bonds, &c., and yet we are to pay interest on the sums paid to redeem our bonds. There is a point there which I do not quite understand. It seems like subjecting the United States to double interest.

Mr. MORGAN. The bonds belong to various Indian tribes. They were the owners of 5.20 bonds and the bonds were redeemed, and coin checks are in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. Now, all that this bill proposes is that the Secretary may deposit the same at 5 per cent. interest, with the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Interior reports that the premium on Government bonds now is higher than upon coin checks and he cannot make the investment without decreasing the principal, and he merely asks the privilege of depositing them with the Secretary of the Treasury at 5 per cent. interest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this discussion proceeds only by unanimous consent.

Mr. KASSON. I only made the inquiry for information. If the Committee on Indian Affairs are satisfied that this does not subject us to double interest I have no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. O, no.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to invest some other funds belonging to Indians.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous content, the main question having been ordered.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask that my amendment be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be read by unanimous consent.

No objection was made, and the amendment proposed by Mr. HUBBELL was read, as follows:

And that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to invest in the bonds of the United States, bearing interest at a rate not to exceed 5 per cent. per annum, the unexpended balance, together with interest thereon at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, from the 23d day of June, 1874, of the money appropriated to the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Chippewas of Lake Superior, under the pro——

Mr. MORGAN. I am not authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs to accept any amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from Missouri objects and the amendment cannot be offered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MIAMI INDIANS.

Mr. MORGAN. At the request of Mr. VAN VORHES, on the Committee on Indian Affairs, who is absent, I report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 619) to carry out in part the provisions of an act entitled "An act to abolish tribal relations of the Miami Indians, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Mr. MORGAN also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3800) for the relief of the Pottawatomie Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PAGE, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment and with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1335) to declare the country north of the North Platte River and east of the summits of the Big Horn Mountains, in the Territory of Wyoming, open to exploration and settlement, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all that portion of country north of the North Platte River and east of the summits of the Big Horn Mountains, in the Territory of Wyoming, is hereby declared to be open to exploration and settlement; and the true intent and meaning of the treaty with the Sioux Indians, concluded April 29, 1868, is declared to be that white men are not excluded thereby from traveling over, exploring, or settling upon any portion of the Territory of Wyoming not included within the boundaries of the permanent reservation established for said Sioux Indians by the second article of said treaty of April 29, 1868.

The amendment reported by the committee was to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair the rights of the Indians to hunt within the limits of the Territory mentioned in this act.

Mr. PAGE. I do not desire to discuss the bill at all. It has been carefully considered by the committee and unanimously reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass. If any gentleman desires to be heard upon it, I will yield the floor; if not, I will call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JENKS. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. PAGE. I hope not. The morning hour will expire in a few minutes.

Mr. JENKS. I withdraw the call.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I renew it.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the morning hour expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has just expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the report from the Select Committee on the Texan Border Troubles, which is a joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) to provide for the protection of the Texas frontier on the Lower Rio Grande. That was made the special order for the 20th of April, and from day to day until disposed of. I gave notice the other day that I would call it up at the first opportunity.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I submit that upon the call for the regular order the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] is entitled to the floor on the Geneva-award bill; and he has agreed to yield to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. According to the calendar of "reports of committees and bills undisposed of" the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] is entitled to claim the floor for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award. If the gentleman desires to claim the floor at this time the Chair will be compelled to recognize him.

Mr. PAYNE. I rise to make a privileged report.

Mr. LORD. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] has a privileged report, which will not take much time. By an arrangement made a great many days ago I consented to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] for a short time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SCHLEICHER] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] as soon as this privileged report is disposed of, and they can bring before the House the question of priority in regard to the subjects upon which they desire the attention of the House at this time.

CHARGE AGAINST THE CLERK.

Mr. PAYNE. I submit at this time a report from the Select Committee to Investigate the Charge against the Clerk of this House.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The special committee instructed to investigate the charge against George M. Adams, esq., the Clerk of the House, published in the Chicago Inter-Ocean of May 15, 1876, report that they have examined under oath the correspondent of that paper, certain other persons whose names were connected with this scandal, and all of the employés of the Clerk. The evidence is explicit and conclusive that in no case has any pecuniary or other consideration been paid or promised by or on behalf of any party receiving an appointment from Mr. Adams, either directly to him or indirectly to any other persons for his account.

It appears that a disappointed applicant, from pique or resentment, started a rumor that the present chief engineer, at the time of his appointment, held a note against Mr. Adams for $500. This was caught up and retailed by an eccentric relative of another disappointed applicant, and, reaching the ear of a too hasty and credulous correspondent, it suddenly grew into the proportion of a sensational item, inconsiderately and inexcusably given publicity to, of a charge of venal and criminal conduct against a meritorious officer of the House. The utter groundlessness and falsity of the charge are confessed by the correspondent, his informants, and all other parties concerned in giving it circulation, and are also confirmed by the oaths of Mr. Adams and the engineer.

In regard to the latter it is proper to say that he was not a political friend of the Clerk, nor an acquaintance of his previous to the commencement of the present session. And, though presenting strong testimonials as to character and qualifications, he was, with three other applicants, compelled to submit to a competitive examination before the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy Department, and it was on the official certificate of William W. W. Wood, the chief of that Bureau, that he was, of all the candidates examined, the best qualified, that he was appointed chief engineer of the heating and ventilating apparatus of the House.

For the care and solicitude shown by the Clerk in filling this important position, in which skill, judgment, experience, and vigilance are specially required, he is, in the opinion of the committee, entitled to the commendation and thanks of the House.

The testimony is reported herewith, with the recommendation that it be laid on the table, and the committee discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

H. B. PAYNE.
WM. H. FORNEY.
LEVI MAISH.
JOHN T. WAIT.
T. J. HENDERSON.

Mr. PAYNE. This is the unanimous report of the committee. I move that the report be received and the committee discharged.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the question of consideration is raised between the bill in charge of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] and the joint resolution in charge of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. SCHLEICHER.] In the order of "reports of committees and bills undisposed of," the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky has precedence, and the question will first be put upon proceeding to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Then I will ask that immediately after the House shall dispose of the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] it will proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution reported from the Select Committee on the Texas Border Troubles.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. We will agree to that.

Mr. LORD. I do not think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] has the right to make any such agreement.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do not claim the right; I was merely expressing my consent.

Mr. LORD. By an arrangement made a long time ago I consented to yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. JONES.] After his bill shall have been disposed of, I shall insist upon the consideration of the Geneva award bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This matter of priority of business is not to be determined by individual members, but by a vote of the House.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I ask that the House now proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2798) to authorize the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railway from tide-water to the cities of Saint Louis and Chicago.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that this is a question of consideration between the various bills; that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] has no right to yield the precedence of the Geneva award bill in this way. If this bill comes up then it is before the House and obstructs the Geneva award bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is unquestionably a question of consideration between these bills.

Mr. DURHAM. I desire to say that I have the oldest standing order. I gave way for the Geneva award bill; but I cannot give way for any other order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] state what his order is?

Mr. DURHAM. It is House bill No. 2284, to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes concerning mineral lands.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Have I the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only upon the question of consideration.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. It is not necessary to go into Committee of the Whole upon this bill. It has never been referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not necessary to go into Committee of the Whole on any of these bills.

Mr. FAULKNER. This bill appropriates neither money nor lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Kentucky insists upon it, the Chair will put the question. It may as well be determined one way as another.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The Chair will allow me to say that this bill was reported from the committee two months ago, and has been a special order since that time.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of order. It is that, under the rules of the House, bills which have not precedence of the one presented by my colleague [Mr. SCHLEICHER] are not entitled to consideration unless the rules are suspended, which cannot be done on this day, nor by less than two-thirds.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest, as a solution of this matter, that these special orders be taken up in their order. Let the House decide by a majority vote whether it will proceed with the consideration of the first special order. If not, then let that be laid aside and the question put as to the next, and so on.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I desire to say one word. This bill has been put on the Calendar of the House in regular order, and has been there from day to day for two months.

Mr. HANCOCK. Then let it stay there.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I have yielded repeatedly to accommodate many gentlemen.

Mr. HANCOCK. If the bill is on the regular Calendar, I object to it being taken up out of its order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that, under the supposition that it was agreed between the gentlemen who represented the reports undisposed of that the gentleman from Kentucky should first be recognized, the Chair recognized that gentleman. He is informed by the journal clerk that it has been the custom of the Speaker of the House so to do. Having recognized the gentleman representing a particular bill to put the motion on his bill, the Chair will now state the order in which he will dispose of these questions, which seems to the Chair the only proper way. The Chair will first put the question upon the consideration of the bill represented by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. JONES.] If that is sustained by the House, that of course is an end of the question. If it is not sustained, the Chair will then put the motion upon the bill represented by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM,] which stands first in the order of precedence.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I ask that the title of the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] be read.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The consideration of the bill will not take more than twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All debate is out of order.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2798) to authorize the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railway from tide-water to the cities of Saint Louis and Chicago.

Mr. REAGAN. I made a point of order and have not yet heard the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided to the best of his ability, and cannot decide it any further. The question is, Will the House take up for consideration the bill the title of which has been just read by the Clerk.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 59; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no further count demanded, the question recurs on the next bill.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] has the floor on the Geneva-award bill, which is the unfinished business, and he is entitled to the floor until it is disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York does not advocate his claim.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I call for a further count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the gentleman, but he will take his assurance.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There was some misapprehension as to the vote, and I will be satisfied with another rising vote.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Perhaps a word on this may influence the opinion of the House.

Several MEMBERS. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No money or land in it.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 50.

Several MEMBERS. Further count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum voting, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, and Mr. DURHAM were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 50.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No further count being demanded, the House now proceeds to the consideration of the bill reported by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] from the Committee on Railways and Canals.

WASHINGTON, CINCINNATI AND SAINT LOUIS RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I now ask the Clerk to read the bill, and to ease the minds of gentlemen I will say that I do not propose to discuss it.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company, a corporation created under the laws of the State of Virginia by an act of the General Assembly of that State approved March 15, 1872, are hereby recognized as a corporation under said charter within that State, and are hereby authorized and empowered, under the jurisdiction of the United States, to extend the line of their said railroad through the States of West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, to the city of Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri, and to the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, and for that purpose are hereby created a body corporate and politic under the laws of the United States, with all the privileges, powers, duties, obligations, and rights necessary, usual, and proper for the purposes aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That the said corporation are hereby empowered and authorized to locate, establish, construct, and maintain a continuous line of narrow-gauge railroad, with single or double track, with all the necessary appurtenances; and also a telegraph line, from any point in the State of Virginia opposite the District of Columbia, through the said State of Virginia, westward, by the route designated in their said charter from the said State of Virginia; and thence through the State of West Virginia, by the most direct and eligible route, to be designated by said corporation, to a point on the Ohio River at or north of Point Pleasant, in the county of Mason; thence to cross the Ohio River by a bridge or tunnel; thence, by the most direct and eligible routes, to be selected by said company, through the State of Ohio, via Cincinnati, in Hamilton County, to the Indiana State line; thence, by the most direct and eligible route, to be selected by the said corporation, through the States of Indiana and Illinois, to the city of Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri, together with a branch line from any point selected by said corporation on the main line of their railroad, in either the State of Indiana or Ohio, to the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, and also to extend their said main line eastward through the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland to the city of Baltimore.

SEC. 3. That the capital stock of said corporation shall be and remain as fixed in the charter from the said State of Virginia at the sum of $15,000,000, and be divided into shares of $100 each; and the corporation shall have power to issue bonds, payable, principal and interest, in gold, to the amount of their capital stock of fifteen millions, for the sole purpose of construction of their said railroad, which bonds shall bear interest at the rate of not more than 6 per cent. per annum in gold coin, and which interest shall be payable at the office of said company in the city of Washington semi-annually, or at the agency of the company in the city of London; the said bonds not to be negotiated for less than eighty cents in gold per dollar, the proceeds of which, when negotiated by said corporation, shall be applied to the construction of said road, including as a part of the same the bridge over the Ohio River at a cost not to exceed $1,000,000; said bonds shall become due and payable in thirty years after date.

The said bonds shall be secured by mortgage upon all the real and personal property of said corporation, and said mortgage, when made, shall constitute the first lien upon the track, road-bed, right of way, real estate, and franchise of said corporation and telegraph line, and so much of the earnings of said company as may be required to provide for the interest and a sinking fund as provided in this act; and said bonds shall be known and designated as first-mortgage bonds.

For the purpose of more specifically providing for the interest on the fifteen million of first-mortgage bonds as it shall mature from time to time, and for a sinking fund sufficient, as hereinafter provided, to redeem such bonds at or before maturity, there shall be set apart by the said company as the installments for the sinking fund shall become due and payable, as follows:

First. The entire net proceeds of sale of lands granted to aid in the construction of the road upon which bonds shall be issued under the provisions of this act.

Secondly. The whole amount that shall be earned and due from the Government of the United States for the transportation of troops and supplies and for its postal and telegraphic service.

Thirdly. A sufficient amount from the earnings of the road to make up each interest payment to be provided for, and also to provide a sinking fund, to commence with the year 1880 and to continue until the year 1900, equal to 1 per cent., and thereafter 2 per cent, on the whole amount of said bonds so issued and outstanding; the payments for account of such fund, with its accretions, to be invested annually in these bonds by the treasurer of the company; and all of said bonds purchased for said sinking fund shall, when so purchased, be canceled by the treasurer and directors of said company.

The said company shall have power to construct branches and lateral roads not exceeding one hundred miles in length, except one to connect with the Northern Pacific and one with the Union Pacific Railroad, which said branches shall not be limited in their length.

SEC. 4. That in case it shall be deemed advisable by the board of directors of said corporation to purchase, lease, consolidate with, or otherwise acquire any franchise or franchises from any other railroad, railway, or other company or corporation, as a portion of its main line or branches hereinbefore authorized, which said franchises are established under State charters or general laws, they are hereby empowered so to do; but in all cases the consent of the Legislature of the State granting the charter shall first be had, expressed in the form of law, unless such right shall be already recognized in the charter of said railway, railroad, or other company or corporation, or by the general laws of the State.

The said corporation may, from time to time, make and issue its bonds in such manner and form, for such sums, payable at such times and places, bearing such interest, and disposable upon such terms as the directors may deem advisable, and, to secure said bonds, may give a mortgage or mortgages upon its road, equipment, land, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property, and any part or parts thereof, subject to such terms, conditions, and limitations as the directors may prescribe; but all such mortgages shall be subordinate to the lien created by said first mortgage to secure the bonds for construction of said road.

SEC. 5. That the said railroad shall be and remain a public highway and postal route, so far as the same may be constructed under this act, for the use of the Government of the United States.

SEC. 6. That where the route of said railroad and its branches shall pass through the lands of private persons, or where it may be necessary for said railroad company to take any lands belonging to private persons for any of the purposes herein mentioned necessary to said road, such right of way through or title to such lands shall be secured in accordance with the laws of the State in which they may be situated.

SEC. 7. That the president and board of directors of this company may, and are hereby authorized to, appoint an agent or agents in any State through which the said line of road may pass, to secure subscriptions from cities, towns, townships, counties, corporations, joint-stock companies, and individuals, to the capital stock of the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company, payable in money, leases, lands, mines, labor, or material; and that the same may be collected under the laws of each State in which the same may be subscribed: Provided always, That such subscriptions can be lawfully made under the constitution and laws of such State.

SEC. 8. That the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company may avail itself of any of the provisions of the laws of the States through which the line of road may pass governing railroad companies, the same as if operating under a charter from such States, except as otherwise provided in this act.

SEC. 9. That the said board of directors of said company shall, within ninety days after the passage of this act, accept the provisions of this act by recording such acceptance in their minutes at any regular meeting of said board of directors, and filing the same properly authenticated for record at the proper office.

SEC. 10. That the said Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad shall be commenced within six months and constructed in six years from the passage of this act, in a substantial and workman-like manner, with all necessary draws, culverts, bridges, viaducts, turn-outs, stations, watering-places, and all other appurtenances, including furniture and rolling-stock, equal in all respects to those of first-class narrow-gauge railroads when prepared for business; a uniform gauge of three feet to be continued throughout the entire length of the road. There shall also be constructed along the whole length of the road a line of telegraph of the most substantial and approved description.

SEC. 11. That the said corporation, in constructing its said road, shall conform to all the laws and regulations of the several States through which it may pass, in relation to crossings of other railroads and public roads, and canals and navigable waters, or other streams within the jurisdiction and control of said States, on or after its construction, and shall be subject to all general police-regulations established by the general laws of such States.

SEC. 12. That said railroad shall not be constructed through any portion of the District of Columbia until the proposed line of said road through said District shall have been accurately surveyed and mapped and submitted to and approved by Congress, prior to the commencement of any work upon the same.

SEC. 13. That the consent of the United States is hereby given to the erection and maintenance by said company of a double-track bridge across the Ohio River: Provided, however, That said bridge shall be constructed in conformity with the laws in force as to bridges over said river and that the plans, specifications, and points of crossing shall be first approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 14. That Congress shall at all times, whenever, in its judgment, the public good requires it, have the right to interpose its authority to regulate the rates of travel and transportation on the said railroad by general laws applicable to all railroads constructed under charters granted by the Government of the United States.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I move the following substitute for the fifth section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the said railroad shall be and remain a public highway and postal-railway route of the first class for the use of the Government of the United States; and said railroad company shall receive annually from said Government as pay for such service on said railroad the rates per mile per annum now allowed by law, or such pay as may be allowed hereafter by law for such mail service.

That any mortgage or mortgages executed and delivered as authorized by this act shall be recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds for the city of Washington, and District of Columbia, and shall thereupon, without further record, be a lien on the property mortgaged wherever situated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. I move in section 3, line 22, after the words "real estate," to insert the word "equipment."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to add the following to the bill:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That Congress reserves the right to regulate by law the rates of fare of passengers and of freights on said railroad and its branches.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is in the bill already.

Mr. REAGAN. That part of the bill relates to the road itself, and not to its branches, which can cover any part of the country.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

The charter which shall be granted shall not take effect in any State when the Legislature thereof shall by resolution object to the same.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 25.

No further count being demanded, the amendment was adopted.

Mr. REAGAN. I move the following to come in as a final section.

The Clerk read as follows:

This act may be amended or repealed by Congress at any time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I move the following amendment as a proviso to the first section of the bill. It may perhaps remove the constitutional objection as to such legislation.

The Clerk read as follows:

But said corporation shall not have authority to lay out, survey, or locate any line for its projected road in or through any State until said State shall by legislative enactment expressly confer the power so to do.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is the same as my amendment already adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I propose to call the previous question, supposing I have an hour for debate if the main question is ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not occupied any time, and under the rule is entitled to an hour after the closing of debate.

Mr. SAVAGE. I hope the previous question will be voted down. Several members of the committee desire to be heard on this question. It is too important a one to be rushed through under the gag.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I have no objection to any gentleman being heard.

The previous question was not seconded.

Mr. SAVAGE. I move that the bill be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Am I not entitled to be heard upon the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has not been sustained.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Was I not entitled to be heard before the previous question was moved?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman would be if the House chooses to consider the subject now; but the gentleman lost the floor by moving the previous question, which was not sustained. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAVAGE] moves to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I hope the House will allow me five minutes. [Cries of "Regular order."]

The question was taken upon Mr. SAVAGE's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 53, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, and Mr. SAVAGE were appointed.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I withdraw the call for further count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I object to that agreement.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DURHAM. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2284) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes, concerning mineral lands. It will take but a few moments to pass it.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 43, noes 19.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot rise to a privileged question while the House is dividing.

Mr. RANDALL. Has a quorum voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum has not voted, and the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. FORT. I think gentlemen here have been under the impression that they have been voting on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. JONES.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been very distinctly announced that the vote was on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM.]

Mr. DURHAM. I will state for the information of the House——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DURHAM, and Mr. HARRIS of Virginia, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 86, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a privileged question, one on which I have been trying to be heard for some time past. When the bill offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] was before the House and no quorum voted upon the motion to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I renewed the objection then withdrawn by some gentleman to the absence of a quorum, but the Chair did not hear me until the bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I rose at the moment to catch the ear of the Chair, for I did not desire that the bill should go to the tomb of the Capulets, and I objected at the time other gentlemen withdrew their objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state in justice to himself that general confusion prevailed at the time, and by general consent all the parties who were voting by tellers passed away, the statement being made that no further count was demanded; and thereupon the Chair, hearing no objection, stated that the motion to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was carried.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. JONES,] who had charge of the bill, stated that no further count was demanded, and no objection was made.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Yes, I objected to it.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. There is always so much talk in this Hall and so many members wanting to talk at the same time that no one can understand what is going on here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is entirely correct.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I desire to say further that I wanted the bill discussed, but I was told that no gentleman desired to be heard upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky must know that debate is not now in order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now rise to inquire what was the action of the Chair on the proposition I submitted a while ago, and whether the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] is still on the Calendar and before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and other business has intervened.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. But I state to the Chair that I objected to its committal. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My objection was heard by gentlemen all around me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was not heard by the Chair.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is the misfortune of the Chair, not mine. If the Chair will recognize me I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will certainly recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think it has been customary for the Chair, whenever any member asserted that he made objection in time, to recognize that objection.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I call the gentleman from Virginia to order; the Speaker has ruled upon this subject, and if he wants to do so he can take an appeal.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The Chair can take care of himself without the intervention of the gentleman from New Jersey.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the executive, legislative, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MORRILL of Maine, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. NORWOOD.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in.

Mr. CONGER. We ought certainly to have the amendments read.

Mr. FORT. I think we should concur in some of the amendments at least.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendments of the Senate, but before concluding,

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, said: The customary way has been to take a vote of the House on each amendment as it is read.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] to have the bill and the Senate amendments referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ATKINS. I have no objection to that. I will withdraw the motion to non-concur and move that the bill and amendments be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. CONGER said: I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Army appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, was committed to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the time the motion to commit was made and agreed to, the motion to reconsider and lay on the table was also passed.

Mr. CONGER. By what record is that shown?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal shows it.

Mr. RANDALL. It was suggested at the time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] to make the motion to reconsider and table.

Mr. CONGER. I heard no such motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion was put by the Chair at the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CONGER. I felt it to be my duty to make the motion to reconsider in order that I might call the attention of the House——

Mr. RANDALL. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. Upon a point of order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order has been ruled upon by the Chair; the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has no right to make the motion to reconsider, that motion having already been made and laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make this suggestion; I submit——

Mr. RANDALL. I wish you would submit. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I never submit to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL;] I do to the Chair with all due deference. I submit that the fact of such motion being entered upon record without having been made by a member of the House is an improper proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was made by a member of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

Mr. RANDALL. And a member of the Committee on Appropriations, who has charge of the bill in the House.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. DURHAM. I now ask that the bill concerning mineral lands be read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended as follows: Where the words "until a patent has issued therefor" first occur in the said section, the same shall be stricken therefrom, and there shall be inserted in their stead the following: "until an application for a patent therefor and final proofs and payment for the claim have been made, as required by the terms of this chapter;" and where the words "until a patent has issued therefor" occur the second time in said section, the same shall be stricken therefrom, and there shall be inserted in their stead the following: "until an application for a patent therefor and final proofs and payment for the claim have been made, as required by the terms of this chapter: Provided, That where an application for a patent has been filed in the manner prescribed by this chapter, and an adverse claim asserted against the same, and suit commenced thereon, the annual expenditure for labor or improvements hereinbefore prescribed shall not be required until the right and title to such claim shall have been finally determined by a court of competent jurisdiction;" so that the said section, as amended, shall read as follows:

"SEC. 2324. The miners of each mining district may make regulations not in conflict with the laws of the United States or with the laws of the State or Territory in which the district is situated, governing the location, manner of recording, amount of work necessary to hold possession of a mining claim, subject to the following requirements: The location must be distinctly marked upon the ground so that its boundaries can be readily traced; all records of mining claims hereafter made shall contain the name or names of the locators, the date of the location, and such a description of the claim or claims located by reference to some natural object or permanent monument as will identify the claim. On each claim located after the 10th day of May, 1872, and until an application for a patent therefor and final proofs and payment for the claim have been made, as required by the terms of this chapter, not less than one hundred dollars' worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year. On all claims located prior to the 10th day of May, 1872, ten dollars' worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made by the 10th day of June, 1874, and each year thereafter for each one hundred feet in length along the vein, until an application for a patent therefor and final proofs and payment for the claim have been made, as required by the terms of this chapter: Provided, That where an application for a patent has been filed in the manner prescribed by this chapter, and an adverse claim asserted against the same and suit commenced thereon, the annual expenditure for labor or improvements hereinbefore prescribed shall not be required until the right and title to such claim shall have been finally determined by a court of competent jurisdiction; but where such claims are held in common such expenditure may be made upon any one claim; and upon a failure to comply with these conditions the claim or mine upon which such failure occurred shall be open to relocation in the same manner as if no location of the same had ever been made: Provided, That the original locators, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, have not resumed work upon the claim after failure and before such location. Upon the failure of any one of several co-owners to contribute his proportion of the expenditures required hereby, the co-owners who have performed the labor or made the improvements may, at the expiration of the year, give such delinquent co-owner personal notice, in writing, or notice by publication in the newspaper published nearest the claim, for at least once a week for ninety days, and if, at the expiration of ninety days after such notice in writing or by publication, such delinquent should fail or refuse to contribute his proportion of the expenditure required by this section his interest in the claim shall become the property of his co-owners who have made the required expenditures."

Mr. DURHAM. If I can have a little order here in the House I will state the scope and purpose of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend until order is restored. The Chair desires to state that a great many difficulties of understanding that arise between the Chair and the House result from the great confusion in the House; such difficulties have occurred twice to-day. The Chair expresses the hope that gentlemen who are interested in the progress of the business of the House and a speedy return to their homes will aid the Chair in maintaining order in the House. If members will refrain from loud conversation there will be no difficulty in every member of the House understanding precisely what the action of the House has been and what have been the rulings of the Chair.

Mr. DURHAM. Under the present mining law, whenever a man desires to locate a mining claim he must get the surveyor to run the boundary and have it specifically defined by metes and bounds. Under the section which it is proposed to amend by this bill, he is required to file that description in the General Land Office, and where pay is required by the law he is then to pay whatever may be the price of the mining land contained within the boundary so filed. That is the present law. In addition to that he is required to do one hundred dollars' worth of work besides paying the pecuniary consideration for the mining land. Under the section which it is proposed to amend, while his claim is in litigation, if contested, or while the General Land Office is investigating the matter, and before his patent is issued, he is required to do one hundred dollars' worth of work every year. That sometimes operates as a hardship upon the claimant, because, in case of a conflict of title arising in the courts, if he is ousted he loses the benefit of all the work he has done.

The object of this bill is simply this, and this alone: After he shall have made his survey and filed his plat and boundary in the land office and paid the amount required by law, when the Government is in default and does not issue the patent for his claim, or where he is held in court in consequence of a controversy in relation to the title, he shall not be required to do the one hundred dollars' worth of work each year during that time. That is the whole sum and substance of this bill.

This bill was introduced by a gentleman from one of the Territories, by Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado, I think. When it came to be considered in the Committee on Mines and Mining, sundry amendments were offered to it by two or three members of that committee. A conference was had with all the Delegates and Members from the mining Territories and districts, with the exception of California, and it was agreed unanimously by all those Delegates that this bill was exactly what they desired. I understand now that perhaps one of the members of the Committee on Mines and Mining, who is not present, has some objection to this bill. I have never heard of any objection being urged to it by that gentleman, the gentleman from Nevada, [Mr. WOODBURN.]

Mr. MAGINNIS. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. WOODBURN] was in the conference with the Delegates, and stated that this bill was just what he wanted.

Mr. DURHAM. It is proper that the gentlemen from these mining localities should be consulted in matters of this kind, because they are to be presumed to know what is the desire of the people of that region more than we who do not live in the mining districts. But it does seem to me that it will strike the sense of every gentleman on this floor that the object of this bill is right and proper; in other words, that where the claimant of the property has performed every part and parcel of his duty toward the Government in locating his claim and where the Government is in default in not issuing to him his patent, he ought not to be required to do the one hundred dollars' worth of work during the interim; or where he is intercepted by a counter-claim and where that claim is in litigation in the courts, he certainly ought not to be required to go on and improve that claim until the title is made perfect by judgment of the court or by the issuing of a patent by the Government. That is the sum and substance of the whole bill.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to say one word on this bill.

Mr. DURHAM. I yield to the gentleman, but I do not surrender the floor, for I want to call the previous question.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman misapprehends the law in reference to what is called the quartz claim or rock in place. The act of 1872 does not require the miner to purchase or make application to purchase his mining claim. He may hold it for years and years and mine it without paying the Government one dollar, if he chooses to do so, under the local mining laws. That is the law; that is the act of 1872. But the act of 1872 provides that a person who locates a mine under the local mining law or under the act of Congress, if you please, shall year after year do one hundred dollars' worth of work on such mining claim. The object of that provision—and in my judgment it is a very wise one—is to secure the development of the mining interests of the country; for if a miner could locate a claim and hold it for years without doing any work upon it, the mining resources of the country would not be developed. In that law the Government of the United States required that every person who under the act of Congress or under the local mining laws of the district should take up a claim should show his good faith by doing at least one hundred dollars' worth of work every year upon the claim. This requirement in my judgment is right. But for such a provision of law a man who has located a valuable claim might wait until another miner has prospected or developed an adjacent mine, of which development he gets the advantage; or in order to evade the law he might induce some man to file a counter-claim, and during all the years in which the contest might be before the local land office might not do a single dollar's worth of work, the mine remaining meanwhile undeveloped.

Mr. LANE. I have filed many applications in good faith which have rested in the Office here year after year without a patent issuing. The delay is not the fault of the applicant, but of the Office here. I insist that during the time occupied by such delay the miner should not be compelled to expend $100 a year upon his claim, as required by the existing law.

Mr. PAGE. One word in reply to the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE.]. The very object of the mining act of 1872, which virtually gave to every miner in the country his mine without requiring him to pay the Government one dollar, was that the miner should prospect and work his mine, bestowing at least one hundred dollars' worth of work upon it every year. That was the very object of the mining act. If the law required the miner to make application within six months or one year and to pay the Government a certain sum for the mine, the case would be different. But there is no law requiring such application to be made. As the law now stands the miner may, under the local mining laws or under the act of Congress, hold his mine for years, as long as he pleases; and all the Government demands is simply that he do a certain amount of work every year to show that he is acting in good faith in preventing others from coming upon this mine and developing the resources of the country.

I believe, therefore, that this bill would be a species of unwise legislation. I do not think that our mining laws should be interfered with in the slightest degree. I represent a State whose mining wealth is perhaps as extensive as that of any other in the Union; and it seems to me that the mining laws as they now stand should not be interfered with at all. In my judgment the only tendency of legislation of that kind is to disturb the title of mining claims throughout the country. I believe it is best that the law in this respect should remain without change.

Mr. DURHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Montana, [Mr. MAGINNIS.]

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I agree so thoroughly with the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] in all the general principles that he has laid down, that there is no room for any issue between us. So far as the principles of representation are concerned, I have been one of those who are entirely opposed to any extended interference by Congress with the territorial and local laws of the mining districts. I am not in favor of much legislation, and would prefer that all the mines of the country should be held as far as possible under miner's law; and I may say that a large majority of the Committee on Mines and Mining, including the chairman, [Mr. BLAND,] himself a practical miner in the early days of California and Washoe, agree on those general principles.

But, Mr. Speaker, this is not so much a proposition to amend the mining law as to clear up and make explicit some of its provisions under which injustice occurs. As the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] has said, there are but two propositions in this bill. One is that when the miner has fairly represented his ground, expended his thousand dollars, and made his final proof and payment at the local land office, the duplicate or certificate that he then receives shall be as good to him as to the farmer who makes entry of agricultural land, and that he shall not be required to further work his ground on account of delays in the General Land Office in issuing the patent to which he is at once entitled.

The law now requires that on each claim the miner shall annually do one hundred dollars' worth of work until the "patent is issued." We propose simply to change those words so that the law will read, "until he has made final proof and payment at the local land office." Certainly this is just. The miner has complied with all the requirements of the law, and under its provisions he is immediately entitled to a patent. He has a certificate to this effect. But through a lack of proper clerical force in the General Land Office, or other reasons, his patent is delayed two, three, or five years; and by reason of that fault on the part of the Government, he is required to keep up his representation as if he had not fulfilled his part of the law. He is put to expense and trouble because the Government fails to issue the proper patent. Now, just as in the case of the location of agricultural lands, the certificate should be as good as the patent, so far as it is evidence that the locator has complied with all the requirements of the Government.

The next point referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] is that the right of the miner ought to be preserved while his case is in litigation. No man will go into a sham lawsuit to embarrass himself when he is in a fair way to get his title. It would be cheaper for him to work his claim than go into the courts.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Does not the present bill reserve the right to each mining district to make its own regulations?

Mr. MAGINNIS. Certainly; that is the mining law.

Mr. LUTTRELL. It still reserves to each mining district that right.

Mr. MAGINNIS. As a matter of course. It interferes in no way with the mining law. I believe myself that the provisions of this bill are embraced in the mining law, but the purpose is to make these provisions plainer and avoid litigation. I have no doubt that the Supreme Court would hold, as I think the General Land Office would, that this is the law so far as the provision in regard to litigants is concerned, and the other is a mere verbal change in accordance with the spirit of the law, and it only relieves the miner from the payment of $100 a year—after he has proved up and paid for his mine—in consequence of delay on the part of the Government to issue his patent to him.

Mr. PAGE. Allow me a word. If this bill should pass, would it not relieve the miner from the necessity of complying with the local laws of the district in which his claim is situated and doing his amount of work?

Mr. MAGINNIS. Not in the least.

Mr. PAGE. What is the object of the bill?

Mr. MAGINNIS. The object is simply to do justice to all, so that when a miner gets his certificate through the Land Office it shall be as good to him as a patent when the issue of his patent is delayed because of lack of clerical force on the part of the Government.

Mr. PAGE. Does not my friend know that in the mining States a duplicate certificate is not evidence against the miner? Does he not know that nothing is evidence but the patent itself?

Mr. MAGINNIS. At the same time you ought not to make the miner pay for the delay of the Government in issuing that patent.

Mr. DURHAM. I demand the previous question.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for one minute?

Mr. DURHAM. Just for one minute.

Mr. LUTTRELL. As I understand the provisions of this bill, they amount to this: that where a claim is in litigation they do not require the parties to make expenditure of labor or money until such time as the court may decide. I believe that to be wise. For instance, under the mining laws, a miner when he locates a quartz claim is required to pay $1,000 in money or labor in the improvement of his claim. Then he makes his application for a patent, pays his money, and a certificate is issued to him. Or there may be a counterclaim of other parties who may claim the land. Thus I understand the provisions of the bill, that an applicant is not required to perform his one hundred dollars or two hundred dollars' worth of labor on his claim until the case is decided by the court.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Until he knows whether it is his claim or not.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Yes, sir; that is it. I believe the bill is just. I believe it should pass.

Mr. DURHAM. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered:

Mr. PAGE. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. DURHAM. In order that the bill may be engrossed, I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PAGE. Then I do not insist on the reading.

The bill was read a third time by its title, and passed.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 28, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARVEY. I present the petition of 6,160 citizens of the States of Ohio and West Virginia; 3,485 citizens of the States of Wisconsin, Iowa, and Missouri; 1,023 citizens of the States of Kansas and Oregon, and Colorado Territory; and 3,192 citizens of the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, so as to provide for the acknowledgment of God and Christianity in the Constitution. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON presented the petition of the heirs of François Cazeau, praying for relief on account of services rendered the United States Government by Francois Cazeau during the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of H. Eickholt, president, and C. Draeger, secretary, of the German Veteran Union, praying for an amendment to the bill (S. No. 875) to re-adjust the rates of pension for specific and other serious disabilities, so as to make no distinction between soldiers who lost two legs and those who lost two arms during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of 124 mercantile, banking, manufacturing, and trading firms of the city of Boston, praying for the passage of the bill (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale of or dealing in counterfeit trade-mark goods; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 297) appropriating money to erect a building at Little Rock, Arkansas, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Gallus Kirchner, of North Vernon, Indiana, praying compensation for 2,380½ yards of blue limestone delivered to the United States, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3273) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen J. Brosnan, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAPERTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jackson Tibbetts and others, employés of L. J. & J. Day and T. W. Call, late contractors on the improvement of the Fox River, Wisconsin, praying that the amount forfeited to the United States by the contractors by the annulment of their contracts be applied to the payment of wages due said employés, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Frank G. Senseny and others, heirs of Jacob Senseny, deceased, praying compensation for the use and occupancy of certain buildings in Winchester, Virginia, by United States troops in 1864 and 1865, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 947) for the relief of the estate of Jacob Senseny, of Winchester, Virginia.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred sundry petitions of merchants, traders, bankers, and other citizens of New York, praying the passage of a law to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale in or dealing of counterfeit trade-mark goods, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to, the committee having reported a bill on the subject.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas M. Simmons, praying compensation for property taken and appropriated by the United States authorities during the late war, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 948) for the relief of Thomas M. Simmons.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of A. M. Garoutte, late captain and assistant quartermaster United States Army, praying to be re-imbursed for the amount of money refunded by him to certain parties for property taken and sold by him by order of the military authorities, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 949) for the relief of A. M. Garoutte, late captain and assistant quartermaster United States Army.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1668) to supply an omission in the enrollment of the deficiency bill approved March 3, 1875, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

PRINTING INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MORTON. The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of A. M. Clapp, Congressional Printer, have had the same under consideration, and submit a report accompanied by a resolution. I ask to have the report and resolution printed, and I give notice that to-morrow morning I will ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to investigate the official conduct of Hon. A. M. Clapp as Congressional Printer, and for that purpose have power to send for persons and papers, and to make report at the present session of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. "Have power to make report." I do not understand that the committee is to be instructed to make report at this session.

Mr. MORTON. That is the language of the resolution. Whether there is time enough I do not know.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not to be considered now.

Mr. MORTON. I will call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed and laid over.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. STEVENSON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers relating to the claim of the children of Harriet de la Palm Baker be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery, and ask that it be printed, so that I can offer it when the matter comes up.

The amendment was ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the following resolution, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there shall be printed 30,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for the year 1875; 10,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner, 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 15,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is hardly necessary to refer that to the Committee on Printing; all the Committee on Printing could do would be to give an estimate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does not the law require it to be referred?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; the law requires a reference.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAYMENTS OUT OF CONTINGENT FUND.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the medical and funeral expenses of Frederick Peck, deceased, late page in the Senate, and medical and other expenses incurred by L. B. Cutler, an employé of the Senate, on account of the injuries received by the recent explosion of gas in the Capitol: Provided, That all bills rendered shall be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate before they are paid.

I desire to say that the bill passed by the Senate in relation to the two men, one of whom was killed and the other badly injured by the explosion, has not passed the other House, and the bills for medical and surgical attendance are pending and there is no means to pay them.

The other portion of the resolution embraces a little page, who was an orphan boy who died in the service. He went home one morning bleeding at the lungs and died immediately after, without any fund to be buried with or to pay for medical attendance. The whole cost of the proposition will be about $100. I think it is proper that it should be passed by the Senate. It will come out of the contingent fund. The balance in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate as a contingent fund will be covered into the Treasury after the 30th of this month, and therefore it is necessary to pass the resolution now, if at all.

Mr. SARGENT. I could not hear the Senator from Vermont distinctly. Has he considered the question whether a resolution of the Senate can justify the Secretary of the Senate in paying from the contingent fund for an exceptional expense? It seems to me the only way would be by an amendment to the sundry civil bill or some other appropriation bill. If the Senator has considered and satisfied himself on that point, I shall make no further objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think there is no doubt that we can pay it out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. There is some doubt about it. The Senator may have solved the doubt. If the Senator has not considered it, I think he had better withdraw the resolution until he is satisfied.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have not paid particular attention to the point recently. If the Senator is clear on the point, I will refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations as an amendment to the sundry civil bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CORRECTION OF NEWSPAPER REPORTS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I see in the reports of the city papers this morning—I am not able to say whether the same mistake was made in the Associated Press—I am reported as saying that all the Presidents of the United States from Jackson down were upon the list of defaulters. I suppose this mistake arose from my stating the percentage of losses to disbursements in each of the administrations, naming the head of the administration; and as I did not speak very loudly probably the reporters mistook me as stating the amount as charged against the Presidents. I did not find in the examination of that voluminous report the names of any of the Presidents, though I should hardly have been surprised if I had found Christopher Columbus or Julius Cæsar. I did find one name that surprised me almost as much as either of those would, and that was the name of our old friend General Spinner. That incarnation of incorruptible, aggressive, vindictive integrity, whom all the gold in the Treasury could not buy, is put down there as a defaulter.

Several SENATORS. For how much?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have forgotten the amount, but something about $20.

MAIL CONTRACTORS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. KEY. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 3495.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3495) for the relief of the mail contractors on route No. 19319, in Tennessee, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is an authority to the Postmaster-General to put mail service on the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad from Tullahoma to McMinnville, Tennessee, in the same manner as now provided by law for railroad mail transportation; and provides that the earnings for that service shall not be withheld on account of any claim due or alleged to be due from the old corporation of the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company to the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. Is that reported from a committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The amendment reported by the committee will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to add to the bill the following:

But the provisions of this act shall in no wise interfere with, impair, or destroy or affect any claim, lien, or right, legal or equitable, the United States may have against said McMinnville and Manchester Railroad or its property, or the property purchased by the Memphis and Charleston Railroad Company; nor shall it in any wise affect, embarrass, or interfere with any suit the United States may have commenced, or may hereafter commence, to enforce any contract, right, or lien they have against said railroad companies, or either of them, or their property, or that of either.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SARGENT. If I can understand this bill from the reading of it, the theory of it is that the successors in interest of these companies are now doing or propose to do the service, and the desire is that they shall do it unembarrassed by some arrangements of their predecessors. Is that the theory of the bill?

Mr. KEY. Yes, sir.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF KANSAS INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1797.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1797) providing for the sale of the Kansas Indian lands in Kansas to actual settlers, and for the disposition of the proceeds of the sale, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

counties of Morris and Lyon, in the State of Kansas. A similar bill was approved on the 8th of May, 1872, providing for the sale of these lands at an appraised price and for their sale to settlers within a year

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that bill explained. It is evidently a very important bill.

Mr. INGALLS. This is a bill to provide for the appraisement and sale of the lands belonging to the Kansas tribe of Indians in the after the appraisement was approved. Owing to a variety of circumstances that it is not necessary here to enumerate, the time expired, and that act became inoperative. The lands have since remained unsold, and there is no authority in the Secretary of the Interior for selling these lands unless this act is passed. The Indians have long since been removed to the Indian country, where they are now located upon a reservation. These lands are useless to them unless they are sold; they cannot be improved or occupied unless title can be obtained.

This measure has passed the House of Representatives; it receives the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior, is approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and is a matter of justice both to the Indians and to the settlers. It has been guarded strictly in every particular, and the money is to be paid into the Treasury, to be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is one clause here that strikes me at first sight as perhaps open to some question. It is at the top of page 2:

> And the rejected claimants as bona fide settlers, who were recommended as such by Andrew C. Williams, acting under instructions to Superintendent Hoag, from the Indian Office, dated October 24, 1872, be permitted to make payment of the appraised value of their lands to the local land office at Topeka, Kansas, under such rules as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may adopt, &c.

What is the ground upon which, inasmuch as this act generally is for the benefit of each bona fide settler apparently, these rejected claimants are to be brought in; and how many of them are there?

Mr. INGALLS. There were but very few of those, and they were upon purely technical grounds. I am advised by the Department that it is a matter of justice and equity that these persons should be allowed to enter like other parties. There was some technical defect in their filing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask——

Mr. BOGY. I would inform the Senator from Vermont that the only object of this bill is to provide a way of disposing of the lands belonging to these Indians, for the benefit of the Indians, and to protect also the actual settlers. The law authorizing the sale heretofore required that the actual settlers should give notice of their settlement within a given time. Many of the people there not knowing the fact made settlements and did not give the mere technical notice, and their claims were not recognized. An investigation took place, as is stated in the bill, by a person recommended by the Indian Bureau by the name of Williams, acting under the instructions of the superintendent, Mr. Hoag, and the whole settlement of these persons appeared to have been correct, honest, and fair, and they are willing to pay the amount. They do not get the lands for any less. They could renew their settlements now, but unless their settlements were respected as of the time that they were made, other parties might come in and third parties might claim new right. The object was to respect them in their rights from the time they took possession. Nobody is injured by it. The Indian is not injured; the Government is not affected by it, and it is only a mode adopted to protect the settlers who first went upon these lands. They do not get their lands for a less amount. The only object of the clause referred to is to recognize their settlement from the time it was made. The whole object of this bill, which was examined in the Committee on Indian Affairs, is a mode provided for the disposition of this Indian reservation, and the money is to go for the benefit of the Indians. I see nothing wrong in the bill. I think it is pretty well guarded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have merely risen on this bill for the purpose of getting information. We all know that the Indian tribes, or people who profess to represent them, often come to us with complaints as to the manner in which their lands have been disposed of, and making demands upon Congress for restitution or re-imbursement or damages or consideration of some kind, saying that we have departed from their treaty-rights, and so on and so on. We all remember a great many cases of that kind, some of which appear to be just, and some not, and a great many are not acted on. What I want to get at about this bill is to see that it is in such a condition that we shall not have any claim made against us on the part of these Indians that we have not proceeded in conformity with the treaty under which this trust in respect of this reservation arises, and I take it everybody will agree that that is a proper subject for consideration.

My friend from Kansas has kindly turned to the treaty of October 5, 1859, and the fourth article provides:

> For the purpose of procuring the means of comfortably establishing the Kansas tribe of Indians upon the lands to be assigned to them in severalty, by building them houses, and by furnishing them with agricultural implements, stock animals, and other necessary aid and facilities for commencing agricultural pursuits under favorable circumstances, the lands embraced in that portion not stipulated to be retained and divided as aforesaid shall be sold, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in parcels not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres each, to the highest bidder for cash, the sale to be made upon sealed proposals to be duly invited by public advertisement, and should any of the tracts so to be sold have upon them improvements of any kind, which were made by or for the Indians, or for Government purposes, the proposals therefor must state the price for both the land and improvements, and if, after assigning to all the members of the tribe entitled thereto their proportions in severalty, there shall remain a surplus of that portion of the reservation retained for that purpose, outside of the exterior boundary line of the lands assigned in severalty, the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized and empowered, whenever he shall think proper, to cause such surplus to be sold in the same manner as the other lands to be so disposed of, and the proceeds thereof to be expended for their benefit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper.

That, I am told, is the article under which this duty of disposing of these lands arises; and if it be that, as I have no doubt it is, then of course this stipulation by treaty is clearly that these lands must be sold for cash to the highest bidder upon sealed proposals. This bill provides a different method of disposition. It provides that each bona fide settler on these lands shall be entitled to have them at the appraised value. There has been one appraisal, and they did not choose to take them at that value. It was supposed to be more than they could afford to pay; and one section of this bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior may cause a re-appraisement if he thinks it desirable, and then let them have them at the price of the re-appraisal, the re-appraisal to come out of the fund. That of course is not in conformity with the treaty, and it would give, to my mind, to these Indians the right to come back to us and say, if a fair cash price was not obtained, "You have perverted this trust by, for the benefit of your own settlers and pre-emptors, or whatever they are called, giving them this land at the appraisal of three persons, selected not by us but by the Government, and you have not followed the trust in having an open competition, to get the most money for us for these lands that you could." That, it seems to me, is plain on the face of the treaty and on the face of this bill; and the question that occurs to my mind is whether it is just in the first place to do that and, in the second place, whether it is safe for the United States to do it without the assent of this tribe of Indians, lest they might return to us and say, "You have been guilty of a breach of trust, and have disposed of these lands in a different manner from that provided in the treaty; and you must now make good the difference to us." That will raise a difficulty and a dispute and a complaint.

It does not appear to me, with great respect to the Committee on Indian Affairs, that that is quite the right thing to do. I think there ought to be added to this bill, assuming it to be right intrinsically, if we had the power to do this thing, a provision that no proceeding shall be taken under the bill until this tribe of Indians shall file its assent to the provisions of the act with the Secretary of the Interior. Then, if the Indians are satisfied, as I understand from my friend from Kansas that in fact they are, they will file this assent and there will be no claim made hereafter upon us for any breach of trust or wrong done to them in violation of the treaty. I move to add a section at the end of the bill in these words:

> No proceeding shall be taken under this act until the said Kansas tribe of Indians shall file their assent to its provisions with the Secretary of the Interior.

With that security to bring it into conformity with the treaty by assent—that is, to have the Indians waive the departure from the treaty—I do not see why the United States would not be safe. In respect of the intrinsic propriety of this method I do not wish to say anything, because I am not competent to judge; I do not know anything about it.

Mr. INGALLS. In response to what the Senator from Vermont has said, I will not detain the Senate further than to remark that the assent of the Indians was specifically obtained after the passage of the act of May 8, 1872. They had previously made an agreement by which they were to abandon this reservation and proceed to the Indian Territory, there to live upon a reservation set apart for them in the northern portion of the Indian country. It appears to me, therefore, that their assent having been already formally obtained to their removal from this reservation, and they having in the most formal method expressed their desire that their lands should be sold, it would be unnecessary to burden the bill with a provision that their assent shall be obtained again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator have that assent read—the old one.

Mr. INGALLS. It is in the Interior Department, and of course I cannot obtain that now; but the fourth section of the law of 1872 commences as follows:

> That if said Kansas tribe of Indians shall signify to the President of the United States their desire to sell their diminished reserve—

Which is the tract referred to in this bill—

> as indicated in said treaty, including lands held in severalty and in common, and to remove from the State of Kansas and shall so agree in such manner as the President may prescribe, the Secretary of the Interior may cause the same to be appraised, &c.

In pursuance of the provisions of that section of the law of 1872 the assent was obtained, and the Indians removed from their diminished reservation to the Indian country; and as the objection of the Senator from Vermont, which I know is founded upon a sincere desire to protect the Indians and to protect the Government also, has already been fully met by the fact that the Indians have so expressed their desire, I trust he will not delay the passage of this bill or interfere with its becoming a law at this time by requiring it to be again acted on by the House, by insisting upon his amendment. If there were any real objection, I certainly would be the last to attempt to deprive the Indians of any rights or to impose any additional burden on the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The difficulty to my mind with the statement of my friend is that we have not the assent here, as my friend says. He understands it to be precisely what he has stated, an assent to the act of 1872. But this bill provides for this method of sale, which the fourth section of the act of 1872 does not point to at all on its face; it only points to their assenting to removing and disposing of the lands which belonged to them in severalty; and the general assent to the disposition of the lands would be referred to the terms under which the parties had agreed that they should be disposed of, namely, to the highest bidder for cash. That would not help us out if we had it here; but, even if we had it and it was a formal assent to all the provisions of the act of 1872, how would we find ourselves then? Under that act of 1872, as this act recites, an appraisal was made in conformity with its provisions. The Indians were entitled, if the lands were disposed of, to the price named in that appraisal on their own assent. The Government did not get that. It now turns round without their assent and by a fresh act says they shall take what a fresh appraisal may make. That is not the appraisal that they had provided for. The price may have fallen since that time; a fresh set of men may be selected who will reduce the price vastly. They may put it below what the real propriety of the thing is. The Indians will say: "We have agreed"—supposing they agreed to all the provisions of the act of 1872—"that there shall be under this act a new appraisal of our lands, and that at that appraisal we will take the appraised price and let the settlers have them." The lands are appraised; the settlers will not take them at that price. That act falls. Can it be said that the Indians, by assenting to the old act, have assented to the other one for a new appraisement under different circumstances and four years afterward? I am sure no lawyer would maintain that. It does seem to me that we run too great risks in this matter in leaving questions behind on these old treaties, when in the time of action we can just as well make it secure as after. I think, therefore, my friend will not oppose the amendment. I do not want to spend the time of the Senate in discussing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BOGY. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I think there is a want of knowledge of the subject. I would rather have the bill defeated entirely than have the amendment adopted. I am perfectly satisfied that we ought to pass the bill; and that this bill is in conformity with the treaty and also in conformity with the law; but it is impossible, after an investigation of this kind, for the committee to be prepared to meet all these objections, which are very plausible, and gentlemen like my friend from Vermont can make objections all the time. The matter was referred to a subcommittee of which I was not a member; but I am perfectly satisfied that the bill is all right; and rather than have this amendment, which would lead to delay and necessitate getting the assent of the Indians again, I would rather have the bill recommitted, and, if it is not in conformity with the law or treaty or if it is unjust to the Indians, let the bill be defeated or the amendment of the Senator then adopted. I would rather not now agree to the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. As the bill very intimately concerns a considerable portion of my constituents, I am desirous to accept the amendment rather than delay the passage of the bill. I accept the amendment so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LIZZIE IRONS.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to call up House bill No. 2017. I move for its consideration.

Mr. HOWE. I appeal to the Senator from South Carolina and to the Senate to allow me to have a short executive session, and before the hour of one o'clock.

Mr. PATTERSON. This bill will not take a minute.

Mr. HOWE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2017) for the relief of Lizzie Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First United States Artillery, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Lizzie Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First Regiment United States Artillery, of $512.50, being the amount of pay withheld from Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons on account of commissary funds stolen by his clerk while Irons was acting as assistant quartermaster at Fort Adams, Rhode Island.

The Committee on Military Affairs proposed to amend the bill by striking out in line 7 "$512.50" and inserting "$350.50."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There does not appear to be any written report accompanying the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. There is a report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The chairman can explain it.

Mr. LOGAN. There is a House report, but it differs in the amount from what our committee recommend. They reported $512.50. While this lieutenant was acting as commissary, a clerk of his stole this amount of money and forged some vouchers and drew money from a bank. It could not be allowed by the accounting officer. The lieutenant died in the service. His mother, who is now in very indigent circumstances, applies for this amount to be refunded. In the examination of the accounts which I made in our committee I found that to make up the $512.50 some of the vouchers that were forged were counted in, so I struck them out, and allowed $350.50, which was the absolute sum stolen from him, although he paid $512.50.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Without his negligence?

Mr. LOGAN. Without his negligence. It is a proper thing to do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SARGENT. Wait until the morning hour expires.

Mr. HOWE. At the conclusion of the morning hour we have notice that the Senator from Indiana expects the floor.

Mr. SARGENT. The morning hour is valuable.

Mr. HOWE. I know the morning hour is very valuable, but the Senator knows how hard I have tried to have an executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not do that. It is an extraordinary motion now; it is a thing rarely done at this hour of the day.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator moved an executive session the other day when there was not the slightest necessity for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was no controversy in that case.

Mr. HOWE. I think the controversy over this matter has ended.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senate will not do it.

Mr. HOWE. I hope the Senate will do it. I ask for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOWE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 18; as follows:

OFFICIAL MAIL MATTER.

Mr. PADDOCK. I give notice that when the silver bill is through I shall call up the bill (S. No. 552) to restore the franking privilege.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 1516) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others;

A bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 2284) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes concerning mineral lands;

A bill (H. R. No. 3791) to remove the legal and political disabilities of William A. Webb, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3797) to amend section 2139 of the Revised Statutes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3799) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain Indian funds to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury in payment of 6 per cent. United States bonds.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. S. J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. S. A. HURLBUT of Illinois, managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 525) to extend the time for filing claims for additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, which expired by limitation January 30, 1875, until July 1, 1880; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) for the relief of Edward O'M. Condon.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3398) for the issue of coin, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] to the amendment of the Committee on Finance, in line 14 of the first section of the committee's amendment, to strike out the words "not exceeding $20;" so as to make the clause read:

And the said dollar herein authorized shall be a legal tender at its nominal value for any amount in any one payment, except for customs duties and interest on the public debt, and shall be receivable in payment of all dues to the United States except duties on imports.

[Mr. MORTON addressed the Senate. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WHYTE in the chair.) The Secretary will report the proposed amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the first section by striking out lines 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, and inserting in lieu thereof:

And the said dollar herein authorized shall be a legal tender at its nominal value for any and all amounts, except for customs duties, and for debts and obligations which by their own terms are payable in gold coin.

It is further proposed to insert as section 5:

That any owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at any mint to be formed, for his benefit, into silver dollars such as are provided for in this act, or into bars; and the charge for such manufacture shall not exceed the actual cost thereof as may be computed by the Director of the Mint and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator from Nevada that that amendment is not in order at this stage. I have no objection to his addressing himself to the amendment; but until the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is acted on it will not be in order to move any further amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I will offer it as a substitute.

Mr. SHERMAN. It would not be in order as a substitute; but the Senator can address himself to the amendment if he chooses, and it can be offered afterward when in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Nevada is not now in order. It has been read for information. There are two prior amendments already pending.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I shall address myself, the same as though it were in order, to the amendment just read, which I shall offer at the proper time.

In the remarks which I propose to submit to the Senate, I shall endeavor to confine myself to the bill now under discussion, and to the observations that have been made relative to the subject by those who have preceded me. With these objects immediately in view, I shall not digress to discuss or discover new systems of fiat paper money, nor to discover inconsistencies or errors of phraseology in the old and forgotten speeches of my colleagues.

In the exceedingly interesting and able speech of the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTH,] he lays down several propositions, among which are the following:

First. That silver has been, during the past few years, as variable in value as United States notes.

To this I reply that United States notes have insensibly, though incorrectly, been regarded as promises to pay gold; this regard having been fastened upon them by the fact that, until 1873, the gold dollar was less valuable than the silver dollar, and therefore was the only current coin, and that since 1873 the silver dollar has been demonetized. That being thus regarded as promises to pay gold, United States notes have followed gold, and fluctuated with it, while silver has remained nearly stationary. As gold and greenbacks are not customarily quoted in silver, but, on the contrary, silver is quoted in gold and greenbacks, silver has appeared to greatly fluctuate in value, whereas, in point of fact, it has fluctuated very little; and the Senator has no right to assume that it has fluctuated, even approximately, as much as gold or greenbacks.

Second. That silver would be too heavy to carry in the pocket.

To this I reply that so is gold, and that neither, in case of a silver, a gold, or a double standard of money, would coin be carried in the pocket to more than a very small amount. Government certificates for deposits of coin in money note form, or bank-notes, based on a deposit of coin, would be chiefly used, and would furnish the people a safe and convenient medium of exchange and at the same time prevent all loss from abrasion of metal money. The Senator himself says a little further on—

The superior convenience of paper money will prevent the extensive circulation of silver.

Third. That we parted with the silver dollar twenty-three years ago.

In this he is mistaken. We parted with it forty-two years ago, or in 1834, because in that year a legal relation was established between the two metals, which overvalued gold and undervalued silver. The silver dollar, being the more valuable of the two in the market, was exported; but we retained the silver dollar as legal money for any and all purposes, and had and held the valuable option of again coining it in case there should occur what has recently occurred: a rise in the price of gold or a decline in the value of silver.

Fourth. The Senator says that no living man has the courage to face the consequences of specie payments.

Now if specie payments, to be made in gold, are so alarming, why does the Senator argue in opposition to specie payments in silver, which, according to his own statement, would be 20 per cent. easier?

Fifth. That it is the true policy to bring every form of currency to the gold standard, because that is the one used by the commercial world.

I have heretofore shown that, of all the nations in the commercial world, only England and her protégés, Turkey, Portugal, Brazil, and Chili, employ the single gold standard. All the rest use either the double or the single silver standard. But it is not the gold standard alone which the gentleman advocates; it is a gold standard and a particular unit of value in that standard coupled with it. It is a gold standard with 23.22 grains of pure gold in each unit called a dollar; a unit 15 per cent. above the value of the currency unit, under which nearly all contracts now in existence in this country have been entered into, and under which, since 1862, all the promissory notes and mortgages have been executed and obligations incurred.

Even admitting that the bonds of the Government should be paid in gold, he would, merely for the sake of harmony in nomenclature, add 15 per cent. in weight to the burden of debts in this land by making all of them, municipal, State, and individual, amounting to several thousands of millions of dollars, in currency, payable, each dollar, by precisely the same weight of metal which he believes to be due to the foreign creditors of the Government.

Sixth. That the words "market value" as used in the bill under discussion have no meaning if the silver bullion purchased in pursuance of its provisions is measured in silver dollars, because, as he says, to quote silver in itself would be absurd. It seems strange to me that this should strike any one as absurd. I ask him how does England value gold bullion when she purchases it for her mint at £3 17*s.* 10½*d.* sterling per ounce? Not in silver, nor in wheat, neither of which are money in England, but in pieces of gold of standard purity weighing a certain number of grains, and called pounds or sovereigns.

I give the latest quotations from the London Economist:

Quotations for bullion. Gold: Bar gold, 77*s.* 9*d.* per ounce standard; fine, 77*s.* 9d. per ounce standard; refinable, 77*s.* 11*d.* per ounce standard; United States gold coin, 76*s.* 3½*d.* per ounce; German gold coin, 76*s.* 3½*d.* per ounce. Silver: Bar silver, fine, 51½*d.* per ounce standard, nearest; containing five grains gold, 52 5/16*d.* per ounce standard, nearest; Spanish dollars, (Carolus,) none here.

In like manner the silver bullion to be purchased under the provisions of this bill may be quoted in and paid for with silver pieces, each of which contains a specified number of grains of standard silver and is called a dollar. If this is impracticable, I have only to say that the world seems not to have discovered the fact; for it has pursued precisely this course ever since mints were established, many centuries ago.

Seventh. That he fails to perceive the important consequences which were attributed by me to the omission to provide for the coinage of the silver dollar in 1873, and that he has always consoled himself with the reflection that the mighty stream of human life would flow on in its great channel despite any accidental mistake of ours. I can scarcely believe that the Senator is so unmindful, as this extract would seem to make him out to be, of the mighty influence which, in all ages, legislation has had on the happiness, the material, moral, and social advancement of the human race. His argument would belittle all legislation. Was the recognition, in the Constitution and laws of the country of the right to hold human beings as property, of no import? Did not the results which flowed directly from these laws, and which are yet fresh in our memories, cause the mighty streams of death and life to intermingle more freely? Are our laws guaranteeing personal freedom of no account? Are the national debt and the debts of individuals and corporations, all of which rest upon legislation, which, withdrawn, would result in a redistribution of poverty and wealth in this country, of no account? And is an enactment which threatens to add 20 per cent. to the huge bonded debt and to the still greater State, municipal, and private debts of this country, and in that ratio increase the burdens of taxation, a mere accidental mistake not worthy of notice? The mighty stream of life to which the Senator alludes might continue to flow on, and I trust it will; but in the absence of wise legislation I fear that its flow would be over a very rocky bottom, and that its surface would not be so placid and smooth as might be wished.

Eighth. The Senator alleges that inasmuch as the entire coinage of silver in the mints of the United States from 1821 to 1873 was but $140,000,000 the disturbance caused by the act of 1873 is imaginary. Without commenting upon the incompleteness of the Senator's figures, for we coined silver previous to 1821, it needs only to be said that from 1834 to 1873, or nearly the whole of the period covered by the Senator's figures, silver was undervalued by our mint laws and was worth more as bullion than the Mint was authorized to pay for it for the purposes of coinage. The silver dollar was worth more in the markets of the world than the gold dollar, and was consequently coined only in limited quantities.

This fact affords no grounds for assuming that its great fitness for money is imaginary, or that the option of coining it, which was taken away from us by the act of 1873, was not a very valuable one, and one which alone was adequate to protect this nation against the ultimately ruinous effects of that great rise in the value of gold which has been effected by foreign legislation, and against this country's interest, since that date.

Ninth. The Senator objects to the silver dollar on the ground that its substitution for the present greenback dollar would simply amount to the exchanging, at a large expense, of one system for another. Further on he indicates his preference for the gold dollar over the silver one, ignoring the fact that the expense in this case would be much greater. Still further on he advocates, if I understand him correctly, a legal-tender paper dollar convertible into gold-bearing bonds at the option of the holder.

Not knowing which of these various propositions the Senator would oppose to the one under consideration, I am at a loss to compare or contrast them, and so leave them to carry, each of them, what weight they will.

Tenth. That to start with one metal thirteen degrees below the other is simply to adopt the lower standard and to abandon the only benefit—mutual corrections and modifications in the value of the two metals—which it is claimed results from the employment of the double standard. This statement involves the assumption that the present market ratio of silver to gold is the correct or normal one, an assumption the fallacy of which is known of all men. I had supposed that the world's experience of nearly three hundred years, that the normal relation between the metals of 15½ in silver to 1 in gold was of some value in this discussion, and not to be overturned by the short experience of three years under exceptional and abnormal conditions.

The Senator himself, in one part of his speech, grants my conclusions in this respect "to the full," but in another he undertakes to overthrow them entirely by assuming that the present abnormal ratio would continue to exist even after the principal cause of it, the demonetization of silver by a leading commercial nation, were removed; or, what is the same thing, after another nation of greater commercial importance should give it even greater employment; and the fact ought to be clearly understood and appreciated, that in the equalization of the values of the two metals by the monetization of silver the lowering of the price of gold which would result therefrom, would contribute fully as much to bring about that result as the increase in the value of silver.

Eleventh. That the option or right of election to pay our national debt in silver or gold at the relation of 16 to 1, as provided by the law as it stood when the debt was contracted, is purely technical.

This assertion of technicality the Senator himself refutes a little further on by saying that "this election has determined the market value or price of our bonds at home and abroad." If this be true, this determination could only have been of interest to our Government at the time of the sale of the bonds, for after a thing is sold the seller can have no further interest in it, unless it be to buy it back cheaply. If the option determined the price at that time, it must have been something more than a mere technicality.

It is doubtful to me whether anything but the consideration that an annual interest equal to about 12 per cent. on the then market value of the bonds was promised to be paid in coin out of the customs revenues had any weight with the foreign money-lender; but this is of little consequence at the present time.

The Senator regards this option as a mere technicality; and yet, according to his own figures, it is now worth to us $300,000,000 in solid cash. He regards it as a mere technicality, and yet argues that we shall fail to acquire the good opinion of the world unless we give it up for nothing.

An opinion which is ready to lend itself for a valuable consideration can hardly be deemed an honest one, and when the price demanded is so extravagant as it is in this case, it may be well worth a careful consideration whether, as a nation, we might not be able to survive without it.

But, as I said on a previous occasion, I do not propose in the discussion of the bill under consideration to consider the question whether the public debt is payable in silver dollars or not.

It is a trivial question compared with the one whether our State, municipal, corporative, and private indebtedness, which was contracted in depreciated paper money, shall be forced to be paid in gold dollars, which even now, when gold has not been increased in value by the demands for it for purposes of resumption, is fully 15 per cent. more valuable than the paper units in which these debts were contracted or in the silver dollars provided for in this bill with which the differences between debtor and creditor can be fairly adjusted.

It is to this overshadowing question of the general indebtedness of this country and the mad attempt to force its payment in a unit of value not calculated on when the debts were contracted and in a metal already scarce and which is daily becoming scarcer, that I am giving my attention, and not to the minor consideration of the national debt, nor that good opinion of the world of money-changers which is controlled by a money consideration. On this question I propose to say something more further on, and therefore in this place I merely reply to the honorable Senator from California that what he regards as only a technical option is of considerably more importance even than that which he admits it possessed, namely, the determination of the market value of our national bonds. Its importance is chiefly to be found in regard to the bearing it has upon the general currency indebtedness of the country, which in amount is many times that of the sum of national indebtedness, bonded or otherwise.

Twelfth. The gentleman summarizes his speech under six points; the first of which is, that the funded debt of the Government should be paid in gold.

To this proposition I have only to say that, the legal right to pay in silver being admitted on all sides, I prefer to postpone the discussion of the policy of exercising that right, which is a question of greater range, to a future occasion.

His second proposition is that the double standard requires, at the time of its adoption, a common unit of value, and to avail ourselves of its supposed benefits we must increase the weight of the silver dollar. To this proposition I propose now to reply more specifically.

The facts are briefly these: For more than two hundred years, that is to say, since shortly after the discovery of America, the market ratio of silver and gold throughout the commercial world was, with slight variation, 15½ for 1; in other words, fifteen and a half pounds of pure silver was the equivalent of one pound of gold. About fifty years ago, England, a leading commercial nation, then having, by her law of 1798, a qualified double standard, but really having suspended specie payments, suddenly changed her law and made gold the only legal tender for payments above £2. Gold was at that time slightly cheaper than silver, at the long-time relation of 15½ for 1, and, in adopting gold as her standard, England adopted the then cheaper metal; and in so doing followed precisely the course which the Senator from California views in our case with so much apprehension for the honor of the country. The consequence of the rejection of silver in England and the establishment of gold as the only metal in which her vast commercial transactions should be settled was, when she came to resume specie payments in 1821, a temporary and rapid appreciation of gold from less than 15½ to 1 to nearly 16 for 1. From this cause a new equivalent between the metals was temporarily substituted for the old one; and in order to retain in their laws such an average relation between the metals as the market now showed, the other nations of the world, most of whom employed the double standard, and such as did not employed the single silver standard, fixed the legal relation of gold to silver at 15½ to 1. This country changed the relation from 15 for 1 to about 16 for 1. This was an undervaluation of silver and caused its exportation. This law was passed in the United States in 1834, and the legal relation then established between the metals has remained unchanged in this country to the present time.

Lately Germany, now also a leading commercial nation, prepared to do just what England did in 1816, namely, change an unqualified double standard for a qualified one (England had an unqualified double standard from 1783 to 1798) and the qualified double standard to a single gold standard.

The consequences in this case have been similar to those which occurred in the case of England. The elimination of some two hundred and fifty or three hundred millions of dollars of silver from the currency of Germany and the substitution therefor of an equal sum of gold—most of which she had to go into the markets and purchase—has caused such a temporary rise in the relative value of gold and silver that instead of fifteen and one-half it now requires over eighteen pounds of silver to purchase one of gold.

If all the rest of the commercial nations had been on a specie basis when Germany resolved, unwisely as I think, on this change, her surplus silver would have been readily absorbed, without making scarcely any change in the relation between the metals. But this was not the case. Specie payments were, and are now, suspended in the countries representing the larger portion of the population of Europe as well as in the United States. Consequently there was not and is not now but a limited demand for silver in the Occidental world, and the sluggishness of commercial movements in the Orient prevents the ready absorption of a large amount of their money metal suddenly thrown upon them. And it is worthy of special notice and remark, concerning the passage of the law of 1834, changing the relation of silver to gold from 15 for 1 to about 16 for 1 that, at the former relation, gold stood at about 6½ per cent. premium over silver. Both were a legal tender for all amounts, the same as currency and gold are today. Silver was then the currency of the country, because it was the cheaper money, and, as a consequence, drove gold from the circulation; just as our present currency, which is 13 per cent. less valuable than gold, has driven gold out of the circulation.

In 1834 it was deemed desirable by leading financiers of the country to bring gold in as an element of the currency with silver, just as it is now proposed to bring gold in by equalizing the paper legal-tender and gold dollars. But a very different and more equitable plan was adopted to effect that object then than is proposed for the same end now. Mr. Campbell White, the chairman of the committee on coins; Mr. Albert Gallatin, one of the most distinguished financiers of this or any other country, and a former Senator of the United States; and Mr. Ingham, the Secretary of the Treasury, in discussing the question, agreed, as did also the Congress of the United States, that, as all time contracts and obligations were based on the cheaper silver unit, it would be an outrage and an injustice not to be thought of nor tolerated, to change the relation of silver to gold by increasing the value of the silver dollar. Aside from the weighty material interests involved in the changing of the very essence of all existing contracts it was contended that such a course would severely shock the keen moral sensibilities of the nation; it would be a lesson in fraud and dishonesty which it could not afford to inculcate, and that we should not permit the creditor by a trick of legislation to exact from the debtor 6¼ per cent. more than his just due. A sensible and honest course was resolved upon and pursued; a sufficient number of grains of pure gold was taken from the gold unit to equalize its value with the silver unit, which was that upon which business and contracts rested.

A similar equitable course is what should be pursued now. Contracts and obligations are now based upon the paper dollar just as they were then based upon the silver dollar. To raise the paper to the gold dollar of to-day would work double the injustice that could have been worked by raising the silver to the gold dollar in 1834; for the difference is now 13 per cent., whereas then it was but 6¼. The fraud would be double, the trick of legislation twice as atrocious. Now, as then, the sensible and honest course would be to reduce the gold dollar rather than raise the paper one; for the paper dollar and not the gold one is the dollar upon which all our business affairs, mortgages, and other contracts are based.

But there are always well-founded objections to the reduction of coins. Exceptional contracts are sometimes in existence based upon the especial coin to be changed; and the use of two kinds of coin of one metal and both with the same name might lead to confusion. A new coinage becomes requisite and the coinage of any large sum of bullion is always subject to some expense and often to great inconvenience; and future changes may occur in the market value of the rejected coin which may render its rehabilitation desirable.

These objections to following the example of our country in 1834 are happily all removed by restoring our silver dollar to free coinage and full legal tender, both of which attributes it possessed up to the year 1873–'74, when they were abolished by covert legislation.

The silver dollar of 371¼ grains pure, or 412.8 grains standard, is at the present time of about the same value as the paper dollar, and therefore will accurately measure the bargains and contracts made in the last-named currency.

To restore it to free coinage and legal tender is simply to place it where it stood from the time when the white man first trod this country down to the year 1873–'74. It is to place it where it should stand, the peer of the gold dollar, both of them legal tenders to any amount for the payment of debts, the option between them to pertain to the lender when he lends money and to the borrower when he pays it.

Nations must base their systems of money not upon theories which exclude practical facts, but upon theories which recognize them. They must be prepared to receive and utilize large supplies of specie from countries suspending specie payments, in order to counterbalance the losses they sustain when they are obliged to suspend specie payments themselves. They must be prepared to respond to sudden and great demands for specie from countries returning to specie payments, in order that by their profits from this source they may make good their losses upon the specie they may be at some other time obliged to purchase in order to return to specie payments themselves

The United States suspended specie payments in 1861, and disposed of all that portion of its stock of specie, amounting to over $100,000,000, which consisted of silver, besides more or less of its gold. Other countries, as Austria and Italy, also suspended some years afterward, and their silver stock was thrown upon the markets of the world, causing more or less perturbation in the purchasing power and relative value of the precious metals.
